Exploiting the Shoestring

There was a freshet in a lumbering section and the village schemer watched the stray logs go past, with no one to claim them.

"Say, boys," he cried to the bunch who were helping him watch, "here's where I let you in on a good thing. You hustle out and grab that loose lumber and sell it, and I'll give each fellow half of what he sells his pile for."

It is an old yarn and you've wondered, lots of times, what kind of fellows they were, to do all the work, take all the risk and then divide up with the schemer.

If you are still curious, you can find out by watching the advertising game, for this same old scheme is being played every day of the 365 that it takes to make up the ordinary kind of year.

Sometimes a concern has an idea and not much cash.

If they can induce a publisher to give them a long credit and the idea makes good, they figure that they can afford to pay the advertising bill—if not, well they might as well bust for a few more dollars—it won't cost THEM anything either way.

And the publisher who figures that he might as well take chances on getting his money, some time, as pay the printer to fill up the space with news, is like the log rollers who gave up half their earnings.

Just what happens to him in the long run is his funeral, not yours, so we won't dwell upon it.

But what DOES concern you, as an advertiser, is that the fellow who uses a publisher as his banker is usually pretty liberal with the use of his advertising space and, until the publisher gets tired and crosses him off the complimentary list, makes his cash-paying competitor look like a piker or a second rate concern when the innocent reader compares the generous dimensions of the indefinite credit announcement with that of the advertiser who has negotiated for space with the intention of taking his cash discounts.

Right here it seems is a good place to mention that The MOVING PICTURE WORLD does not carry anyone on long time credit speculation or for any reasons except that the advertising is paying the advertiser and that the advertiser is paying us.

A big picture that will make a big and generous profit for you because it is released on the Universal Program at a REASONABLE RENTAL. It is the type and class of feature production for which the average feature producer would DEMAND so much money that, although the picture would pack your house at every performance, YOU COULDN'T MAKE A CENT OF PROFIT.

Lulu Glaser has charmed millions with her fascinating personality, in such great Broadway successes as "Dolly Varden," "Mlle. Mischief," "The Prima Donna," "Madcap Princess," "One of the Boys," "The Girl and the Kaiser," "Miss Dolly Dollars," and a host of others. Lulu Glaser is even more charming and lovable in this fascinating play, "Love's Pilgrimage to America," than she appeared on the speaking stage. She will delight your patrons and make them talk of the picture and of your theatre. The UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY

Read This Carefully

Maybe you've read in trade paper ads of how certain news weeklies had PUT OVER scoops. List, gentle sir, to the truth in the matter. The Universal Animated Weekly had the World's Baseball Series—first. The big Auto Races at the new Astor Track at Sheepshead Bay; the Harvard-Princeton and Yale-Harvard football games—The Universal Animated Weekly secured the FIRST animated pictures of the FORD PEACE SHIP, "OSCAR II," leaving the Docks and the ONLY MOVING PICTURES taken of the FORD PEACE PARTY OUT AT SEA. The Universal Animated Weekly was the only news Weekly that showed the American Troops attacking the Native troops in Hayti, and was FIRST to show THE NEW YORK SUBWAY DISASTER PICTURES.

The HUGE WORLD WIDE STAFF of News Picture Reporters on the Universal Animated Weekly are always FIRST with the NEWS OF THE WORLD IN ANIMATED PICTURES. And the BIG POINT IS THIS: THE UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY PREFERS to show results ON THE SCREEN (which means bigger box office receipts to Exhibitors) than to shoot a lot of hot air and Broadway press bunk in the Trade Papers.

BIG TYPE—EXPLOSIVE PHRASES—BIG CLAIMS—and Broadway press agents' bull HAVE NO PLACE in the production and distribution of the Universal Animated Weekly. To protect our own interests and to reveal the TRUTH to Exhibitors is the reason for this advertisement. IT IS A KNOWN FACT among Manufacturers of News Weeklies that THE ONLY WEEKLY that they fear is the UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY, which is sold ABSOLUTELY AND ENTIRELY ON ITS MERITS. Draw your own conclusions, and remember, that the UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY is shown first at the STRAND, New York's foremost Moving Picture Theatre on Broadway. The UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY is the BIG PUNCH every week in thousands of live Theatres. Book it for the BEST news of the world's doings and the FIRST EDITIONS OF IT. CONSULT your nearest Universal Exchange. Note our new address.

MUTUAL MAS

DE LUXE

AND now we announce greater expansion in Mutual film activities. Beginning the week of January 17th, 1916, the Mutual Film Corporation will present a new and startling schedule of feature productions to be known as "Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition." THREE of these productions will be released EVERY WEEK—each in five reels. They will feature many famous Broadway stage stars and screen favorites. They will be features of an extraordinary character—picturizations of famous books, plays, and powerful, original scenarios by noted authors. These three-a-week "Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition," will be released in addition to the regular $8,000,000 Mutual Program. The Mutual Program will also be expanded by the release of three three-reel features every week, instead of two, and the addition of VOGUE COMEDIES featuring England's greatest knockabout comedian. With the vast assortment of scenic, topical and comic specialties in the Mutual Program, exhibitors will find in "Mutual Service" a wonderful opportunity for a well-balanced program of strong box-office attractions. A few of the forthcoming five-reel "Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition," are:

-distinctive!

ERPICTURES EDITION

"SILAS MARNER," from George Eliot's famous book—featuring Frederic Warde, Broadway's distinguished Shakespearian actor. (Thanhouser)

"THE OTHER SIDE OF THE DOOR," from the popular novel by Lucia Chamberlain—featuring Harold Lockwood. (American)

"THE IDOL OF THE STAGE"—featuring the Broadway favorite, Malcolm Williams. (Gaumont)

"VENGEANCE IS MINE!"—featuring Crane Wilbur. (Horsley)

"AS A WOMAN SOWS"—featuring Gertrude Robinson. (Gaumont)

"THE BAIT"—featuring William Clifford. (Horsley).

"THE FIVE FAULTS OF FLO"—featuring Florence LaBadie. (Thanhouser)

"LORD LOVELAND DISCOVERS AMERICA"—featuring the Broadway stars, Arthur Maude and Constance Crawley. (American)

EXHIBITORS: WIRE! We are now contracting with leading theatres throughout America for this new Mutual service. The three-a-week "Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition," may be booked individually or collectively. If you are seeking an exceptional five-reel feature service, as well as a program of remarkable specialties, wire us immediately for full details of this new policy or write for the latest copy of "Reel Life," containing complete information.

Announcement

Animal pictures such as David Horsley is producing with the wonderful Bostock animals have never before been seen upon the screen.

During the last three months these Centaur Features have established a new standard in animal subjects. They have placed animal pictures on an exalted plane and astonished the trade by the exhibition of feats and effects that no one has ever before deemed possible.

The old style animal picture with its constant repetition of "stunts" is rapidly losing its vogue. The public is growing wise to the difference.

On the other hand, the demand has become so great for the "advanced" animal dramas and comedy-dramas of the Centaur class that, commencing in January, a five-reel feature will be released every third week. These remarkable pictures, with their undeniable appeal to all ages and all classes of people, will be known as Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition. They will offer a startling array of talent.

Roy L. McCardell, the premier scenario writer of America, author of "The Diamond from the Sky" and a thousand other successes, has been engaged to furnish new and original stories.

Margaret Gibson, youthful, beautiful and talented, and Irving Cummings, a film star of international popularity, will be two of several featured players.

The Bostock Animals, famous in every part of the world—educated to a point almost beyond belief—will continue to amaze, thrill and instruct.

Captain Jack Bonavita, foremost animal trainer-director, and the original European Bostock trainers are in direct charge of the quadruped actors.

Wm. J. Bowman and U. S. Davis are the noted directors in charge of productions.

CRANE WILBUR

the eminent screen star, will be seen in a five reel Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe edition, every four weeks, commencing with "Vengeance is Mine" on January 26. Mr. Wilbur is assisted by selected actors who have won recognition through motion picture acting. The plays in which Mr. Wilbur appears are strong dramatic and romantic vehicles written especially for him by authors of note.

GEORGE OVEY

the funniest man in America, will appear as usual in the weekly one reel Cub Comedies—the best comedy buy on the market.

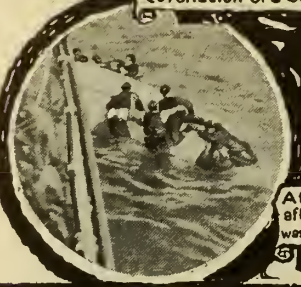
Birds-eye Hearst — NEWS

Here is a graphic representation of the news gatherin plant of Hearst-Vitagraph News Pictorial.

This successor to Hearst-Selig ought to be the suprem news reel because it has at its disposal the tremendou Hearst photographic camera staff.

Coronation of a Japanese Emperor



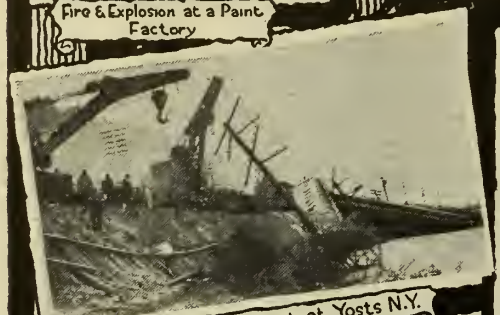
A few minutes after "Faleba" was torpedoed

Fire & Explosion at a Paint Factory

Siberian Comitages charging Austrian trench

U.S.S. Missouri Panama Canal

Captain Scott and party arriving at Amundsen's tent.



N.Y. Central Wreck at Yosts N.Y.

GROUPED about this panel are a handful of "scoops" selected from the hundreds achieved during 1915 by the International Film Service.

This assortment gives you an idea of the variety of exclusive pictures made by Hearst's International Film Service.

Realize, if you can, what it means now that this same organization turns its best into the Hearst-Vitagraph.

S.S. Eastland disaster in Chicago River

Arrest of Assassin of Archduke Fernand. Austria

Sinking of German Cruiser "Bluecher"

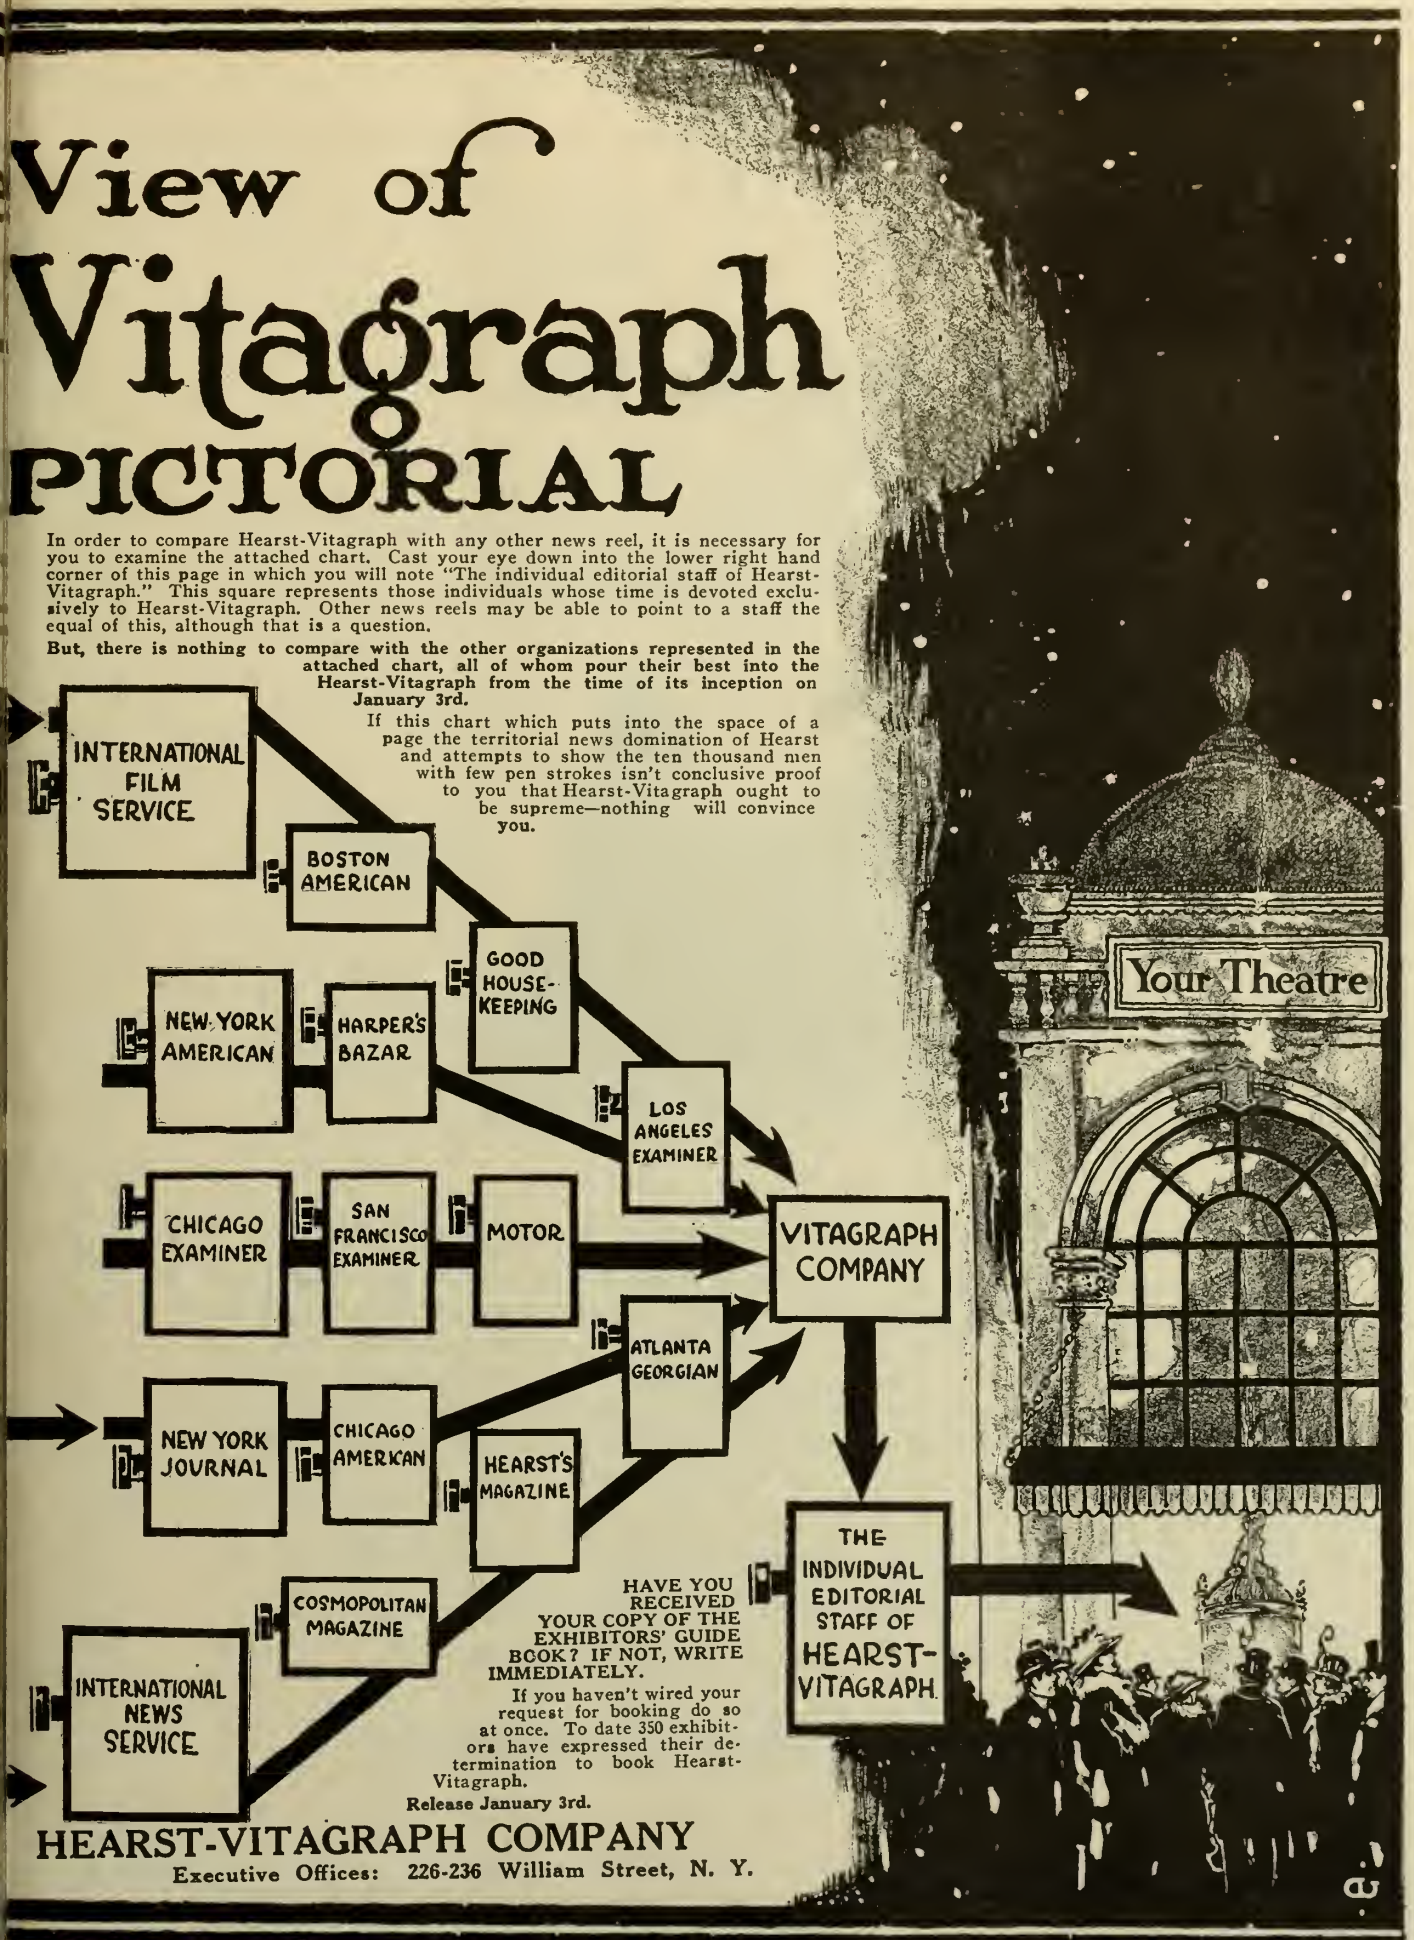
Dayton Flood

View of Vitagraph PICTORIAL

In order to compare Hearst-Vitagraph with any other news reel, it is necessary for you to examine the attached chart. Cast your eye down into the lower right hand corner of this page in which you will note "The individual editorial staff of Hearst-Vitagraph." This square represents those individuals whose time is devoted exclusively to Hearst-Vitagraph. Other news reels may be able to point to a staff the equal of this, although that is a question.

But, there is nothing to compare with the other organizations represented in the attached chart, all of whom pour their best into the Hearst-Vitagraph from the time of its inception on January 3rd.

If this chart which puts into the space of a page the territorial news domination of Hearst and attempts to show the ten thousand men with few pen strokes isn't conclusive proof to you that Hearst-Vitagraph ought to be supreme—nothing will convince you.



HAVE YOU RECEIVED YOUR COPY OF THE EXHIBITORS' GUIDE BOOK? IF NOT, WRITE IMMEDIATELY.

If you haven't wired your request for booking do so at once. To date 350 exhibitors have expressed their determination to book Hearst-Vitagraph.

Vim Releases are the Cream of Comedy Output

The proof of this lies in the fact that, although not yet two months old, Vim has risen to the very top of popularity and has been receiving the highest of compliments from exhibitors in all parts of the country. They realize that Vim productions mean: Comedies by comedy specialists; slapsticks with plot, clean and refreshing; the best of talent; the guiding hand of experienced producers.

Now on Open Booking.

After December 20th, you, Mr. Exhibitor, can go to your General Film Exchange and demand that they book you Vim Comedies. You can pick your own program and will not be forced to run any film the booker arbitrarily gives you.

Vim Comedies are now yours for the asking. Under the new Open Booking plan, all you have to do is to ask for "Vim" at the nearest General Film Exchange and it will be booked to you.

If, by any chance, your exchange has such a demand for Vim Comedies that they find it difficult to supply you with these releases, we would appreciate being informed of the fact so that we may make arrangements to furnish your exchange with additional prints.

Important Announcement

The new policy of the General Film Company provides for an Open Booking Plan which goes into effect December 20, 1915.

M-in-A Comedies take this occasion to announce that on and after that date, exhibitors may obtain these releases from their nearest G. F. Exchange upon requesting same. In other words, M-in-A Comedies are now on the open market and you can book as many of them as you choose whenever you choose.

If, at any time, your exchange, for any reason, cannot furnish you with our release, we would deem it a favor to be informed of the fact.

Carlton King and

"THE MATCHMAKERS"

In a genuine feast of fun, in three acts of comedy drama

'Tis that theme always rich for good laughs when done well—two who would be married by designing money seekers, but two who would, instead, love their own way.

Sally Crute is given a real chance to "let out" all of her characteristic fun making ability, not to speak of her seizure, in her own speaking way, of the dramatic in this cleverly plotted drama, by William Addison Lathrop. Then, for the fun of it, too, there are the comedians, William Wadsworth and Carlton King, doing their best. Others cast are Margaret Prussing, Paul Bliss, Robert Brower, Mrs. Erskine, and Leonora von Ottinger.

Director George Ridgwell makes this comedy-drama funnier still. "The Matchmakers" is the kind of a feature that will be heartily welcomed by a play-going public already wearied of too many serious and heavy dramas. Friday, December 31st. 3000 feet.

STINGAREE

The Series of Twelve Two-Act Episodes from the Novel

By E. W. Hornung

Creator of "Raffles"

He'll tell you:

Cameraphone Theater, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Kalem Company: Allow me to congratulate you on the first episode of "Stingaree." I played it Friday, the 26th, in our theater to about seven thousand people, and can truthfully say that seventy per cent of my audience went away praising it.

I am quite sure you will meet with great success in this series, as the acting, the staging and the scenery are superb. I might add that our house is known for Kalem productions.

Yours very truly, IRA ARONSON, General Manager.

"The Honor of the Road," one of the strongest of the Hornung stories, is the next release of the series. Released Wednesday, January 5. One, three and six-sheet four-color lithographs with each episode.

CROSSED CLUES

An Episode of "The Ventures of Marguerite"

Stirring scenes on speed motor boats and fast sloops are mingled with this strong story of international intrigue. Surcharged with action.

Released Friday, January 7th. Attractive 1, 3 and 6-sheet 4-color lithographs.

WHEN SECONDS COUNT

An Episode in the "Hazards of Helen"

Dauntless Helen, bound to a handcar, rides under a speeding train tearing by on another track. A feat that can't be described—you must see it.

Released Saturday, January 8th. There's action on the 1 and 3 sheet, 4-color lithographs.

THE MISSING MUMMY

Bud and his pal get a job guarding a priceless Egyptian mummy. When the mummy is stolen under their eyes it is decided that Bud must impersonate the mummy to save their jobs. The rip-roaring fun reaches a climax when the professor, to prove that the mummy is real starts driving spikes into Bud.

Released Tuesday, January 4th. Posters of the Katchy Kalem Kind in 1 and 3-sheet, 4-color lithographs

Facts and Comments

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD is about to issue its Spanish edition called "CINE-MUNDIAL." In another part of the paper the reader will find a summary of the plans and purposes of this new publication. The printing of this Spanish edition is an extension into wider fields of our policy of service to the industry. Closer relations between the two great races that inhabit the New World will result in mutual benefit we hope. It will bring the two papers nearer to each other and create a feeling of mutual tolerance and sympathy. This is one of the highest missions of the motion picture, and its benefits to humanity at large can hardly be exaggerated. The spirit of Pan-Americanism is the spirit of the modern world, the spirit of Democracy and Self-Reliance. The screen will do much to promote the spirit of Pan-Americanism. "CINE-MUNDIAL" will try to do its share.

WILL our esteemed contemporaries conducting a motion picture department please discontinue the word "pose" in connection with the work of the men and women who act before the camera? Some day we will get the proper terms, and throwing "pose" into the discard is a good beginning. By the way, all these moving picture sections have improved in the last twelve months, but the educational campaign must be kept up.

THIS week's issue of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD makes its own comment. Some publishers might be tempted to refer to such a number as a "special" and then go into raptures of self-admiration. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD puts its very best efforts into every issue and therefore knows no distinction between the ordinary and the special edition. We are never satisfied with ourselves unless we feel that every one of our issues is a special number. Publishing a complete motion picture journal covering every inch of the field and rendering special service besides requires the best and the most expensive staff and keeps us going at full speed from the first of January to the thirty-first of December.

IN FRANCE the tax collector stands in the box office of the motion picture theater and takes the toll of the law before the exhibitor gets a centime. In some towns in the South it seems the local authorities are anxious to imitate the French example. Special licenses were ordered for motion picture exhibitors who raised their price of admission to more than ten cents.

HOW many exhibitors look at their program before they see it displayed on the screen? How many exhibitors see their own program completely? There are exhibitors who are as jealous of their screen as a conscientious and ambitious publisher is of his newspaper, but there are others who seem to take a sort of foolish pride in saying: "Why I hardly ever look at my pictures." We think that no exhibitor fully discharges his responsibility to the audience unless he knows what his program really looks like.

THERE is talk of standardizing posters. Many things in the industry need standardization more or less urgently, but posters are entitled to first place on the calendar. There are signs that the poster evil has abated somewhat. Indeed, if there had not been some change for the better the harm done by the lurid poster might have wrought incalculable injury to the whole industry. In some neighborhoods we are told "the flash" is necessary. Perhaps this is so, but we doubt it very seriously. The gravest objection to the poster is its portrayal of crime and its frequent appeal to the basest instincts in man. There is another objection, however, which ought to weigh with even those exhibitors who are quite indifferent to all ethical considerations. We are speaking of "the flash" as an aid to the booking agent. We still hear booking agents and exhibitors say they care more for "the paper" than for the pictures. Such a statement no friend of the screen can hear without indignation and resentment. Nothing encourages mediocre and unscrupulous producers more than such an attitude on the part of the exhibitor. Such a sentiment is born in ignorance and is a menace to the industry.

Be Modern*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

NIETZSCHE acknowledges with pain that artists of all ages have often exalted and divinely transfigured those ideas which we now recognize as false. "The world's greatest follies," says Dr. George M. Beard, "have always found defense from justly honored authority." "It is very difficult," says Carpenter, "for man to free himself from beliefs and habits of thought taught him during the dawn of intelligence." Are we justified in utilizing this New Art to resurrect the ideals of other days and glorify them irrespective of the truth they contain?

Moliere ridiculed what was false in his generation; Ibsen thundered indictments against social decadence of his time and place; Hauptmann, who revolutionized the German Drama, was a battle cry against the wrong and injustice of his hour; and the tremendous success of Tolstoy, Hugo, Dumas, and even Shaw, our greatest living dramatist, points the strength of Ibsen's statement to the Norwegian government, "The experience of all countries has sufficiently established the fact that dramatic art, in every age in which it has been cultivated, has, in a higher degree than any other, shown itself an important factor in the education of the people."

Farce is usually excluded from the idea of giving some significance to the acted story, but the brightest screen farces of today seem to have a touch of Moliere in them, an underlying meaning which has an effect, though not a powerful one, yet the farce may be made a sharp weapon because of its accessibility to the comprehension of the whole people. It may easily participate in the modern tendencies of artistic representation on stage and screen.

Go REGULARLY to any popular theater where a good selection of features is being shown, and go with an open mind. Watch the audience as well as the screen. Observe the spontaneous applause given, whether the subject is either entertaining or educational, when it is VITAL. Among the ancient dogmas still preached by the unprogressive is that the performance must only make an effort to please. The trouble with the application of that old rule to the modern representation is that the effort becomes too obvious. Then very few of us are butterflies. Many of us are trying to live for some purpose, and, if that is life, the purposeless drama is not of life.

What a difference between a shopkeeper who becomes tiresome in his efforts to please a customer and one who gives something worth while for the expenditure! A story may be delightful, fascinating, absorbing, and have a highly magnified value in its two-fold appeal. "Fine art," says Bernard Shaw, "is the subtlest, the MOST SEDUCTIVE, the most effective means of moral propagandism in the world."

In the midst of the present European upheaval, the most significant our little planet has ever known, thinking men of all intelligent nations are wondering if our social fabric and our political organizations are not dawdling along, merely vegetating, instead of making headway toward superior enlightenment. At no time should this beautiful New Art be a guilty associate in national decadence, and never will its opportunities be bigger and brighter for inspiration and edification. It has opened the doors of a splendid domain to the finest efforts we can make for the diffusion of truth as it is now revealed to us, not for the reiteration of ideas and ideals we know to be false.

Is it good business policy for a producer to disclaim any responsibility in a society of which he is a part? If there is wrong being done to the common people, and they are the largest frequenters of the picture shows, should that wrong be fostered by gilding our social defects? Is it fair to those whose dimes and nickels keep the whole business going that they should be fed with false conceptions How can any producer who works injury to millions upon millions of minds groping for the truth justify his act by saying that he is giving the people what they want?

Our greatest weakness at this moment is a lack of craftsmen who are up to date. "There is requisite," says Brunetiere cnncerning a sister medium of expression, "simply more talent and greater art. Whoever has the very high ambition of treating social questions in the theater or in the novel need only bring to it, with entire control of the materials of his craft, a personal experience, a CAREFULLY REASONED experience, of life." Are such men to be encouraged in the New Art, or shall we choke up its portals with a lot of discards from older arts and the provincial views of a lot of men who have nothing new to offer?

All the sweet old stories have been done to the verge of nausea on the screen. We have had them over and over again. Do we deserve this monotony, or does our cordial support of the New Art deserve something new, vigorous and refreshing on the program, if only to give it variety? Timid critics may be classic in predilection —they try to keep on safe grounds—but the people are not. They welcome with delight whatever supports and gratifies their sympathies for the progressive.

DOES IT PAY? Do returns justify a producer in devoting his publicity and distributive resources to the play of modern theme? It is obviously impossible to publish here any supporting facts, but they have been secured from one of the largest and best established concerns in America, and they can be supplied if necessary. Not only have the modern plays, given an even chance with those of other days, proved to be the most profitable, but the leader of them all, probably one of the most profitable screen representations ever marketed, is so thoroughly modern that its purpose is openly educational.

There is a story in this best seller, but it is designedly made subordinate to the instruction afforded and to the prophecy attempted. It has won from the outset because it is a magnificent equation of truth. It does not violate the fundamental principles of life as we begin to realize them; it expresses the spiritual meaning of this epoch; it stirs to new action what has gradually been gathering in the minds of our people. After running the gantlet of some indiscriminate criticism, it soon began to prove its own case on merit alone.

Look back to the dark centuries when man did little more than nourish himself, propagate and rot and trace his slow growth. What has lighted his wandering path but knowledge gained by a few bright minds? That knowledge is increasing, and it is being more widely diffused. Nothing can prevent that growth, but it can be hampered by those who refuse to give the people what they need, what increases their value to themselves and to the world.

Exhibitors in New Move

Biggest Theater Owners Organize for New Deal with Producers—National Theater Owners' Association Wants the Right to Accept or Reject Pictures—Have Secured Enough Producers to Make Their Scheme Feasible—Will Enable Small Exhibitors to Participate in Benefits.

By W. Stephen Bush.

As a result of considerable preliminary work largely carried on by correspondence, about twenty exhibitors, owners of most of the large motion picture theaters in the United States, met in conference at the Hotel Astor on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of last week. Among the leaders at the conference were Mitchell Mark of the Strand theater, New York; Adolph Linick, of Jones, Linick and Schaefer, Chicago; Thomas Saxe, of Milwaukee, Wis.; J. H. Kunsky of Detroit, Stanley Mastbaum of Philadelphia, L. J. Dittmar of Louisville, Ky.; E. Mandelbaum of Cleveland; Nathan H. Gordon of Boston, and William Sievers of St. Louis.

The object of the meeting was to unite the biggest moving picture theater owners in an organization for the purpose of protecting their interests in all dealings with motion picture producers.

A Temporary Organization Is Effected.

When the last meeting adjourned on Saturday morning a temporary organization had been created. The name of the new organization is to be for the present at least the National Theater Owners' Association. Articles of incorporation were drawn up by the attorneys of the organization. The attorneys are Ex-Congressman Bennet and Elmer E. Cooley of 60 Wall street. At an election held at the last session the following officers were chosen:

President, Mitchell Mark; vice-president, J. H. Kunsky; treasurer, Nathan H. Gordon; secretary, William Sievers.

The articles of incorporation state that the National Theater Owners' Association has for its object "to advance in every possible way the interests of owners of theaters, exhibiting motion pictures, to acquire and deal in motion picture films, plays, copyrights, supplies, to supply motion picture films, to employ singers, musicians and artists." The act of incorporation was effected under the law regulating business corporations in the State of New York. The authorized capital stock is $400,000, all common stock, at $100 a share.

The membership of the organization, for the present at least, is confined to twenty owners of substantial interests in the exhibiting profession. In addition to the men whose names have been mentioned there were present about a dozen other prominent and substantial exhibitors from various parts of the country. Their names will be published later as soon as every detail in the working policy of the new organization has been perfected.

A Full Statement of the Scope and the Purposes of the Corporation.

One of the moving spirits in the new organization spoke quite freely on the origin, the objects and the ultimate aims of the National Theater Owners' Association. He asked to have his name withheld as he felt that he was speaking in a representative capacity rather than as an individual.

"While we have not invited the press to attend our meetings I want to say that we have nothing to hide. We believe that we have started a movement of national importance and that we have taken the first step toward solving a problem which constituted a grave menace to the exhibitor and which eventually would have done immeasurable harm to the industry. No one knows better than you what the grievances of the exhibitors have been, especially within the last twelve months or so. All the terrible waste in production and all the costs of experiments on the part of manufacturers have been saddled upon us. We were the ones who had to foot the bill of the over-paid star, and the wasteful and incompetent director. We had no voice whatever in the choice of subjects for features, although we were expected to make the features pay. If a feature proved a failure we were the ones who suffered through loss of patronage. We simply had to take what was given us and make the best of it. All the time we felt that we were in a far better position than the manufacturers to know what the public wanted and we knew by painful and costly experience the things the public did not want. We have therefore decided in a spirit of helpfulness and with no desire to dictate to the manufacturer, to aid in the production of successful films and to prevent as far as possible the making of pictures which we feel will be a detriment to us all.

Manufacturers Have Agreed to Accept New Plan.

"I cannot tell you at this time with what manufacturers our arrangements have been made. The fact will become known soon enough. I have no objection, however, to telling you the terms upon which the National Theater Owners' Association will hereafter do business with the manufacturers. We have appointed a committee which will hereafter pass upon all pictures offered to us. This committee will make a report on the feature submitted for our consideration and this report will be acted on by the majority of the members. If the picture is satisfactory to us we will immediately pay the manufacturer the entire cost of the negative and a 10 per cent. advance on the future earnings of the film. Upon these terms we have made permanent arrangements with enough manufacturers to secure an ample supply of features. After the feature has paid us for our advance to the producer we will allow him 40 per cent. on all net earnings of his firm.

Small Exhibitor to Be Benefited and Protected.

"Every member of the corporation represents one of twenty zones into which the country has been divided for the purpose of distributing our pictures. We expect that these twenty zones will handle about 30 prints of all pictures accepted by us. The assignment of territory has been liberal enough to enable the exhibitor who uses the films after us to earn a fair profit. The film will come to the small exhibitor in our respective territories with an assured prestige of success, based on a good run in the largest and best known theaters in his territory. We will make a contract with the small exhibitor which will positively protect him against the dangers of unfair competition. If he handles our films no one will be able to get the contract away from him by making a higher bid. In selecting the pictures our committee will consider possible or probable objections from censor boards. If the producer starts on a picture the subject of which we approve of in advance, his chances of getting the picture accepted by our committee are excellent.

Not Merely a New Distributing Proposition.

"If this was merely a question of a new distributing scheme, we would never have bothered with it. We are aiming in a new direction. We believe that if our movement had been started some time ago, it would have prevented a lot of waste and over-production. We do not want to go into the supply business, although our charter would authorize us to do so. The clause about singers and artists was inserted to enable us to create a profitable circuit for high class singers. We can keep the best talent busy for the whole season and maybe for a term of years, once our circuit is firmly established. None but owners with large interests and complete financial responsibility will be admitted into this corporation. We are not absolutely bound to any single manufacturer and under our by-laws we will be able to go into the open market and deal with any reputable manufacturer. Special arrangements will be made for extraordinary features, or, as I would call them, pictures de luxe, exceeding five or six reels in length. Our great watchword will be: Quality."

Who are the Manufacturers?

None of the organizers of the new corporation would commit themselves as to the names of the manufacturers with whom arrangements have been made. From reliable sources it was learned that manufacturers now belonging to various groups have entered into agreements with the National Theater Owners' Association. It was rumored that one of the prominent men in the old licensed group is cooperating with the new organization. It is said that this man will put himself at the head of a group of producers who will work on the terms of the National Theater Owners' Association. Another rumor was to the effect that a producer whose success is of recent origin, will deal with the new organization on their own terms.

Here is "Cine-Mundial"

Birth of the Spanish Edition of the Moving Picture World—The Event an Epoch in American Motion Picture History—Aims and Scope of the New Publication Which Will Be Issued Once a Month—Facts, Figures and Conclusions—Cine-Mundial's a Bureau of Information and a Means for Propaganda.

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE Spanish edition of the Moving Picture World marks an epoch in American motion picture history. We hope to lay the cornerstone of the biggest motion picture clearing house the world has ever seen. We thoroughly appreciate the vastness of our undertaking. We are fully aware of the many special difficulties we will have to overcome.

Laying a Cornerstone.

The present main purpose of a Spanish edition must be the starting of a campaign of education. Before any good at all can be accomplished, before the South American market is brought even an inch nearer to the orbit of the American producer, a lot of rubbish will have to be cleared away from the place where we want to lay the cornerstone. This rubbish consists of ignorance and of prejudice and of a lot of foolish notions. Education and enlightenment are needed on both sides of the Isthmus that was and the Great Canal that is. The piercing of the Isthmus needs to be followed up by a closer "rapprochement" between the Latin and the Saxon races inhabiting this hemisphere. We believe that the motion picture is capable of rendering great service to this cause. We hope and believe that the "CINE-MUNDIAL," which is the Spanish edition of the Moving Picture World, will contribute its goodly share.

Fundamental Differences.

This is our program: We will try to understand and to respect the national genius of the countries where we are seeking our circulation. The same task confronts the American producer who wants to trade with the nations which Cine-Mundial will reach. Let us all bear in mind the fundamental differences between the Saxon and the Latin races. Our tastes are different, our social usages are different, our ideals and our philosophy of life are different, our histories and traditions are different, our language and our literature are different. Naturally their motion pictures are not always our motion pictures.

Statesmanship Ahead of Business.

Our trade relations with South America must be built upon the constant and intelligent recognition of this fact. We have had statesmen who sought to foster better commercial relations with our Latin sister republics. The Pan-American idea filled the mind of James G. Blaine and had spurred the zeal of McKinley. American statesmanship was at least a generation ahead of American business. Washington pointed the way and sought to smooth the road, but business lagged and lingered lamentably. American export to South America has been a sickly and exotic affair, and it was and is nobody's fault but our own. A brief glance at the errors we have made cannot be amiss here.

Why We Have Failed So Far.

We never have tried to cater to the South American. We proceeded largely on the theory that whatever was good enough for us was bound to be plenty good enough for the South American. We felt somewhat annoyed at the persistence of the South American in using Spanish. When we sent a man down into Brazil or Argentine, we rather preferred someone who was innocent of any knowledge of Portuguese or Spanish. We also took it for granted that the South American would be glad to take anything that we chose to offer. While we were proceeding in this highly original and diverting manner, our French and our German and our Italian and even our British rivals were busy finding out what the South American wanted. When they did find out, they lost no time in supplying the demand. Well, the thing worked out in just the way any horse-sense philosopher or plain prophet might have expected. South America was supplied with its films by way of London and Paris and Barcelona. Our own country, the greatest film-producing center of the world, was hardly heard of. Once in a while some broker would advertise for "cold copies" to be dumped upon the South American market. Thus grew up a belief in New York and Chicago that South America was nothing but an absorber of the film junk and the film garbage of the world.

This belief turned out to be a most harmful superstition. The slightest investigation made it plain that South America was capable of consuming all grades of films, the best included. We made such an investigation about a year ago, and with the aid of some South American friends we discovered the following facts and arrived at the following conclusions:

Facts, Figures and Conclusions.

There are close to six thousand motion picture theaters in Latin-America. (The estimated population of Latin-America is 75,000,000.) The South American is a devoted lover of motion pictures. The fascination is upon him just as much as it is upon us, and perhaps a little more so. The great cities of South America such as Rio de Janeiro and Buenos Aires and Montevideo and Santiago and Valparaiso have the highest types of motion picture houses, equal in point of equipment and conduct to the best of Europe and to the best in our own country. At present perhaps fifteen per cent. of the films used are of American origin. Efforts to invade the market from the north had been sporadic, ill organized and therefore futile. Strong combinations which we would call independent exchanges held a dominant position and in Chile and Brazil controlled perhaps seventy per cent. of the business. The combination bought next to nothing in the American market. It was in turn influenced and at times controlled by leading European producers. In South America the film always travels with the machine. The combinations heretofore spoken of will withdraw its machines unless the exhibitor uses the films of the combination. Here are some facts and figures that are worth noting: Chile during the year 1914 imported from Europe $52,331 worth of motion picture machines, while we furnished for the same period—$1,980.

The Argentine statistics show an importation in films alone from Europe of $144,775, against $4,970 from the United States, while in moving picture machines the figures are $17,562 from Europe and $6,786 from this country.

Peru imported in machines, films and other supplies over $100,000, out of which the United States furnished $25,000.

Brazil imported but $6,570 in films from the United States, with a total importation of $70,000.

There are a dozen or more cities with a population of over a hundred thousand inhabitants. There are very few pioneers down there now, one of the foremost being a well-known manufacturing company which is rendering yeoman service to the whole industry by hewing a path for its own films through the rocky trenches of the enemy.

An Interesting Test and Its Results.

What impressed us was a test we made of the percentage of American-made films available for the South American market. We had a number of South Americans with no affiliation with any film interests go to various theaters in this city and watch the programs. They reported that something like fifty per cent. of what they had seen was absolutely suited to South American tastes. They were strong in their conviction that almost all the comedies would go and they picked out dramas of a lively nature with a strong love theme. Historic plays and costume plays, and features of a deeply serious character were also commended. Good scenic and industrial pictures will likewise have a ready market. The next step must be taken by the producers. They have a strong organization, quite capable of dealing with the practical aspects of the situation. I understand that steps are being taken for the proper co-operation of our leading producers in all Latin-American countries.

The Cine-Mundial a Bureau of Information.

In grappling with the South American problem no single influence will be as great and as useful as the Cine-Mundial. The Cine-Mundial is the only medium for an exchange of communications; it is the one great bureau of information and propaganda available to every man interested in the promotion of South American trade in films. The reputation of the Moving Picture World is a guarantee for its editorial policy, for its spirit of helpfulness and for its enterprise. The Moving Picture World has a reputation for plain speaking and for truthfulness. The Cine-Mundial starts on its career with more than four thousand readers. We have compiled a list of theater and film men in all of Latin-America, and our first issue, which is now being mailed, will cover every section of Central and of South America, and will reach Spain, Portugal and the Philippines.

A "Close-Up" of Cine-Mundial.

We give you a facsimile of the front cover of the Cine-Mundial and hope you like it. We only wish we could reproduce the whole paper here. It is the first concrete and tangible fact in the coming campaign for the winning of South America. It carries articles by capable South American writers; it prints a history of the American film; it has in Spanish all the features which have made the Moving Picture World the peerless leader of American motion picture journalism, and it contains in addition such information as the South American reader is most likely to be interested in. We will devote much space in the Cine-Mundial to problems of transportation, to the selection of films with special reference to their suitability for South America, and to other kindred topics of practical interest and benefit. The publication will be issued once a month. It is in charge of capable editors who know what their tasks demand of them, and it is under the direct management and supervision of the publishers of the Moving Picture World. The Cine-

Cover Design for the First Edition of the Spanish Edition.

Mundial appeals to the South American and Spanish reader in the right sort of way. One of the editors is Dr. F. G. Ortega, a trained journalist of many years' standing. He has had considerable export experience and has been in the diplomatic service as attache of the Cuban legation in London. In Cuba he was in the theatrical and moving picture business and has traveled through most of the Latin-American countries in connection with theatrical enterprises. He is the right man to deliver our trade message in the tactful and effective way which the South American demands. Dr. Ortega is an accomplished Spanish scholar and is thoroughly conversant with English.

Associated with Dr. Ortega is L. H. Allen, an American who has spent sixteen years in Latin-American countries. He has been actively engaged in exhibiting and distributing films in Latin-America. He is familiar with the tastes of the readers of South America and knows conditions intimately.

Our Appeal to South American Exhibitors.

To give our readers an idea of the tone and the policy of Cine-Mundial, we quote from the introductory message to our Spanish-speaking clientele:

In sending forth this publication we dedicate it to the genius of the Latin-American race. The tastes and the traditions and the customs of our Latin fellow-Americans we wish to respect at all times. We ask and hope to deserve a hospitable reception.

The American motion picture has found countless friends in Latin Europe. Whether such success is due to the element of variety or to the quaint and explosive American humor or to the intimate views of an interesting country bubbling over with vitality, we need not analyze here. The fact of the popularity of the American picture in Latin Europe is cited because of its significance and because it seems to augur a like friendly reception in Latin America.

We look upon the moving picture as one of the most important factors in our modern civilization. For eight years we have devoted ourselves to the uplift and to the material advancement of the motion picture in the two great English-speaking countries on this side of the water. For that period of time we have been publishing The Moving Picture World.

It is now our sincere hope and it shall be our earnest endeavor to render to the moving picture industry of South America the same loyal and constant services that our readers and subscribers have received here in the north. The same desire to be useful to the three great branches of the industry, that is to say, to the producer, to the distributer and the exhibitor, shall be our sole purpose. We have endeavored to put into this first issue as large and as accurate a budget of information for South America moving picture men as circumstances have allowed. We expect to make the publication more complete and more useful with every new issue. We courteously invite inquiries from our esteemed readers and will be pleased to answer them as quickly and as fully as possible. Everything contained in this first issue of the publication has been gathered together with special reference to the needs and to the benefit of the South American moving picture men. We will be extremely glad to receive suggestions from our readers and wish to assure them of our gratitude for any interest which they will be pleased to take in the publication.

This declaration of principles is worth printing here. Cine-Mundial says:

"Cine-Mundial stands for the American picture—its progress, its improvement and its greater distribution on the American continent. Cine-Mundial is allied to no particular faction in the business. It is neither controlled nor dictated to by any of the American interests. We desire to bring to the exhibitor and buyer of Latin-America the best, the most artistic, the most modern in the picture art emanating from the land of the north."

The Psychological Moment.

To sum up: Not a foot of motion picture film is produced in South America. The market must be supplied exclusively by importation. The population of Latin-America is greater than that of Germany and as great as that of Italy and France combined. The market is open to all producers on even terms. There is a heavy duty in Brazil and there is a duty in the other countries as well, varying from a nominal to a substantial amount. There is a demand for the best class of films. The high-class film made in America is the best in the world—or, to put it more conservatively, it has the best average of quality. At present the best grade of film is supplied entirely by European producers. This is the best time to reach out for the South American market. Banking facilities are better than ever before; transportation has been vastly improved; the old prejudice against the Yankee is rapidly dying out and to some extent has disappeared even now. The Pan-American spirit, which means financial and economic independence of Europe, is in the air. Our diplomatic relations with the Latin-American countries are excellent. This is the psychological moment, and Cine-Mundial is the ideal medium for building up strong and lasting commercial relations between the center of the film-producing world and a great new market easily capable of absorbing more than half of our film product.

SUPREME COURT UPHOLDS ANTI-PRIZE FIGHT FILM LAW.

A Supreme Court decision has been rendered in the case of L Lawrence Webber and others who sought to have the Willard-Johnson fight films admitted to the United States upon the ground that the act of Congress prohibiting the admission or exhibition of motion pictures of prize fights in this country was unconstitutional. The court decides that the law is constitutional and dismisses the petition of the fight-film promoters.

CORBETT RESIGNS FROM KRITERION.

Bernard M. Corbett, president and general manager of the Kriterion Company of Boston, has resigned from that company. Mr. Corbett is well known to the exhibitors and exchangemen throughout the United States and Canada and will be remembered as special traveling representative for Thomas A. Edison, Inc., the Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co. of Chicago and later with the General Film Company. Mr. Corbett was the founder of the Kriterion Company of Boston, and is an old-timer in the film business, although still young in years. When seen at the headquarters of the Boston movie ball committee at 34 School street, Mr. Corbett said that he had as yet made no plans for the future, except that he intended spending a few days in the Maine woods in company with a party of New England exhibitors. This will be his first vacation from business in ten years.

The Selig-Tribune News Film

Will Be Ready for Initial Release on January 3—Twice-a-Week Service.

ON MONDAY, January 3, the first release of the Selig-Tribune, the bright and breezy twice-a-week news film, will be made. The Selig-Tribune will be released every Monday and Thursday, beginning with Monday, January 3. The affiliation between the Selig Polyscope Company, pioneer manufacturers of motion pictures, and the Chicago Daily Tribune, one of the world's greatest newspapers, is a combination that will be hard to compete with. Together the Selig Company and the Tribune propose to release "the world's greatest news film." In another section of this publication will be found an interesting presentation of the forthcoming merits of the Selig-Tribune. We believe, however, that the exhibitors should have just a little additional information that cannot be fully covered in an advertisement.

The Selig-Tribune will be released every Monday and Thursday through the General Film Company. Every feature in this animated newspaper will be an innovation. An energetic corps of camera men have been stationed in every important section of the civilized world where news is in the making. These camera men, under the direction of "Jack" Wheeler, editor-in-chief of the Selig-Tribune, will risk even life itself in order to obtain the latest world events in picture form for the Selig-Tribune. This corps of camera men are not mere camera men. On the other hand, they are "live wires" who not only possess the necessary technical knowledge, but also possess the essential "nose for news."

The Selig-Tribune will have the advantage in supplanting the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial in the aid of the Chicago Tribune's great news-gathering facilities. For example, the Associated and the United Press are news services without equals in this country. Then the private news wires and the European news gathering agencies will be at the disposal of the Selig-Tribune. The world's most energetic and able correspondents, including John T. McCutcheon, cartoonist, author and war correspondent; James O'Donnell Bennett, Caroline Wilson and others will work in the interests of the Selig-Tribune, bringing their wide experience and versatility to bear in promoting the interest and entertainment of the Selig-Tribune.

Special correspondents and camera men are stationed with every army in Europe, in Mexico, in every city of importance in this and foreign countries, and no time or money will be spared to justify the Selig-Tribune slogan, "First in News and Service."

A special corps of artists has been engaged to prepare unusual posters so necessary to this unusual news film. Motion picture exhibitors will await with interest the initial releases of the Selig-Tribune.

VINCENT SERRANO ENGAGED BY FAMOUS PLAYERS.

For the difficult role of Dr. Gilmore, in its adaptation of Henry Arthur Jones' great dramatic success, "Lydia Gilmore," in which Pauline Frederick is to be starred, the Famous Players Film Company has secured the distinguished actor, Vincent Serrano. Mr. Serrano is one of the few remaining stage notables who has never before appeared on the screen, though for the last two years one of the largest producing companies has been making frequent efforts to induce him to appear in its photoplays.

Though new to filmdom, the name of Vincent Serrano is well known in the theatrical world. Among his achievements is the unique record of having played Lieut. Burton in the celebrated war drama "Arizona" over 1,000 times. He was co-star in "A Little Brother of the Rich," and "On Parole," and was featured in "The Lure" and "The Revolt." He has been associated with many big Broadway sucesses, among them the famous "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots."

REDFIELD JOINS THE BELL CORPORATION.

Frank W. Redfield, late manager of the Fox Film Corporation, Chicago office, is now connected with the W. H. Bell Feature Film Corporation in a similar capacity. Mr. Redfield has been exclusively engaged in the motion picture distribution end of the business continuously for the past fifteen years and over, starting with George K. Spoor, later with the General Film Company and recently with the Fox Film Corporation. The acquisition of Mr. Redfield's services by the Bell Corporation gives the exhibitors in that territory personal attention distributing service and more than ordinary efficiency.

Joseph R. Darling Sails for England

Former "Trust Buster" Will Investigate Film Conditions as European Representative of Fox.

JOSEPH R. DARLING sailed from New York for England on Wednesday, December 8. Mr. Darling is the European representative of the Fox Film Corporation, with which concern he has been connected for some time. Mr. Darling will be remembered as the representative of the office of the United States Attorney General who conducted the investigation into the affairs of the Motion Picture Patents Company. For the Fox company he has been engaged in the development of its foreign business, as well as its domestic. While in the west last summer he traveled ten thousand miles over Nevada, New Mexico and California in his own car. In October he drove the same little machine from San Francisco to New York in nineteen days, establishing a record for an automobile driven by its owner.

Mr. Darling was educated in the United States, France and England. He speaks Spanish and French. He is about forty years old. His career has been a varied and an interesting one. Beginning his business life as a civil engineer, from 1890 to 1900 he was with orange and lemon corporations in California and on railroad work in the west. He opened up the West Indian orange industry for the United Fruit Company. In 1902-4 he was concessionist for the same company in Latin America. From that time to 1909 he did railroad surveying in Nicaragua, was employed by Honduras to settle its foreign debt and to construct a railroad across the country, and for a refining company secured options on the principal oil fields of Ecuador, Peru and Chile.

With the Department of Justice Mr. Darling was engaged in the preparation of many of the larger suits brought under the anti-trust law, all of which were decided in favor of the Government. He went to San Domingo to break up a revolution and succeeded in landing an ex-president and two generals in jail. Mr. Darling also has done considerable writing. Besides general articles on Central and South America, he is the author of "Darling on Trusts and Combinations" and "Commercial Latin America."

While abroad Mr. Darling will make a close study of film conditions in Great Britain.

Elaine Sterne Still Winning

Remarkably Successful Young Writer Signs New Contracts for the Coming Year.

ELAINE STERNE has been busy these past few months. In November three of her "Sonny Jim" pictures were released by the Vitagraph Company, which has made them a regular feature of its program, and the Universal released "Lil Norwester," a three-reel subject featuring Mary Fuller. Miss Sterne has signed a new contract with the Universal to continue writing for Miss Fuller. With the World Film Corporation she has signed a contract to write a feature a month for a year.

The popular young playwright will continue writing her "Sonny Jim" series. Word comes that Tom Ince will soon begin work on a five-reel Sterne script which he has announced he will make a "wonderful production" for the Triangle.

Miss Sterne has made a remarkable record in the two years she has been writing photoplays. Her continuing success is the best of evidence that the winning of thousand-dollar and five-hundred-dollar prizes a year ago were no "flashes in the pan," but that there was real merit underlying the work that brought them.

McCARDELL TO WRITE FOR HORSLEY.

Announcement is made that Roy L. McCardell has been engaged to write scenarios for animal stories to be produced by David Horsley at his Los Angeles studios. Mr. McCardell, it will be remembered, was the winner of the ten-thousand-dollar prize offered by the North American Film Corporation for the successful scenario in the "Diamond From the Sky" contest. His first effort for the Horsley studio will be a story of the circus. It will feature Margaret Gibson, supported by a large cast, and will also prominently bring into action many of the Bostock animals.

"DIAMOND FROM THE SKY" MUTUAL RELEASE.

The release of "The Diamond from the Sky," the North American Film Corporation's picturized romantic novel, as a part of the regular Mutual program, effective Monday, Nov. 29, is directly in line with the Mutual Film Corporation's policy to give the exhibitor "service beyond the films."

New Metro Offices

Company Will Move to Commodious Suite in Longacre Building.

IN ORDER to meet the demand for greater office facilities, and provide room for an increase in the executive and clerical force, the Metro Pictures Corporation will move from its present location in the Heidelberg building at Forty-second street and Broadway, to the Longacre building diagonally across the street, at 1476 Broadway. The rapid growth of Metro within the remarkably short space of time since its inception is indicative of the possibilities of the motion picture business and the growth of the industry. The proposed change from their present offices will be made on or about December 20.

In its present home, Metro has been obliged to use two floors, the executive offices being on one floor and the publicity, magazine and mailing department on the floor above. In the new quarters, the Metro Company will occupy a large suite on the eleventh floor of the Longacre building, which is erected on one of the most costly pieces of property in the world. In all there will be 8,200 square feet of floor space, and each department will have its own offices opening on a general reception and waiting room.

One of the practical and most valuable additions in the new Metro location will be a large projecting room that will permit of a forty-five foot throw. This room will be done in old blue and white and furnished with every possible convenience and comfort. The chairs, which are now being specially constructed, are craft wicker. There will be special tables for the use of those wishing to make notes, censors, newspaper and magazine critics, musical directors who arrange special program for Metro pictures, and Metro employes desiring to make notes on corrections and suggestions on the pictures shown.

The new offices will be sumptuously and luxuriously appointed in every particular, and represent the last word in equipment and furnishing, in line with Metro's general plan in everything. Richard A. Rowland, president of the Metro Corporation, will have his private suite of offices, and other private offices will include one for Joseph W. Engel, treasurer; W. E. Atkinson, general manager; and Charles W. Stern, auditor. Arthur James, director of publicity, will have his offices on the Broadway side of the building. Merritt Crawford, managing editor of the Metro Pictures Magazine, will also have his offices on this side, as will Henry James, business manager of the magazine.

The poster department, mailing rooms and kindred departments will adjoin the magazine and publicity suite. In this suite will also be located the scenario department, which is conducted under the supervision of Arthur James.

Decorators, painters and carpenters are now at work remodeling the new offices to meet the needs of Metro. This work is being done under the personal direction of Treasurer Engel. The lease for the new offices is for a term of years.

Paramount Program for January

Geraldine Farrar and Other Stars in Paramount Constellation to Open New Year.

GERALDINE FARRAR'S second photoplay appearance as a Paramount picture star will be the second release of the Paramount program for the month of January, according to a statement issued this week from the New York office of the big company. It is entitled "Temptation," and, like "Carmen," was produced by the Lasky Feature Play Company under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille. The original scenario is from the facile pen of Hector Turnbull, formerly dramatic critic of the New York Tribune, and now a member of the Lasky literary staff at Hollywood, California, where many persons are employed making drama and comedy by the foot.

Following her immense success in the title role of the Famous Players-Paramount picture, "Bella Donna," produced from Robert Hichens' celebrated novel and play, Pauline Frederick will be seen in "Lydia Gilmore" on January 3, ushering in the new year, and, as an advance guard, heralding the approach of photoplays which in their aggregate have only been equaled by former announcements of the Paramount Corporation.

The Famous Players Film Company contributes, besides Miss Frederick in "Lydia Gilmore," Miss Clark in "Mice and Men" on January 10, Miss Pickford in "Miss Jinny" on January 20, and Miss Dawn in "My Lady Incog" on January 24.

The Lasky Feature Play Company adds to its list of previous successes, "Temptation" on January 6, Blanche Sweet in "The Ragamuffin" on the 17th, and Miss Ridgley and Mr. Reid in "The Golden Chance" on the 27th.

Oliver Morosco is represented on the 13th by Constance Collier's first appearance on any screen in "Tongues of Men," and Pallas contributes Dustin Farnum in "The Call of the Cumberlands," its second production for the Paramount program.

Anita Navarro

ONE need not be a seer to prophesy a brilliant future for this charming little screen artiste, for her past successes portend a splendid career. Although but thirteen years old, she has already appeared in a number of successful productions.

Miss Navarro played her first engagement when she was a baby. At that time she was cast in the early Pathe productions, in which she appeared with her mother, Mary Navarro, who was, and still is, well known to the followers of the screened drama. She later appeared with Florence Lawrence and was also associated with the Biograph, Eclair and Vitagraph companies.

Anita Navarro.

This season Anita was seen as the page in "The Three Musketeers" and as a Chinese girl in "The Marked Woman," a World Film feature. Her next appearance was as a Spanish girl in "M'Liss," and then as a circus rider in "The Butterfly," these both being Peerless features. The Plurograph Company then cast her in the classical production, "Diana," in which is featured the celebrated dancer, Paul Swan.

Miss Anita possesses the happy faculty of reflecting her pleasing personality from the screen. Coupled with this is the fact that she is a "born" actress, her histrionic ability having been inherited from her mother, who, as before stated, is well known to devotees of the photoplay.

She has been under the tutelage of Oscar F. Lund, the well-known photoplayer and director, who speaks enthusiastically of the future of his protege. And by the way, Anita is a musician of no mean ability.

Miss Navarro is at present engaged with the Plurograph Company.

BUSHMAN AND BAYNE HAVE NEW DIRECTOR.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, the popular Metro stars, and counted the foremost stellar combination in motion pictures, have begun work in a novel five-part production, "The Man Without a Conscience," at the Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., studio, 3 West Sixty-first street. These stars are under contract with the Quality Pictures Corporation, one of Metro's producing companies, and since coming to New York from the Quality-Metro studio in Hollywood, Cal., have been using the Rolfe studios until suitable arrangements could be made for their accommodation elsewhere. During the absence in the south of the Rolfe and Columbia companies, headed respectively by Marguerite Snow and Mary Miles Minter, however, the Bushman-Bayne company will make the Rolfe studio its own.

Immediately upon the completion of "The Man Without a Conscience," these two stars will begin work on their next big Metro feature, "The Red Mouse." This five-part feature was written by William Hamilton Osborne, the author of "Neal of the Navy," and other motion picture features.

John W. Noble, one of the oldest Metro directors, in point of service, and who has made an enviable record in that capacity, will direct "The Man Without a Conscience," and other Bushman-Bayne feature productions.

Edna May in Elaborate Picture

"The Belle of New York" Star Spends All of Her Days in Vitagraph Studio—Is Playing a Salvation Army Girl.

DRAWING her conclusions from four weeks of experience at the Vitagraph studio, where she is making her initial, likewise her final, appearance in pictures, Edna May confcssed to a World reporter that a photoplay actress' hardest work is waiting to work. "This sitting around hour after hour is a bit trying to one's nerves," she said; "and the lights are fearfully hard on the eyes. Pictures are a fascinating study, to be sure, but if I were to return to public life and were looking for something moderately easy I should prefer acting on the stage to acting in a studio."

Then Miss May, or rather Mrs. Oscar Lewisohn, hastened to add that there is not the remotest change of her reviving the career that she enjoyed before marriage. She has other interests now, not the least among them the string of racehorses owned by her husband, and when her work for Vitagraph has been completed she expects to go to Kentucky to see them perform.

But meanwhile the Syracuse girl, who won fame in "The Belle of New York" and topped off a successful stage career by marrying an English millionaire, is giving her undivided attention to the preparation of a drama being directed by Wilfred North under the supervision of A. E. Smith. Naturally, she plays a Salvation Army lass, for the public always will associate her with a trim blue uniform and a poke bonnet, but the story is not modeled after the renowned comic opera.

When met in the Vitgraph studio, the Salvation Army worker impersonated by Miss May evidently had been adopted by fashionable society, for, attired in an evening gown which must have cost the equivalent of several hundred Salvation Army dinners, she was the center of attraction at a reception in a drawing room that would not look out of place on Fifth avenue. Handsome tapestries adorned the walls; in the deep-set framing of the full length mirrors flowers and greens were artistically arranged. The gilt furniture, the heavy rugs and draperies were all in faithful imitation of Louis XV. fashions. A more richly decorated or substantial looking room could not well be pictured.

Seated on a lounge, awaiting the summons of Director North, Miss May expressed surprise at the attention paid to each detail in the staging of a scene. "It is all new to me," she continued, "for I never visited a studio in England; in fact, before this year I had been to motion picture houses only four times, once in Paris and three times in England. The attitude toward photoplays is so different over here, and I have come to realize that the better ones make first-rate entertainment. Since I arranged with Mr. Smith to appear in this production I have spent a large part of my spare time in going to picture houses and studying the work of other players."

Miss May mentioned as an odd coincidence the presence of Billy Cameron and Harry Davenport in the Vitagraph studio, both member of the original "Belle of New York" company. Now Mr. Cameron is playing a role in Miss May's first picture, and Mr. Davenport, as is generally known, is a director. The company selected for the support of the famous comic opera star is a strong one, including Harry Morey, L. Rogers Lytton, Donald Hall, Dorothy Kelly and Bobby Connolly.

Frank Lloyd Scores

Young Producer Displays Master Direction in Staging "The Gentleman From Indiana," a Pallas-Paramount Subject.

DUE to his wonderful work in connection with the production of the first Pallas Pictures release, "The Gentleman From Indiana," the Booth Tarkington subject starring Dustin Farnum, Frank Lloyd, the young director of the new Paramount organization, has sprung into prominence as a producer of big photoplays practically over night.

Realizing the possibilities in Lloyd, Pallas Pictures engaged him to produce its initial effort in the motion picture field, and that the confidence of the officers of this concern has not been misplaced is most effectively evident in "The Gentleman From Indiana." The remarkable atmosphere and realism injected into this Hoosier play by Director Lloyd, the striking way in which he has handled immense mobs, together with the various novel effects which he so successfully introduced in this film, attracts the immediate attention of all who see it.

Frank Lloyd.

Critics of both the trade and lay press have dwelt upon the splendid direction of this subject and all have proclaimed Director Lloyd an expert of originality and unusual thoroughness. In speaking of the direction of this photoplay the general tone of the criticisms is reflected in the review which appeared in the New York Evening Mail. This notice, which stated that for genuine atmosphere and human feeling it is no exaggeration to say that "The Gentleman From Indiana" is a second "Birth of a Nation," ended by saying: "We take our hats off to the director."

Director Lloyd owes his stage career to no less a person than the cclebrated English actor, Wilson Barrett. When in his teens he left his Glasgow home in Scotland young Lloyd came to London, where, after many months of fruitless search for work, his stage aspirations were finally realized on being engaged by Barrett for a minor role in a Shakesperean production. After an invaluable apprenticeship under Barrett Lloyd was able to come to this country and be accepted as a star. His great natural ability as an organizer and producer finally secured outlet as a motion picture director, and that he will soon be established among the greatest directors of the world is freely prognosticated.

"BOB" EDESON'S HOME TROUBLES.

"Bob" Edeson is facing a perplexing problem—the question before the house being, shall he shatter his own bank account or his leading lady's faith in Santa Claus? Small Peggy Edeson, who makes her first curtsey to the public with her actor-father in the feature film, "How Molly Made Good," is the "leading lady" in consideration. It was all very charming to have the small five-year-older with him in the picture, but it is a bit embarrassing for Father Edeson in consequence.

Peggy thinks acting is quite the nicest game she ever played, and writes daily letters now with the constant plea to good Kris Kringle "to please send a moving picture plant to Peggy." Small Peggy evidently thinks that moving picture studios grow in flower pots. But Actor Edeson knows they grow in pots of gold, and that's what makes the situation awkward. He might possibly install a miniature screen for showing pictures, but Peggy is insistent on a studio with all the necessary mechanisms for taking moving pictures. She wants to act again with "Daddy," and nothing else will do.

It's really "Bob" Edeson's own fault that he is in the present predicament. Of course, he never should have started Peggy in her acting aspirations, in the first place. But, after all, "How Molly Made Good" was staged right on the Edeson place down at Sag Harbor, and it couldn't really be "Bob" Edeson's home in screen or actuality without having Peggy very much in evidence.

Mutual Enlarges Program

Beginning January 17 It Will Release Three Five-Part and Three Three-Part Subjects.

THREE Mutual masterpictures, de luxe edition, every week, each in five reels; an additional three-reel feature for the Mutual's program—a total of three three-reel features a week—these are the high lights in an announcement of a new and important increase in the output of the Mutual Film Corporation, just issued from the New York offices by President John R. Freuler. This extraordinary development gives the Mutual a total of six multiple reel feature releases a week—the greatest feature output of any releasing organization in the world.

"Masterpictures, de luxe edition," is a recast of the established title name of "Masterpicture." The change has been made to give the new name a meaning to cover and convey the exceptionally high standard of quality which will characterize these coming features of 1916. These will be released beginning the week of January 17. They will be unusual in character—picturizations of famous plays, world-famed books and works of fiction, and original scenarios by the most noted authors.

Big increases in productive capacity have been made by the large group of manufacturers represented in the Mutual group. A large number of players has been put under contract for work in the array of additional companies which have been organized by the Mutual manufacturers. Studios have been built and new facilities for the printing, handling and shipment of film have been added. Work of preparation for the announcement just made has been quietly under way for months.

The most elaborate pains have been taken to assure the fullest preparation for the big increase in activity and production. "I am speaking with a properly conservative estimate of values when I declare that this is the biggest development that has come in the history of the motion picture industry," President Freuler observed. "Our basic idea is to give the exhibitor the highest efficiency in picture service. That is what this move represents. It is just incidentally true that to do this it has been necessary for us to increase our releases to the point which gives us the biggest weekly feature schedule. Quality and efficiency, rather than mere magnitude, are our aims. It is a commercial coincidence that efficiency brings us to this vast volume."

Among the new Mutual Masterpictures, de luxe edition, in the release schedule now immediately ahead are: "Silas Marner," George Eliot's famous book, featuring Frederic Warde; "The Other Side of the Door," Lucia Chamberlain's famous novel, featuring Harold Lockwood; "Vengeance Is Mine!" featuring Crane Wilbur; "The Bait," featuring William Clifford and Betty Harte; "The Idol of the Stage," featuring Malcolm Williams; "The Five Faults of Flo," featuring Florence La Badie; "Lord Loveland Discovers America," featuring Arthur Maude and Constance Crawley; "As a Woman Sows," featuring Gertrude Robinson.

Two well-known stars have been added to the forces of the Gaumont Company at its studio at Jacksonville, Fla., to play the leading roles in the first Gaumont releases of the de luxe edition. Malcolm Miller has been engaged for the production of "The Idol of the Stage," which will be the first of this new brand of Mutual output to be released upon the market and will appear January 17. Gertrude Robinson went to Florida to play the leading role in "As a Woman Sows."

The recent enlargement of the American Film Corporation's plant at Santa Barbara, the erection of the great glass-covered studio and increase in technical equipment, which meant the building of a three-story property and transformer building, a scenery dock and painting, finishing and upholstering rooms, was made so that the American's offerings to the Mutual tri-weekly Masterpicture de luxe releases could be readily produced.

It was partly to permit outdoor work and partly to allow for the enlarging of the Gaumont Company's Flushing studio so that it, too, would be able to meet the new de luxe edition requirements that the two Gaumont companies were sent to Jacksonville, Fla. Only last week was announced the proposed acquisition of a third Gaumont Company of stock players, which will combine with the present company in the support of the stars featured in Gaumont releases.

David Horsley has added several new members to his force at Los Angeles. In addition he has tripled the efficiency of his studio by adding a new indoor studio and indoor workshops, which will give his directors 20,000 additional feet of floor space. Betty Harte, Gypsy Abbott, Brooklyn Keller, all newcomers to the Horsley company, are well-known picture players. William Bowman and Ulysses Davis have recently been added to the directing force. Frank Stammer and Frank Crompton have been put in charge of the technical department.

Two of the Thanhouser stock companies have already gone south to Florida, and a third company will leave shortly for Hudson Bay, while work will continue at the New Rochelle studios as usual. Mr. Thanhouser promises a great variety of Masterpicture material from his widely scattered forces.

Among the new three-real features to come are "Lillo of the Sulu Seas," "Across the Sunlit Sea," "The Extra Man and the Milk-Fed Lion" and "Water Stuff." The high standard of the three-reel productions will be maintained, giving these program features the strong box office drawing power and advertising value so essential to the exhibitor's success.

The single reel productions on the Mutual program are coming in for important attention. They are being made one-reel specialties of unusual merit, comedies swift and snappy, and the topicals, the Mutual Weekly, and the "See America First" on the split reel with "Keeping Up with the Joneses." The Mutual Weekly is being made particularly attractive with its remarkable scope of news service and Paris fashions presented in colors. An army of stars, unlimited studio facilities, new and unusual stories, plays and scenarios, a new high standard of production—these are what are summed up in the new de luxe edition of Mutual Masterpictures.

Striking Example of Film Advertising

Nat G. Rothstein, of Universal Publicity Staff, Compiles an Artistic Book for Exploiting the Serial "Graft."

PERHAPS the most striking piece of advertising to be issued by a film manufacturing company is the twenty-eight page book compiled by Nat G. Rothstein, advertising manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. The publication is 14 by 10½ inches in size and printed in many colors. The title is "Graft," and its purpose is to exploit the new serial of that name which the Universal Company is making. Mr. Rothstein is receiving the compliments and congratulations of his friends on his achievement.

The first cover page carries the massed photographs of the faces of the eighteen authors who are writing the stories on which the episodes are based. The inside of the front cover contains an effective portrayal of the towering structures in lower New York. Two pages are devoted to photographs of the authors and sketches of their careers. Two pages following give the synopsis of the running story. Another pair contains the group pictures of the cast and the fifteen "grafters" who will figure in the story. These also carry full-length photographs of the players who will delineate the leading characters—Hobart Henley and Jane Novak.

Nat G. Rothstein.

Two pages of interest contain a panoramic photograph of the great crowd present at the opening of Universal City last March 15 and also scenes in and around the San Fernando plant, with a description of the building and grounds. There are pages showing the newspapers that will print the stories, and there are samples of the advertising that has been prepared to exploit the serial. Some of the more striking of these are of the posters and examples of newspaper publicity. There are also many newspaper articles for the benefit of those exhibitors who furnish their local press with text matter. A page is devoted to slides and also to lobby display frames.

The book is a notable example of the progression of motion picture publicity and will interest deeply all who are in any way connected with film exploitation.

Four Directors for Premier Program

Richmond, Castle, Le Soir, Reticker to Direct Productions for New Combination.

MUCH interest has been aroused by the announcement that five high-grade producing companies are already engaged in the labor of making pictures for the Premier program. Up to the present, however, no actual announcement has been made of the men who will be responsible for the quality of production. The names of James W. Castle, George L. Le Soir, Joseph A. Richmond and Hugh Reticker, however, are a guarantee of much that is best, most progressive, artistic and meritorious in the motion picture industry.

J. A. Richmond.

This quartette of directors has been selected only after the most careful consideration of the capacity of the various men in the industry. Scarcely any of the motion picture companies that have risen to prominence since the start of the industry are not represented on the list of companies with whom these four men have at one time or another been connected, while their combined dramatic experience includes minor parts, juveniles, leads, directing in every part of the country and even in Europe.

J. W. Castle.

Hugh Reticker.

Joseph A. Richmond, who was for many years with Edison, first as assistant director and then as director, is a man who is well known in many cities, for his connections with stock companies, and in motion pictures his experience dates back to 1908 with the old Selig Company from Chicago.

James W. Castle is well known in the dramatic world as the man who produced "The Goose Girl" and "Graustark" and who for the last two years has devoted his directorial ability to the benefit of both Edison and Vitagraph. He joins the Premier program staff after the very widest dramatic and pictorial experience.

Hugh Reticker is particularly notable as having just produced the first successful baseball picture, and as a director his memories date back to the old days of the Motion Picture Sales Company at which time he directed the Yankee brand, later being connected with Imp, Powers and Edison. He finds the best expression of his ability in the modern features and brings to the Premier program ripe experience and youthful enthusiasm.

George L. Le Soir, who has just returned from Russia, whither he had traveled from London as director for the Art Film Company, left that country in the throes of the present European struggle. His return to America brought him to the Premier program, which will surely benefit by his valuable fund of knowledge gained in directing pictures at various times for the Imp, Thanhouser, Pathe, and Kalem companies. For the last-named company he managed the New Orleans studio, directing such famous stars as Tom Moore, Lottie Pickford and Stewart Holmes. His dramatic experience includes many prominent parts with such notable actors as John Drew, James K. Hackett and Bertha Galland.

All of these directors are already actually at work, each one thoroughly resolved to produce a picture superior to that of his co-workers.

Gaumont to Enlarge Flushing Plant

Land Adjoining Present Studios Purchased and New Studio Will Be Erected—Other Changes Contemplated.

FOR some time the Gaumont Company has been acquiring the land adjacent to its present plant on Congress, Linden and Myrtle streets, Flushing, N. Y., to enable it to make much-needed enlargements in its facilities for making pictures. Plans have been drawn and the contracts let for the proposed work and construction will be commenced shortly.

Among other things, it is proposed to raze the present administration building, studio and the structures housing the staff of the general director and properties so that the new building may be properly laid out.

It is proposed to build a large enclosed studio equipped for year-around work with all the latest facilities for the convenience of the several companies of players. The plans also call for an open air stage large enough for several directors to work at one time. The company contemplates spending from $150,000 to $200,000 on these improvements and expects to have the buildings ready for occupancy by the time its players, now in Florida, return in the spring.

Page Peters is one of the younger leading men in pictures, who, starting at the bottom without previous experience on the stage to aid him, has rapidly climbed to a place of prominence in the film world. He is now permanently engaged at the studio of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company in Los Angeles, where powerful photodramas, complete general facilities and the instruction of highly capable directors afford him an outlet for his talents. Mr. Peters is a Kentuckian, having been born in Louisville, April 21, 1889. He has been engaged for three years in picture work.

PRINCIPALS IN "LET KATY DO IT."

Jane Grey, one of the co-stars of "Let Katy Do It," has returned to New York and was present at the first night showing of this Fine Arts film at the Knickerbocker theater the week of December 5. Tully Marshall, the other star in the play, is staying on in Los Angeles to fulfill his year's contract with the Fine Arts. He is now working on his third screen production, "Martha's Vindication," with Norma Talmadge and Seena Owen featured in the same cast. Besides Miss Grey and Mr. Marshall, "Let Katy Do It" has also the able services of Ralph Lewis, Walter Long, Charles West, George Pearce, Luray Huntley and the seven Fine Arts Kiddies.

Realism in "Camille"

Clara Kimball Young Made Study of Tuberculosis of World Subject.

FOR the forthcoming production of "Camille" in photoplay form Clara Kimball Young, who is starred in the photodrama, which is from the studios of the World Film Corporation, made an unusually careful, though at first glance not very alluring, study of the inception and progress of consumption. It will be recalled, of course, that the Lady of the Camelias meets an untimely end from this disease and, up to date, in stage presentation her dramatic portrayers have contented themselves with a few hectic coughs, giving rise to the merry quip, "Camille is coughing much better this morning." Miss Young, however, decided that upon the screen a far more minute and graphic study of the dread disease should be made, and to this end she spent several weeks at Saranac Lake and even braved the wards of hospitals devoted to the treatment of the great white plague in pursuit of her investigations. The result of this minute care is a realistic study of the progress of Camille's affliction which, without being in the least repulsive, is infinitely pathetic in its graphic depiction of the ravages of tuberculosis. It is, in fact, to quote Miss Young:

"A composite page torn from many suffering bedsides and from the lips of many brave souls enduring faithfully and without complaint until the end, which they know cannot in the nature of things be far off. I shall never regret my careful study of consumption, undertaken at first merely in the interest of a true characterization of the disease, but latterly in an earnest spirit of horror at the extent to which it has fastened upon the masses of this country. I shall do all that lies in my humble power to aid in stamping it out."

Miss Young did not add that, as a starter, she has forwarded to the largest tuberculosis institution in the United States her check for a large amount to aid in the battle that is being waged against consumption.

A. C. F. GETS NOTED CARTOONIST.

The American Correspondent Film Company announces that it has secured the rights to the exclusive marketing of the comedies of Hal Olver, a clever creator of animated cartoons. He was for five years on the staff of the Boston Traveler, and did noteworthy work for a newspaper syndicate in South America before he came north. Mr. Olver is now preparing a serial entitled "The Strange Adventures of Professor Pipp," which will be released shortly.

SMILEY AN EDUCATIONAL FACTOR.

Joseph W. Smiley, chief director for the new Ocean Film, associated Dr. Charles Chandler and Dr. Swithen Chandler, both of Philadelphia, with whom he became acquainted when he was with Lubin, is still working for the perfection of surgical demonstration films, whereby the various important operations may be shown graphically to students in the medical colleges without the use of living subjects at each clinic. Eminent authorities in surgery have high hopes of the results. There is a wide field for the efforts of motion picture producers in this particular line and any serious attempt will be welcomed by medical educators.

Nearly Five Hundred Theaters

Triangle Service Increasing Throughout the Country by Leaps and Bounds.

GROWTH of the Triangle Film Corporation service for the last two or three weeks is one of the sensations of the screen world. According to official reports, nearly 500 theaters in the United States alone are now using the service, and foreign agents are busily making contracts in South America, Europe and the Far East.

Among the most gilt edged of these rentals are 364 one-year contracts for supplying films to theaters in various parts of the country. Vice-President Adam Kessel issued a statement last week in which he said: "When it is considered that the company was not organized until the middle of July and made no attempt to secure contracts until the middle of September, we think we have reason to be satisfied with the progress that has been made."

Reports from all over the country indicate that in 90 per cent. of the houses the Triangle program is playing to capacity business. In most of the houses the program of two five-part features and two two-reel comedies is split into two parts. The Griffith supervised feature with one Keystone is used the first half of the week and the Ince feature and the other Keystone the second half. The shows run from an hour and a half to two hours, according as to whether additional vaudeville features or travel or news features are added or not. The prices willingly paid by the public are in almost every instance in excess of those charged at the theater before the Triangle service was started.

Devore Parmer

DEVORE PARMER, who recently joined the Triangle Films as heavy man in features now being produced by Director John Emerson, featuring Douglas Fairbanks, has supported such prominent stage stars as Robert Mantell, Viola Allen, Sothern and Marlowe, Charles B. Hanford, E. M. Holland and many others.

Devore Parmer.

His first picture engagement was with the Edison outdoor company, in which he played leading roles. Then he went with the old Nestor Company, where he played Western parts. He resigned the Nestor position to return to the footlights as head of his own repertoire company, playing "Richard III.," "Taming the Shrew," "Romeo and Juliet" and "David Garrick." After two years he rejoined the pictures with the Biograph. Since then he has been with Cosmos Features, Crystal, Harvard, Metro, Arrow and as heavy man opposite Tom Terriss.

Mr. Parmer has ability as an athlete. He has won medals for horsemanship, boxing, swimming, bag-punching and running. He is an expert swordsman and a hunter of wild game.

PATHE CLUB FORMED.

The department heads of the Pathe forces have got together and formed a club for social purposes. The organization is known as the Pathe Club, and is now being incorporated. That the Roosterites mean business is shown by the fact that the club starts out with a capital of $1,000 paid in, and has received the hearty support of Mr. Charles Pathe and General Manager Gasnier. Officers have been selected as follows:

Honorary President, Mr. Charles Pathe; President, Mr. Gasnier; Acting President, W. A. Sholto Douglas; Acting Vice-President, Ralph Navarro; Secretary, P. Allen Parsons; Treasurer, Gabriel Bardet. To the board of governors was elected: M. Ramirez Torres, George A. Smith, J. K. Burger, George B. Seitz, and F. H. Knocke, the officers of the club also acting as members of the board ex-officio.

A dance and dinner has been planned for the middle of January, and clubrooms are contemplated.

Famous Players for January

Next Month's Contributions to Paramount Program a Compromise Between Play Adaptations and Original Stories.

IN view of the controversy which is rife among producers concerning the relative merits of the adaptation of successful plays and novels, as compared with original stories, to the motion picture screen, the announcement of the Famous Players' releases on the Paramount program for the first month of the new year proves particularly interesting.

On January 3 Pauline Frederick appears in an adaptation of Henry Arthur Jones' great human drama, "Lydia Gilmore," the first Paramount release for 1916; on the 10th Marguerite Clark will be seen in an adaptation of "Mice and Men"; on the 20th Mary Pickford stars in "The Foundling," an original script, and on the 24th Hazel Dawn plays "My Lady Incog.," another original photoplay.

Thus the score stands even between adaptations and original photoplays—a fact which is symbolical of the attitude of the Famous Players on this question, which has been broadly agitated throughout the trade. As Mr. Zukor stated in a recent interview, the strictures which have been drawn on the adaptation of plays and stories by some manufacturers indicate that they have assumed the attitude that because a plot was used on the stage or has appeared in print it is necessarily bad material for motion picture use.

It has been the contention of Mr. Zukor that the source of a plot or a theme was of absolutely no moment in determining its value for motion pictures, which must be based solely on the intrinsic merits of the individual plot, considered purely from the photoplay standpoint. The releasing of an equal number of adaptations and original subjects, though purely accidental in its arrangement, is concretely significant of the fact that this company is not prejudiced either for or against the one means of obtaining material as contrasted with the other.

"Lydia Gilmore," in which Pauline Frederick makes her first appearance since her triumphant presentation in "Bella Donna," is one of the most successful of the powerful dramas from the pen of Henry Arthur Jones. In the supporting cast appear the noted stage favorite, Vincent Serrano, who was especially engaged to play Dr. Gilmore, in which role he makes his screen debut; Thomas Holding, Michael Rale, Robert Cain and Helen Luttrell.

"Mice and Men," in which Marguerite Clark is starred, is an adaptation of the famous play by Madeline Lucette Ryley, in the stage version of which Annie Russell and Gertrude Forbes-Robertson scored great personal successes in New York and London, respectively.

Mary Pickford's next starring vehicle is "The Foundling," which presents a story of beautiful sentiments and tender appeal to the finer senses. "The Foundling" epitomizes in a strongly dramatic manner the sufferings of a girl cast out into the world by the hatred of her father, because her birth has caused the death of the wife he had loved and worshipped.

In "My Lady Incog.," which was written especially for her, Hazel Dawn plays a character different from any she has previously interpreted on the screen. It is a big comedy with a big thrill, in which she plays a detective role, masquerading as a baroness in high society.

DRA-KO OF PREMIER PROGRAM.

The Dra-Ko Film Company will in the future release its productions on the Premier program. The Dra-Ko will in the future confine its attention to five-reel features, picturized from famous stories. This film company is already well known as producer of features, having recently produced "York State Folks," a picturization of the play of that name. The business management of the Dra-Ko Film Company will remain the same as heretofore, J. Snyder continuing as general manager and Joseph A. Richmond as director at the studio at Tappan, N. Y.

JOHN CLYMER NOW PATHE SCENARIO EDITOR.

Owing to his desire to devote his whole time to scenario writing rather than to editorial work, George B. Seitz has turned over to John Clymer the position of scenario editor for Pathe. Mr. Clymer has been a scenario writer for years, and was formerly publicity man for the Gaumont Company. He is also known as a short story writer and musical critic. Mr. Seitz will continue to devote his whole time to writing for Pathe.

At Leading Picture Theatres

Programs for the Week at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

FANNIE WARD, the popular American actress, is appearing at the Strand in a new photo-dramatic production entitled "The Cheat." The play was written by Hector Turnbull and gives Miss Ward unusual opportunities to display her histrionic art. She is supported by a cast headed by Sessue Hayakawa, a Japanese artist, who plays opposite Miss Ward.

The Topical Review contains the latest war pictures taken on the actual battlefield, and news pictures from this country and abroad. A new comedy and travel and scientific studies are also being shown, and the latest styles for women. These fashion pictures, which were taken in this country and Paris, are in beautiful colors. Martha de Lachmann, the popular soprano, is heard in classical selections. Autumn Hall is again playing her exquisite violin solos and Margaret Horton is also on the concert program.

Triangle Program at the Knickerbocker.

The principal feature of the Triangle star combination at the Knickerbocker theater is the return of "A Submarine Pirate," the Syd Chaplin comedy, which was so successful when produced several weeks ago. Henry Woodruff, in the Ince-supervised picture, "The Beckoning Flame," is also on the program. Tsuru Aoki, a talented Japanese player, is the leading woman. Rhea Mitchell, J. Frank Burke and J. Barney Sherry are in the cast. From the Griffith studios is "The Missing Links," featuring Norma Talmadge and Robert Harron. Thomas Jefferson, last seen at the Knickerbocker in "The Sable Lorcha" with Tully Marshall, heads a supporting cast which includes Elmer Clifton and Constance Talmadge.

"The Unknown" at the Broadway.

Lou Tellegen, the distinguished romantic actor, is appearing on the screen at the Broadway theater in the Jesse L. Lasky photodrama, "The Unknown," founded on I. A. R. Wylie's novel, "The Red Mirage." It is a gripping drama of the famous Foreign Legion in Algeria. In this photodrama Mr. Tellegen is seen in a character entirely different from anything he has played heretofore, either on the speaking stage or the screen.

Program at the Vitagraph.

"Thou Art the Man," a powerful five-part story of a modern David, Beth-Sheba and Uriah, written by George Cameron, author of "A Million Bid," and produced by S. Rankin Drew, is the feature picture of the program at the Vitagraph theater. S. Rankin Drew, Virginia Pearson, Joseph Kilgore, George Cooper and Billie Billings are in the cast. Three one-reel comedies, "The Deceivers," "Levy's Seven Daughters" and "He Got Himself a Wife," complete the bill.

ANNA PAVLOWA VISITS UNIVERSAL OFFICE.

Anna Pavlowa, the Russian dancer, who is appearing with her Russian ballet at the Boston Opera House, made a trip to New York City on Friday of last week just because she was dissatisfied with the artistic appearance of the poster to be used by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in advertising her debut in motion pictures, when she will appear in "The Dumb Girl of Portici."

She brought along with her her own sculptor, for whom she posed especially for these posters so as to enable him to get the proper proportion of her arms and legs, so that when the posters would be enlarged or reduced in size they would be properly proportioned and technically correct in design. Having a half interest in the production of this photoplay she is naturally very particular to see that the minutest detail is carried out to the letter. The Universal expects to have "The Dumb Girl of Portici" ready for release shortly after the new year.

GEORGIA CAINE LURED TO MOTION PICTURES.

Pursuing its policy of contract with stage celebrities to appear in its forthcoming five-part feature releases, the Ocean Film Corporation has contracted with Miss Georgia Caine to appear in an early release of that company. The feature in which Miss Caine will appear has not been chosen, but several popular dramatic productions are under advisement. Miss Caine is by nature intensely dramatic, and it has been her aspiration to star in a dramatic production; her peculiar type of beauty, fortified by more than an ordinary intelligence, should place her in the front ranks of photoplay stars.

Essanay Year-End Offerings

Will Release a Number of Unusually Strong Subjects Through V-L-S-E and General Film.

ESSANAY closes the year with a list of unusually strong releases for the month of December. Its two big features for this month on the V-L-S-E program are "The Alster Case," taken from the novel of Rufus Gillmore, and "A Daughter of the City," adapted from the play by H. S. Sheldon.

"The Alster Case" is a five-reel mystery drama, with the problem involved unsolved until the denouement. It carries out the element of surprise so well that all guesses are upset. Bryant Washburn, John Cossar, Ruth Stonehouse, and Anne Leigh lead in a strong cast.

"A Daughter of the City" is a love romance and touches on the problem of the life of girls who have small means and living in a large city. Marguerite Clayton plays the part of the girl whose life is so nearly wrecked by a vampire of society, which part is taken by E. H. Calvert.

In the general film program are several strong releases. Henry B. Walthall appears in a strong emotional drama of three reels, "Blind Justice." "Reckoning Day," is another strong three-reel release, featuring E. H. Calvert and Elizabeth Burbridge.

Among the two-reel dramas are "On the Private Wire," featuring Joseph Byron Totten; "The Power of Publicity," a newspaper story produced in conjunction with the Baltimore News prize scenario and beauty contest, featuring John Lorenz and Miss Marie Bussey, winner of the beauty contest; "The Danger of Being Lonesome," and a Christmas photoplay featuring G. M. Anderson, "A Christmas Revenge."

There also are three George Ade Fables, a "Dreamy Dud" cartoon and a "Canimated Nooz Pictorial" by Wallace A. Carlson, with burlesques on the news of the day, besides the regular Western dramas and comedies and other excellent plays.

Charles Chaplin has nearly completed another Essanay-Chaplin comedy and it will be released shortly. The title is "Charlie Chaplin's Burlesque on 'Carmen,'" in two acts. Again Chaplin is found in an entirely new role. There is less of the slap-stick variety of fun and more of the subtle points of genuine humor.

Mr. Chaplin apparently is able to put over something new in almost every production. You look for him as he appeared last and you find that his make-up has disappeared and a new one donned. But it is the same Chaplin underneath, you find the same personality that has made him beloved all over the world.

It is largely this element of surprise that make his fun of the top notch variety. You expect to see one thing and you are confronted with an entirely new phase of the mysterious Chaplin. But the surprise is always pleasing as the fun is always there.

Helping the Thief Catcher

Utilizing the Screen in the Aid of the Forces of Law and Order in Municipalities.

By G. H. Fishbach in Policeman's Monthly.

EARLY this summer patrons of moving picture houses saw flashed across the screen pictures of crooks wanted by the police, and also children lost, strayed or stolen, together with descriptions of the individuals concerned and a statement of any reward offered. This was an innovation of the New York Police Department and a link in the system of police efficiency suggested by one of the veteran detectives of the force. Acting Captain William J. Deevy hit upon it when the alarm went out early last summer for the arrest of Edward C. Kindred, wanted for the theft of $22,000. This man slipped through the police lines of the city before they were closed, and Captain Deevy sent out 125 slides containing an exact copy of the special alarm circular, giving his picture, his description, crime, and reward offered for his apprehension. These and others since then have been sent to Police Departments throughout the United States, with the request that the department heads ask the film houses in their districts to show the same on their screens.

In New York City the inspectors were asked to request the same thing of the film houses in their districts. It was the first use made of modern photography along these lines by any police department in the world and shows that the New York Police Department in keeping pace with the times does not hesitate to make use of every practical facility outside of its's own well equipped organization.

The Department believes that there is no better medium than the screen to acquaint the public with police endeavor, or to familiarize the public with the faces of dangerous men. Most valuable of all is the moral effect this wide publicity has on the criminal himself. Once the criminal class realizes that the forces of law and order are utilizing to the fullest extent every invention of modern times to hunt him down, its members will not be as apt to violate the law with such abandon and frequency as in the past.

The Department knows motion pictures are invaluable aids in finding missing persons. It has been demonstrated. The management of motion picture houses have been generous to a degree in complying with the wishes of the authorities in giving these pictures all possible prominence on the screens, and in the assistance they render they perform one of the first duties of good citizenship.

The New York Police Department believes that the screen is an invaluable asset to the forces of law and order and that its possibilities in this direction have only just begun to be developed.

ROGERS WITH NOLA ON ASSOCIATED PROGRAM.

Andrew Rogers, one of the oldest dramatic men in the game today, has been converted with the rest of the reformers to the silent drama. His former connections for the last two seasons have been as leading man in "Old Kentucky." He has also played with the most eminent actors, such as Frederick Warde in repertoire. He played Mark Antony to Mr. Frederick Warde's Brutus in Shakespeare's "Julius Caesar." He also appeared for a short time with the Solax Company. His next appearance on the screen will be opposite Miss Beatrice Joy Zeidler in a Big A release, "The Turning Point," on the Associated Program.

DE GRASSE COMPANY IN FRISCO.

Joseph De Grasse and his company of feature players this week left the Universal City studios for a trip of several days to San Francisco, where they are to make exterior scenes in the production of a five-reel feature entitled, "Love Thine Enemy." The story comes from the pen of Ida May Park and in its production Louise Carbasse, Grace Thompson, J. Belasco, Hayward Mack, Colin Chase, Harry Hamm, Lon Chaney, Walter Belasco, Marcia Moore and Dixie Carr play the principal roles.

William C. Dowlan has begun the production of a three-reel Universal drama by Leonora Ainsworth entitled, "Troubled Waters." Gloria Fonda and Dowlan play the leading roles.

EDWIN CAREWE TO DIRECT JUNE MATHIS.

When he has finished the production of "The Outcast," by Thomas Barry, featuring George LeGuerre, for Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., on which he is now working, Edwin Carewe, the director, will take up "The Sheriff of God's Land," now being written for the screen by Miss June Mathis.

Miss Mathis has been an actress since childhood, having played under the management of the Shuberts, and lead for two years in "Brewster's Millions," four years with Julian Eltinge in "The Fascinating Widow," and under the management of James K. Hackett.

RAVER ENGAGES OTTALA NESMITH.

Harry R. Raver, president of the Raver Film Corporation, announces the engagement of Ottala Nesmith to supplement the cast of "The Other Girl." This talented celebrity will interpret an important role of the story. She comes direct from the Famous Players Film Company. Last season she was leading woman for David Belasco in his production of "The Vanishing Bride," and starred in "Just Outside the Door." In the Raver-Thomas production she will support James J. Corbett and Paul Gilmore. Her dramatic reputation gives convincing proof of the superior excellence of the Raver cast.

WILLIAM MORGAN HANNON, SCENARIO EDITOR.

William Morgan Hannon, who stepped from literary fields and law practice into the photo-dramatic game, recently won national prominence by writing a book on the artistic side of the photodrama that has been hailed by the press and moving picture people as a pioneer work of its kind. "The Photodrama—Its Place Among the Fine Arts," has been well received by universities, art schools, and public libraries all over the United States. He will edit scenarios for the Associated Program.

Stage and Screen Acting

Technical Difference in the Two Methods Discussed by Edwin Arden.

"'HOW easy to act for motion pictures!' This expression has been uttered so many times in my presence by laymen who have never been initiated into acting or who have never been connected with the dramatic profession in any way," said Edwin Arden, "that were I inclined to believe what I hear I would be forced to consider acting for the screen the most easily attained accomplishment, to be mastered by any novice.

"'All it requires is naturalness,' they add. 'Anybody can be natural. In fact, inexperienced people might prove better picture players than experienced artists, because they would meet the exigencies naturally, while actors are inclined to overact. The stage requires the trained voice, the trained body. The screen requires neither.'

Edwin Arden.

"Without realizing it, perhaps, the uninitiated who have uttered the above remarks have hit upon what proves to be the greatest art of motion picture acting, or of any sort of dramatic interpretation.

"That is, the naturalness which changes 'acting the role' into 'being the role.'

"It is because this very naturalness, in a greater degree, is required of the screen than the stage that makes motion picture acting difficult.

"The public has come to think of the pictures as more at one with life, perhaps, because the pictures use the world as their background. Instead of the confines of a narrow stage and the artificialities of stagecraft, there is the real blue sky canopied overhead, the real wind rustling through the corn tops or whipping the waves of the ocean into foam.

"The very cheapness and informality with which they may attend a motion picture theater has tended to make the pictures one with everyday life, while the stage has come to be looked upon as more or less of a luxury, an 'occasion' which could be indulged in less frequently, and must then be greatly prepared for by dressing the part.

"When they go to the theater, the majority of people want to feel that they have 'been some place.'

"They slip in and out of the motion picture theaters as if they were calling upon a neighbor.

"They want the motion picture actor to be natural. If he is not natural, if he is over-violent, and over-active, if his facial and muscular expression is overdrawn, the screen makes of him a grotesque caricature, because the camera eye catches not the modifying effects of color, or make-up, or of voice which, blended, would modify the same if perpetrated on the speaking stage before the human eye.

"We come, therefore, to the greatest difference between acting for the speaking stage and the silent stage—the only difference, perhaps. It is that of tempo and degree. The camera, that grim cyclops which knows no favoritism, nor palliates offences, requires a finer acting than the speaking stage. Thought, emotion, impulse—the fleeting whims and fancies of the mind must be expressed by motion and subtlety of action. The public demands a subtler acting—an ever-increasing subtlety of acting. Violence of movement which results in jerky, dispointed reproduction on the screen is not always inartistic. It is offensive.

"Therefore, the screen actor has always to keep in mind the fact that he must act more slowly and less vigorously than if he were on the stage with his voice; the diffusion of lights, the sound of music, the ensemble work aid each other in lessoning or enhancing the effects of his bodily and facial movements.

"If he refuses the obedience which the camera demands of her followers, he must suffer. In all the succeeding years that the finished picture is shown his mistake will be ruthlessly flaunted to the eyes of those who come to see. It reminds one of the line from Marc Anthony's speech, 'The evil men do live after them,' for live their mistakes shall as long as the film lasts.

"That very fact makes the motion picture one of the most effective training schools for actors. As they watch themselves in the lights and shadows of the screen, they see themselves as others see them, and as they have never seen themselves before; if they are intelligent, they profit by it. The mistake of an actor on the speaking stage may occur one night, and be remedied the next and ever afterwards. But no critic, however truthful, can represent his failing to him in as true a light as the camera can."

Ethel M. Corcoran

ETHEL MARGARET CORCORAN, one of the younger members of the Vitagraph Stock Company, longed to become an actress from her earliest recollection. When she approached her parents for permission to go on the stage they objected most strenuously and as a compromise decided to let her become a moving picture actress, and now, because of the compromise, she is in a fair way to become one of the stars in the ranks of motion picture artists.

Miss Corcoran was born in New York City on October 28th, 1895, and received her education at All Saints' Academy and Mt. St. Vincent High School.

When Miss Corcoran received permission to seek fame through posing in front of the camera, it was but natural she should make application to the Vitagraph Company, as their Flatbush studios were situated near her home, and to those who knew Miss Corcoran personally it was no surprise the ease with which she made the Vitagraph Stock. Her tryout was a triumph for the aspirant for motion picture honors, and Wilfrid North, who directed the first picture in which she posed, "Disciplining Daisy," was enthusiastic in praise of her work. Miss Corcoran's advancement has been steady rather than rapid, as she insists on becoming familiar with every detail of her work before taking the next step upward. The pictures in which she has already played prominent parts, include: "The Locked House," "Hearts and Diamonds," "C. O. D.," "War," "The Old Maid's Baby," "Father's Flirtation," and others. Miss Corcoran's record so far is one to be proud of, as she had absolutely no actual stage experience before joining the Vitagraph Company.

KALEM GETS A WAR ORDER.

"Send twenty score Maxim's" read a cablegram received by the Kalem Company from B. Nichols, its English representative, last week, after a British war censor had experienced palpitation of the heart before allowing it to pass, and the local Customs officials had sensed another ammunition purchase. But it was much ado about nothing, for the cable was just an order for twenty copies of the musical score for "Maxim's at Midnight." Though released some months ago, the four-reel feature is still going strong, and additional orders for the specially arranged score continue to come in both from this country and England.

AYRES PRODUCING "JOHN O' THE MOUNTAINS."

Sydney Ayres and his company of Universalities are still in the Bear Lake regions, where they have been for the past two weeks making exterior scenes in the production of F. McGrew Willis' three reel drama of the Canadian Northwest, "John o' the Mountains." Sydney Ayres plays the title role with Louella Maxam, T. V. Henderson and Dixie Carr supporting. Doris Pawn enters the picture during the second period, playing opposite Mr. Ayres.

WESTERN PLAZA THEATER, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

A Handsome and Up-to-Date Suburban Photoplay House—Advertises Its Weekly Program on Billboards—Structure Represents an Expenditure of $50,000.

ON JULY 31 the Western Hills Amusement Company of Cincinnati, Ohio, threw open for business the doors of a new moving picture theater which is very nearly the handsomest in Cincinnati; and this is the more significant in view of the fact that the house is one of the numerous and rapidly increasing class located at a considerable distance from the heart of the city, in a residence suburb. Price Hill, whose location suggested the name of the company and of the theater, is the suburb in question, and the new house, which is known as the Western Plaza, is easily the most luxurious and complete house in that part of the city.

The company was organized by business men in that part of the city, with Dennis F. Cash as president and John Weinig as secretary, and formed plans for the construction of a house which could show first-class feature productions at popular prices, with a seating capacity to justify the investment, and with sufficient inducements in the way of comfort and beauty to make sure of continued patronage when coupled with the kind of attractions referred to. The several smaller houses then doing business in Price Hill, while maintaining relatively high standards, could not in the nature of things meet this need, and this meant a real opportunity, in the opinion of those who formed the new company.

The company was exceptionally fortunate in being able to obtain an extremely favorable and roomy location, as the size of the house, 85 by 110 feet, clearly indicates. This made it possible to secure the desired large seating capacity, the exact figure being 740, and still to leave room for an adequate lobby, this part of the house measuring 24 feet wide, with a depth of 20 feet. The extreme width of the front was taken advantage of by constructing a small storeroom on each side of the entrance, and rentals from these of course help considerably in making a profit on the investment of $50,000. Architects Zettel & Rapp, a leading firm in Cincinnati, designed the house, and as they had virtually carte blanche in the matter of making it all that could be desired from the standpoints of comfort and convenience, within reasonable limits of cost, they produced a first-class theater in every respect. The decoration is especially attractive, the general color scheme of the interior being gray and ivory, worked out in ornamental terra cotta, with a series of panels painted with festoons of flowers in natural colors.

The house is absolutely fireproof. It is built throughout of non-combustible materials, and, furthermore, is so arranged as to make it practically impossible for a fire to get started, or, getting started, to make any progress. The floor is of concrete, sloping from the rear toward the stage in order to afford a good view of the screen from every part of the house, and the framework is also of that material. The walls are of brick, the front being of a handsome white enameled brick with white tile and terra cotta decorations. Wireglass windows are used throughout, while all of the doors and windows are metal-framed. In short, as stated, there is no place for a fire to start. A modern ventilating system, which furnishes an ample supply of fresh air and removes the stale air, guarantees complete comfort in this respect the year round; while a low-pressure steam-heating system will make the house popular during the cold months.

The operating room is entirely of metal, with a ventilating fan in the roof. A pair of Power's 6A projection machines are used, with a Wagner generator to convert the alternating current furnished to direct for the use of the machines. At present the machines are operated by hand, but it is probable that motors will be installed later, as the construction of the house is such that no objection from the underwriters or the fire department would be possible. The stage is 32 feet wide and 17 feet high, framing a screen 14 by 16 feet, which sits back six feet from the front of the stage. With the ample space given to the orchestra pit and in front of the first row of seats, there is a distance from these seats to the screen of about thirty feet, which makes them much better and more usable than front seats are in many houses. An attractive touch is given to the stage by the use of handsome red velour draperies instead of the conventional curtain and scenery, with its paper-doll effect, which so often spoils the realism which is the most valuable asset of moving pictures as contrasted with the stage.

Good lighting within and without is the rule, the management realizing fully the value of bright lights in connection with an amusement enterprise. Three handsome iron standards furnish the exterior lighting, one at the corner and two immediately in front of the theater. The interior lighting is of the indirect type, six chandeliers, each furnished with four 100-watt nitrogen lamps, being suspended from the ceiling, while six brackets at the sides, each equipped with a single lamp of the same size as the others, give additional light. When all are on between pictures the interior has a soft light which is quite equal to daylight and is entirely without the disagreeable glare which characterizes direct lighting. Following the feature-a-night policy, which is a necessity with this as with other suburban houses, drawing upon a comparatively limited clientele, the Western Plaza has used successfully the better productions of practically all of the leading companies, including the V-L-S-E, the World, the Metro, the Fox, and others. Evening performances only are given, except on Sunday, when a matinee is staged. The admission charge is maintained uniformly at ten cents. Music is furnished by an orchestrion-organ which was manufactured by the Symphony Player Company.

Interior of the Western Plaza Theater, Cincinnati, Ohio.

A neatly uniformed staff of doormen and ushers takes care of patrons and completes the air of "class" and dignity which has been attained in every detail. The Western Plaza is altogether a distinctly creditable addition to the large number of first-class houses in Cincinnati, and its continued success seems well assured. A means of advertising the attractions of the theater which has proved very efficient is the use of large billboards on each of the car lines which serve that part of the city. Each is large enough to hold seven three-sheet posters, and the entire week's program is thus spread before residents of the suburb as they pass by on the cars to and from the city.

UFFORD WILL SOON OPEN THEATER.

Ray R. Ufford's moving picture theater now being built in Wa-Keeney, Kan., will be opened on December 10 next. The dimensions of the structure are 25 by 100 feet, and it will accommodate 300 persons. The "New Garden" will be the name of the new photoplay house.

NEW THEATER FOR ANNAPOLIS.

Philip Miller, Annapolis, Ind., opened in that city on November 8 his new photoplay house. The structure has a seating capacity of 600. The screen is 16 by 18 feet in size and is placed 105 feet from the operating room. Two Power's 6A machines are used. The house is artistically finished, and is furnished with all up-to-date equipment.

FILMS FOR CULTURE.

The most recent organization interested in educational pictures is that of the Universal Culture Lyceum with headquarters in New York.

This society, organized under charter of the State of New York, has for its purpose the most advanced kinematographic instruction possible.

It is intended to establish branches throughout the United States, to utilize theatres, halls and other available places where every class of educational pictures may be shown without profit resulting to it. They state that the films presented are to be of a high character, intended to secure the development of the highest moral and spiritual instincts of the public. The incorporators are well known men in New York and Cleveland. Organizations of this kind are not surprising, indeed they are only the natural outgrowth of the spreading uses of the picture, especially as in these days, culture and efficiency are the watchwords of progress.

SURGICAL INSTRUCTION.

Conventions of medical societies now are never without the illustrated lecture. While this fact has been previously noticed, its reappearance is emphasized from the fact that therefrom goes out the fact, that now, the moving picture is making even more rapid strides, in the education of medical and surgical students. At a recent Southern Medical Association an eminent physician (a specialist in children's diseases) used the moving picture to illustrate new methods of administering nitro-oxygen anaesthesia, with the patient in a sitting posture, a new and easier position than reclining for certain operations. A series of pictures showing the operation for the removal of tonsils was also shown, and, as a result of these exhibitions, more successful and beneficial results have been obtained.

In Kansas, the health authorities are going to use the moving picture to instruct people generally to fight off certain diseases peculiar to each season of the year. The secretary of the State board of health says that "pictures showing the source of typhoid fever, tuberculosis, smallpox, measles and diphtheria will be exhibited in every county."

Proper personal hygiene and preventive methods also will be portrayed. In many instances in the endeavor to hold attention to the pictures, they have been made with a story running through them.

TRAVELING WITH PICTURES.

Wherever a railroad car can go the moving picture may now go with it. The train scheduled for a long journey may have its picture theatre even as the ocean liner, relieving the traveler of hours of tedious weariness. The most remote country district also may now be visited by the "theatre-car" and the pictures made as nearly omnipresent as they are well nigh omnipotent in educative value.

A patent has recently been granted to a Russian inventor residing in Michigan, whereby the railway car becomes a picture theatre. In the design of the car by Anton Truchan, the floor is set at an angle so that those in the rear may see as well as those in the front. The windows of the car present an odd appearance from the outside as they are round like large port-holes, and are set at an angle, running parallel to the angle of the floor.

The operator's booth is a compartment placed just inside the door of the rear vestibule, and is set above the floor so that the projecting rays may clear the heads of the audience. While a future pleasure to the traveling public, the primary purpose of the car is an educational one, intended for urban districts where every kind of juvenile and adult educational subjects suitable to the locality may be given; the future usefulness of this car cannot be exaggerated.

NEW WAR PICTURES.

This month saw the beginning of the exhibition of the most genuine and thorough war pictures yet shown. In New York City two sets are promised, one by a war correspondent—a Mr. Powell who seems rightfully to claim to have an illustrated series of pictures taken under British authority and supervision in Flanders.

The second series "Fighting in France" is under the auspices of the New York World. The authority of General Joffre is given as permitting the pictures to be taken in the heart of the French sectors. Without doubt these will be tremendously attractive, full of vital interest, thrilling as depicting the story of the world's greatest conflict, and in a most varied degree educational.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Let the Rooster Crow.

WHOOPS! We have commented on the campaign of the Majestic theater, Grand Junction, Colorado, against the Sunday closing law, and have other exhibitors to follow their example in using their house organs to combat this and similar questions, whether the need is real or still in the future.

Now the Movie Fan comes out with an election extra in which the vote is announced as 1,102 as against 669, the majority favoring the retention of the Sunday photoplay. Not a single precinct was carried by the adherents of the closing movement.

The Movie Fan did not violently attack the bill. It spoke strongly against it, but it offered argument and testimony instead of abuse with a resultant vote of nearly two to one. It was not, of course, the Movie Fan alone that brought about this result. Credit, too, must be given the inherent intelligence of the voter, but unquestionably the house organ did a good work in educating the doubtful and those who were not blinded by fanaticism. More than once the local censorship question has been met and defeated in the same way, but the time to prepare is now and not when the fight begins. In most conflagrations there is a moment when a cup of water will extinguish a blaze that later an entire fire department may not be able to drown out. Slosh the cupful now.

Meanwhile our heartiest congratulations to the Majestic management.

Coinage.

Because of their general admission price, the People's Theater Co., Potlatch, Idaho, has invented a new coin, the fifteen cent piece. It is very simple and not in opposition to the Federal law. You take a dime and a nickel and a drop of glue. Roger R. Reynolds writes that he has purchased our book, Helpful Hints, and finds it the best thing of its kind he has ever read. He may mean Picture Theater Advertising. We have written no book titled Helpful Hints. From some of the stuff in the vest pocket he sends, we gather that he must mean P. T. A. He writes further:

> Some time ago I wrote you asking for a sample of a vest-pocket program and you replied that you had none so I got busy and have been three months getting the inclosed into shape. I want your criticism of it and would appreciate any advice you have to give as to how I can improve it. I have gotten a little away from the vest-pocket size, but this was necessary as I needed the space.

Will someone please send Mr. Reynolds one of those Vanity-Case-Vest-Pockets. His V. P. is 3¼ by 7 inches, and it takes a darned big man to get away with a vest to match that size. He might go further and make it a regular program or condense for a real vest pocket. As it stands it is a compromise. Since it works for a whole month, the better plan would be to make it a program and, if desired, supplement with a real V. P. He runs his subjects for two and three days and so the four pages will care for the month and some house chat as well. He uses small type, but a readable face, and when you get body type it really pays to use eight point instead of twelve or fourteen, even if it does cost more to set. Eight point makes this look regular, and we can suggest no decided improvement other than making it an eight, with two pages of outside advertising and some more house talk. Still we might urge instead of saying "Sat., Oct. 2," he say "Sat. to Mon., Oct. 2-3-4."

In some circular work he does well, but he overlooks one point. In one throwaway he says:

Early to bed
And early to rise
And you won't
Meet any nice people
And you'll miss
And the title of the story.

If you use some familiar saying, do something to really justify its use; something that will more closely unite attractor with the text, for instance:

Early to bed and early to rise
And you'll miss some shows that will open your eyes
For instance
The Sagebrush Gal Oct. 30

and so on for the rest of the space.

Send a V. P. to Mr. Reynolds.

Long Distance.

P. R. Matson, of the Crystal, Flandreau, S. D., seems to hold the long distance record. His programs are for six weeks at a time, four days a week, which is the capacity of the town for absorption. Mr. Matson uses a Hennegan cover with two and three lines to the day, and gets it all very comfortably into the space with room on the back page for house talk.

All Right.

E. C. O'Keefe, of the Majestic, Billings, Mont., writes:

> Loosen up and tell us what you think of these. If you don't like 'em say so, Gol durn you.

We'll be amenable to reason. We like 'em. We said so first issue. We see no reason to change opinion. In either pages Mr. O'Keefe gets in all his bill and some sound house chat. Only, he doesn't date his days.

Vale!

Frank D. Stanton, builder of the Autogobile, and inventor of many unique ideas, formerly of the Orpheum, Gardner, Mass., and more recently of Amherst, is dead. Mr. Stanton was a real manager and was always willing to help others with his suggestions. We shall sincerely miss him.

Like a Circus.

Unless someone can beat the record, it would appear that William Woodin is the first manager of a photoplay theater to run railroad excursions to his show. The Heart of Jennifer was made in the vicinity of Towanda, Pa., so when Mr. Woodin got the film for his Keystone Opera House he arranged with the railroad to get up an excursion train and this was done. The admission to the house was fifteen cents. The excursion rates ranged from seventy-five cents to double that sum. The date was Oct. 18. Can any one beat this record? We do not think so. And remember that the railroad did the advertising. Pretty soft?

Get Away from There!

F. H. Young, of the Iris, Salisbury, N. C., contemplates raising his program to eight pages and wants some samples. Will Mr. Wiby and others please oblige? Mr. Young sends in some of his old four pagers "to be roasted." Mr. Young has not the right idea of this department. If things are not done well we say so, but there is a difference between constructive criticism and what is popularly known as "roasting." Mr. Young got out a pretty good four pager, but there is no use dissecting dead horse. We'll be glad to comment on the new issue, but we won't "roast" it.

Please send in your eight pagers to Mr. Young, pronto.

Title Talks.

Ben Title, one of the veteran exhibitors, writes:

> It gives me great pleasure to comment upon your MOVING PICTURE WORLD issued each week, as being a most valuable asset to every exhibitor, judging from my own standpoint of view after being a user of same for the past eight years. It proved its value with me by aiding to get my weekly programs in good shape, as it gives me all the information necessary in the way of short synopsis thereby giving to my patrons in brief the story of a feature picture which they wish to see.
> I am also glad to mention the fact as to its value in all its departments, which I trust every Exhibitor has found it to be the same as I do.

Mr. Title's house, the T-N-F, is located in Brooklyn. He uses a very simple program, a four-page issue on white news, printed in black. He runs mostly features and tells only enough of the story to whet the interest without revealing the outcome. Instead of giving all of the details of The Circular Staircase, for instance, he says:

> A PLAY ABOUNDING IN MYSTERY AND THRILLS.
> Who murdered the man at the foot of the staircase? Who was the mysterious visitor to the secret room? Who was it that fell to his death? These questions and others are satisfactorily answered when the plot of this play is unfolded.

This is much better. You can go to see a performance without knowing beforehand just how it comes out, and the full synopsis program is as irritating as the man who sits in the theater and tells you in advance what is coming next. Mr. Title not only reads this paper, but he learns things.

Mr. Title varies the usual line by urging that you "Save your programs. You may want to spend an evening with us."

Neat.

M. E. Gjedstead, an Australian exhibitor, recently opened the Sellwood, a locality house in Portland, Oregon. Instead of the usual stock he uses a deep brown card printed in black, a good combination where, as in this case, the black is deep enough. A strong blue would have been better still, preferably a glossy ink.

Bright and Readable.

One thing the English exhibitor who has a house organ is compelled to go against is the "penny weekly," a snappy nonsense sheet publication, the equivalent of which is not known over here. If he wants to have his paper read he must make it readable, not merely informative. E. Richard Eadie, resident manager of Shipcote Hall, Gateshead, sends in three of his house publications, of which he has 8,000 printed weekly, half being distributed by carriers and the remainder in the hall, which has a capacity of 1,500, so this does not take long. One page is reserved for the program advertisement and this is page three, in accordance with the best form. The rest is largely made up of snappy paragraphs about films and film players who will be seen at the house, and a few germane jokes. He does not talk current program, for he knows that he must coax his patrons with reading matter; a point wherein many sheets over here fail. Peculiarly suggestive of the times is the story of the cinema pianist who was fired for playing "We don't want to lose you, but we think you ought to go," when a topical showing a military funeral was on the screen.

The publication merely supplements the newspaper and other advertising, but we think that it is the most valuable of the three forms because it is well done.

Small But Neat.

One of the friends of this department who gets about a great deal, sends in a couple of programs from the Grand, Fairmount, West Virginia, and explains that the manager would have sent them on himself, only he thought we had enough without. We get a lot of contributions, but we always appreciate a chance to see the work of others, because that is how we keep others posted as well as ourselves.

The Grand program is a small four pager, the inside pages given over to the program. The back page is the underline and the form of this is changed to give variety. Each section of the weekly program is started with a dated day and each is wound up with a six-point line giving the times of performance. This schedule is not varied, but it is given for each day so that if a particular show interests you, you do not have to look all over the program for the time of showing, but the time table is the next natural line. We have seen this done where shows varied in length according to the feature, but not before where the hours remained unchanged, and yet it is an excellent scheme.

And the program announcements are intelligent. When such widely contrasting stories as Bootles Baby and The Man on the Case form one bill, the management remarks that "These two stories include every element of dramatic composition," which adds interest to the announcement and suggests the variety possible in photoplay programs.

In Alaska.

The Dream theater, Juneau, Alaska, sends in two very nice pieces of advertising, not at all what might be expected from a new country, but Alaska is not the rough mining camp it is supposed to be, and the house goes after business in big-city fashion.

One card seems to have been originally intended for a gift card, and not for advertising stock at all. It carries the emblems of the four suits in cards in the corners in proper color and an appropriate motto. Below is the name of the house; nothing more and not in a type large enough to operate against the tacking up the card in the home. The reverse is printed up with an announcement of the theater rather than a film, since the card is supposed to last beyond the week of distribution. The other card uses the familiar "The time—the place and the girl," these lines being in red with black type to give the date, the house and the announcement of Miss Pickford.

Both cards are above the average and we hope that W. H. Thompson, who manages the house, will put us on the permanent mailing list.

Umbrellas.

Film Facts, the Metro's Boston organ, tells of a scheme of a Maine exhibitor in a recent issue in which it says:

> The Casco Theater, Portland, Me., springs another new one that might frighten the average exhibitor. Here an announcement is thrown upon the screen that in case of rain the management will loan each of its patrons an umbrella which will be called for the next day. When it actually starts to rain, another slide is thrown upon the screen, reading: "It is raining outside. Write your name and address on a slip of paper, and the management will loan you an umbrella as you leave the theater." The management reports that, contrary to expectation, very few umbrellas are lost, and as it fortunately secured a big lot of these for a remarkably low price, the investment is small, after all. Certainly, it must create a great deal of good feeling for the management, and I pass it along to the exhibitors for what it is worth.

That is good as far as it goes, but there are several umbrella schemes described in Picture Theater Advertising, at least one of which is a better business getter. Now that the winter is nearly here it will pay to keep an eye on umbrellas as a means of building business. They may be had in lots of one hundred or more for as little as $25 a hundred. If you do not know where, a return envelope to this department will bring you the information.

Starting In.

John A. Snider, of the Grand and Royal, Bessemer, Ala., sends in number six of a house program he is running apparently to carry the story of "Neal of the Navy," with a weekly program in front of it. The issue is a trifle crude in looks yet, for when Mr. Snider doesn't write enough stuff to fill he just leaves a hole or runs one column to the page instead of two, and this makes it look unfinished. It is straight machine composition, a page to a day. It would be a good plan to "double up" the stuff under the date, cut off the bottom with double rule and there run either display advertising or house or film chat to fill all of the pages. This will add a little to the cost of composition, but it will be worth the extra money to get in touch with your patrons. Doubling up, it might be explained, is to take a column story and run it in the top halves of two columns, leaving the lower space blank for other matter instead of running it all in one column and using other matter or white space under the other half of the head. The program is a good starter, but it can be made to work much harder if house talk is added. This chance to get into intimate touch with your patrons is worth the extra cost of composition and more.

Celebrating.

The Regent theater, Pittsburgh, celebrated its anniversary by raising its prices from ten to twenty cents and building up the program and house service generally, which is an excellent way of assuring their celebration of the next anniversary. For the week the house organ was raised to sixteen pages and a part of this was taken up with a frank and convincing explanation of the reasons for the increased admission fee, an explanation that should convince anyone in search of the best.

They print their issue in green, which is a mean ink to work, as a rule. We think that a change to brown or blue would give them better cut impression with the same amount of care. Most greens and reds, save in the most expensive grades, do not work as well as browns and blues.

Next time they have an announcement they particularly desire to have read, and read carefully, they should emphasize with italic or full face lower case and not all upper case. The eye will not take in a dozen lines of solid upper case. There is nothing to use for landmarks, no tails to the letters to break the even monotony of the line. Here they have 25 lines of all caps not even leaded.

In a general way the program is an excellent one.

Coupon Tickets.

S. S. Stevenson, of the Princess, Henderson, N. C., sends in some coupon ticket-programs with this explanation:

> I read the "Advertising for Exhibitors" first, then the other things as they come. While I have contributed very little to this department, I get very valuable ideas from it and use a great many in getting up my advertisements.
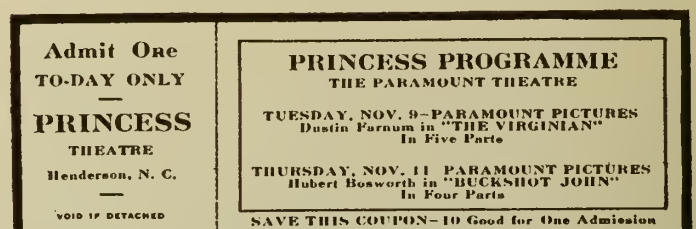
> I am enclosing samples of coupon tickets that I am now using to great advantage. While I have never seen this special scheme in your department, it may have been worked by other exhibitors. You will note that the coupon gives our feature program for the following week, and as there is a value attached to each one of these, they are never thrown away and this keeps the program before them constantly. These are issued each week, using different color ink or different color board, the pink board always being used for children's 5c tickets.

This is an exceptionally clever scheme, and for the benefit of those who wish to follow the idea, we reproduce the ticket itself. In the original it is 4¾ by 1½ inches, white stock, but a different colored ink for each issue and as a further safeguard there is a date stamp on the back. We think it would be even better to use a large figure and require ten consecutive numbers for a free admission. As Mr. Stevenson points out, the card is kept and therefore the program is always accessible. The child's ticket is on pink instead of white stock. Probably there is likely to be no argument, but it would be well if these were printed on the back with a legend to the effect that the ticket is good only for a five cent admission.



Most managers will be willing to give eleven admissions for the price of ten in order to have their programs kept and studied. They should be, if they are not.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throw-aways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. Mr. Sargent tells all he knows and this includes what several hundred successful exhibitors have told him. More than 100 examples. An introduction and then 200 pages of solid text. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. Handsome clothboard binding. By mail, postpaid, $2.00.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Inquiries.

Questions concerning the writing (but NOT the marketing of) photoplays will be replied to without charge if addressed to the Photoplaywright Department and accompanied by a fully addressed stamped envelope. Questions must be typewritten or written with pen and ink.

Questions as to the financial standing of concerns or the probable markets for specific or certain styles of stories cannot be answered.

In no case and under no circumstance will any manuscript or synopsis be handled and if sent will be returned without reply.

A list of addresses of producing companies will be sent if the request is made direct to the publication office, but not where request is made to this department.

Slush.

RANDALL PARRISH, if he is correctly quoted on page 1003 of the current volume of this paper, must be a singular sort of poseur. He deprecates the showing of a film feature of his in his home town because, to his mind, "it is of very insignificant importance when compared to my other work," and "no more than an incident in my daily work." He is quite at a loss to understand the furore that has arisen and he is "more ashamed than gratified" at the congratulations of his friends. He declares that this shower of congratulations leaves him speechless, but unfortunately it does not, for he prattles along for a couple of hundred words, including the statement that the only difficulty he has is in writing badly enough to suit the producers.

Mr. Parrish reveals a singularly curious state of mind. He evolved a photoplay that seems to have overshadowed his other literary work, possibly because the presentation in picture gives to the story a flesh and blood quality his fiction lacks. Instead of being pleased, he is somewhat peeved—in public—and takes the pose that his gigantic brain can dash off these successes in the "lowest grade of literary endeavor."

It is not likely that he will suffer mental anguish from many of these chance hits, for no writer who approaches his work in this spirit can possibly hope to be more than an accident. Such men as the leading French and English dramatists do not hesitate to take a pride in their work, and by work we mean not the arrangement of their stage successes, but their direct writing for screen production. Here in America many well-known writers have produced photoplays of merit and have seemed to take a pride in doing good work. They have not sought to write badly enough to suit the producers; they have tried to give the best that is in them and have sought to raise the standard of the work, not to further lower it. It is true that some of them regard the work lightly, such as Ellis Parker Butler, who recently contributed a magazine story in which he derived supposed humor from his experiences with a film man, but Mr. Butler seems to regard the work lightly, else he never would have rewritten "Pigs Is Pigs" into "Hats Is Hats." He would have sought a new thought instead of using second-hand materials.

Authors who take their work lightly are either incompetent to write good plays or they seek, by their pose, to hide their well-paid disgrace. For that matter, we can remember the time when well-known players used to slink into the studios and keep the fact a secret for the sake of their professional standing with the theatrical producers, but now even the real stars of the stage welcome the chance to work in the new medium, and it is not long to the time when the writing of photoplays will be regarded as an art; not the writing of such sort of plays as Mr. Parrish and others have written, but plays of real merit based upon literary qualification and not upon melodramatic sensation.

Although the technique of the photoplay and the technique of the stage are two very different matters, the earnest student of the photoplay generally adds some volume on playwriting to his library when he has made sufficient advancement. Technique of Playwriting, by Charlton Andrews, is the latest addition to The Writer's Library series of the Home Correspondence School.

The book, which has an introduction by J. Berg Esenwein, is a plain and practical dissection of the art of playwriting in which the author states clearly and understandably the fundamental principles of dramatic art, much of which is equally applicable to photoplay. It is a book simply written, with ample illustrations drawn from current and standard dramatic literature, clearly understood by those who have not seen the plays of which mention is made. It is not only a text book, but a teaching book, as well, and therefore to be recommended. (The Technique of Playwriting, by Charlton Andrews, Home Correspondence School, Springfield, Mass. 295 pp. By mail, $1.62.)

A Photodrama-tist.

On top of two Photodramas comes The Photo-dramatist, by Willard Bradley, who offers under this title an essay on photoplays, a pseudo romance aimed to expound the lesson that only the unusual sells, three paragraphs of advice from D. W. Griffith, and the sample script of one of his two reel stories. He disavows any intention to teach the art of writing and makes no attempt to do so. It is rather a brief little volume, but interesting and of service, if only it gets to the would-be writer the message that only the unusual will sell.

Quite So.

William Lord Wright, in reply to someone who wanted to know what chance the amateur writer has at present, points out that the amateur of today can become the professional of tomorrow. This is a point that too many overlook. Don't kick because your present weak scripts will not sell. Dig in again and figure out how nice it will be to be able to write scripts that will sell when scripts will be bringing double what they do now.

The stars of today were the rank amateurs of 1910 to 1912. We know, because we knew them and their achievements then and we know what they are doing and what they are getting now. Some of these will drop out by 1918 and people will be needed to take their places. As it is there are not enough to go round and we were unable the other day to place a rush order for a really good two reel drama.

You are making no money to speak of now, perhaps, but you are going to collect for 1915 a couple of years from now and you'll collect with compound interest if you buckle right down to work now and perfect yourself against collection time.

Equitable Wants.

This from Russell E. Smith, who edits for Equitable along with Marc Edmund Jones:

> We are in the market for the highest class stories suitable for production as five-reel features either in synopsis form or completed scripts. We want only stories that are big, really big in theme and purpose in drama and situation, rather than big in masses of men and exploding steamships and such usual dramatic plots, which usually pass for big stories; the bigness of the price we will pay will be commensurate with the bigness of the story, and our lowest price will be $100.00 per reel, but we want stories that are worth a great deal more than that. We want them from authors of great reputation, from novelists and playwrights, as well as from strictly photoplaywrights. We are frank in saying that we believe playwrights and novelists who write stories especially adapted for the screen, will give us more of the material we want than the strictly photoplaywright. This is in no way derogatory to the photoplaywright in particular, but it is obvious that the trained writer of books, plays and stories, as a plot builder, is bound to have something worth doing in more cases than the photoplaywright.
> It has long been said that the photoplaywright has never had a chance to do really big work, that the manufacturers did not want the big themes, etc., we do, and if the photoplaywright of today is as good as we hope he or she is, we would like to see them send us something that they think is too good for the average film company to produce.
> The script should be addressed to the undersigned personally to 140 West 46th street, and will be given immediate action.

Usefulness.

Writing for advice, a correspondent says that she sent two stories to a certain company. They were returned. Later she sold this, one to a licensed and the other to an independent concern. She adds:

> Since both of these sold, I presume that the Blank company is not in the market for outside scripts, or they would have taken these.

That does not necessarily follow. The companies she names have very widely differing standards of production. One goes in for the melodramatic, one for straight drama and one for novelties. The company wishing melodrama did not purchase the stories because they did not want them; not because they possessed no merit. The rejection by that company was in no sense an indication of a lack of merit nor did it proclaim that they were not buying because they are regularly in the market.

A company buys what it wants to make. It does not merely purchase good stories suited to the style of production for which they are best equipped. Kalem regularly releases railroad stories because it specializes in the Helen series. It does not follow that any other company will buy railroad stories merely because Kalem does. Kalem has regular arrangements for the use of a road. Other companies would have to make a special arrangement. The rejection of a railroad story would not argue a lack of merit in the script, but a lack of facilities on the part of the company to which the script was submitted. On the other hand Kalem would not take animal plays that Selig or the Universal might, and there you are again. Know your market thoroughly. It is half of the selling campaign to know just where to send with the best chance of selling.

Unwise.

Claude L. Barker in a recent letter calls attention to a phase of study that is never wise, the exchanging of criticism with other students not personally known to the author. At the solicitation of a New York writer Mr. Barker entered into such an exchange and now the young man at the New York end has removed from his old address and Mr. Barker is minus one script.

Do not trust your scripts to persons entirely unknown to you. It is seldom that you will profit by criticism and almost positive that in some way you will have reason to regret the transaction. In the present case it does not appear that the man who solicited the exchange of ideas is competent to help in the least. He seems to be one of those who are forever seeking to replace study by some short cut.

Miracles.

Positively the days of miracles are over, and yet the student of photoplay writing still seems to think that the miraculous must happen. It does not. You cannot write plays that will sell until you have learned to write plays that are worthy of acceptance, and to expect sales before then is to demand the miraculous.

One student writes that he wrote six plays a couple of years ago and then quit in discouragement. A year later he tried again and wrote seven. Now he has a copy of Technique of the Photoplay, has written twenty-one more and is beginning to receive encouragement from the editors. He thinks that if he could see a release slip now and then he would be much encouraged.

Another man writes that he has been working for more than a year and has no sales to his credit. He toils over three-reel scripts for about a month each and then sends them out and they come back. He thinks that perhaps a book on Technique will help him and asks for titles and addresses. Also he asks if it is possible for an energetic and patient person to get real help and encouragement.

The real help and encouragement comes from noting your progress; from seeing that you are doing better work and from the knowledge that when you have done your task you will be a fully-qualified writer.

One man writes three-reel stories, and does about twelve a year. He does not do one-reel stories first and learn how to write. He has heard that three-reel stories sell best, and the selling end is his sole guide. He does not realize that he must first have something to sell. It is not merely stories that he should offer for sale. He must offer stories that are backed by a well-grounded knowledge of his business. George Randolph Chester gets more for his work then John Henry Jones, because he offers better ideas in better technical form. Technique alone does not sell, nor does idea alone, but idea plus technique sells at sight, if it is the right sort of an idea for the studio to which it is sent.

The second of the correspondents quoted is working along entirely incorrect lines. When he went to school he learned to spell a-n-t and c-a-t before he tackled many-syllabled words, but he plunges in on three-reel stories without a guide of any sort, wastes a whole month on a single story because three reelers are intricate, and then ships right out in the hope of making a sale, instead of waiting to see if he has done good work by comparing it with the next.

Ball players are regarded good if they can bat an average of .300, but a higher percentage is expected of writers. They must bat in the neighborhood of .600 to play in the big league, and the man who merely makes a fluke home run and cannot take a repeat is not worth bothering about.

It should be the aim of the beginner to first get a groundwork of experience before seeking to make sales. It may be possible, now and then, to sell a story, but this does positive hurt, unless you can continue to offer stories of the same average quality. It does no good whatever to make the sale of a single script that rouses expectation and hope and follow this with twenty rankly amateurish stories. Long before the twentieth has been sent in the author is marked down as an accident, and no great consideration is given his further work.

If you write ten stories and sell the eleventh, you are hacked up only by those ten. If you write a hundred, you have more than ten times the practical knowledge back of your work and are better qualified to push your success. In writing a hundred stories you have made many errors in judgment which, if you recognize them, will enable you to avoid the same mistakes in your later work. Of course, if you cannot profit by mistakes, if you cannot see wherein you have been wrong in the light of greater knowledge, then it does not matter how many scripts you may write, but if you can write and study what you write, it will be better for you by far to make your first sale on your two hundredth script than on your second story, for you will then be able to come right back at the editor with more stories of the same grade.

If only the beginners could be made to realize this, the studio mails and the post office revenues would be smaller, but the average of acceptances would be much higher and all of the scripts would command more respectful attention. As the conditions are today the studio reader approaches the mail in the belief that there will be nothing worth while. He reads in that belief and generally is convinced he is right. Most always he is, but now and then a good idea will get past him, merely because he has been tired by the mass of junk that has gone before.

To command attention in the general mail, a script must be of unusual excellence, not merely a little better than the rest. Look at a regiment on parade. In the ranks each man is dressed precisely like his fellows and no one man stands out above the rest, but a soldier wearing a red cap or a brass helmet in a line of a thousand men all wearing blue caps precisely alike will stand out above the rest. Put red caps on your scripts if you expect to sell them, and do not send them out until they are dressed up to that point.

Cleaning Typewriters.

It really isn't the province of this department to tell how to clean machines, but a typewriter is the most important part of the author's equipment, and we feel for the man who writes:

> How can I clean my typewriter without sending it away? I live too far from the city to send it in, and, anyhow, I could not spare it for that long. It is all dirty and just brushing doesn't seem to do the work—nor does oiling.

We gather that the machine is gummed up with a mixture of dust and dried oil that will not respond to ordinary cleaning. In the repair shops they have tanks filled with gasoline into which the machines are immersed to free them from the accumulation. If you can plan to immerse your machine in a pan of gasoline, well and good. If you have no vessel large enough, get a gallon of gasoline and a small syringe of the plunger type. Take the machine as far from the house as possible, after removing the carriage with its rubber rollers, and spray all working parts with the gas. Treat the carriage with gas applied by means of a brush, being careful to let none of the fluid get on the rollers. Then let the gasoline evaporate and thoroughly, but lightly, oil all bearing parts.

Most of the trouble is due to putting on a lot of oil once every month or six weeks instead of a very little every few days. The excess oil collects the dirt and presently forms a crust that must be soaked off.

In a pinch kerosene will serve, but this must be wiped off.

Wow!

Here is a new argument for the acceptance of a script. A young lady of Kansas wants to have her script taken that she may be able to afford a school course and so make a greater nuisance of herself than ever. Anyhow, she writes one of the larger companies thus:

> Enclosed please find photoplay manuscript entitled "The Great Promise." Won't you please read it and give me a small sum for it? I don't mean to ask charity, but any amount would do as I am anxious to take up a course to be competent to write those that are worth while. Won't you help me out? Every little helps.

The young woman's ambition is better than her judgment.

Prices.

A correspondent who writes with more force than elegance suggests that we must be one of the Board of Governors of the Annanias Club because we said that prices were much better, and he is not getting above twenty-five dollars a reel for his stories.

If it will give him any joy, we'll take the presidency of the club, but the other day we asked the editor of a feature concern if he had heard that another company had paid $700 for three and a half pages of synopsis and he not only had, but added that his own company had paid a flat thousand for the synopsis of a five-reel story. The fact had not been announced because they did not want to hire a special policeman to stand in front of the editorial department, but it is a fact, none the less. But these fancy payments are being made only for the most exceptional stuff and not for the average.

Two Cut-Ins.

Although it seems to be rather late in the day, a correspondent wants to know if it is permissible to use two cut-in leaders in one scene. His idea is to run a scene something like this:

14—Parlor—Jack and Jessie on—Smith enters—looks from one to the other, then says—

Cut-In—"Is it true that you are married?"

Jack looks at Jessie for permission to tell—she makes frantic signals not to, then changes her mind and nods yes—Jacks says—

Cut-In—"Sure! We were married last Thursday."

Smith smiles—kisses Jessie and shakes hands with Jack. All exit.

This is frequently done, and not only is it done, but were it not desired to have the silent consultation between the young couple, it would be permissible to run the leader:

Father—"Is it true that you are married?"

Jack—"Sure! We were married last Thursday."

This is being done with growing frequency, though the double speech in a single leader is generally awkward and a thing to be avoided.

Can't Be Done.

When you sell something you sell it. If you sell it provisionally, have those provisions a part of the bill of sale.

An author writes that he sent a story to a certain company. It was written as a two-reel story but they offered him a one-reel price, which he accepted, supposing that it would be cut down to one reel. He is surprised to find it released in three reels and wants to know if he cannot collect for the other two reels.

He cannot. If he will recall the wording of the release slip or assignment which he signed, he will remember that it did not say anything about a two-reel story. He merely sold all rights to a certain story. Even if it did say on the release that it was a two-reel story, this does not give him any advantage. He sold the story for two reels and by his signature he acknowledges that it was two reels. If a third reel is padded in, he has no recourse whatever, for the assignment was probably worded to permit the company to make any desired changes. The only thing to do is to refuse the next time to sell a two-reel story at the one-reel price. That's all.

Technique of the Photoplay

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 116.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theatre managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

Assuming the shutter to be just right, would there be any difference in the outside shutter dimensions where an 18 foot picture is being projected 50 feet, and where a 12 foot picture is being projected 100 feet? Assuming the same conditions, what difference would there be, if any, if the shutter be an outside one?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 110.

Question 110 evidently was a corker, as only three replies were anywhere near correct, viz: those of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, New York, and Wilson Hays, Barton, Maryland.

I think on the whole,however, that whereas these three are entitled to go on the Roll of Honor, it will be more satisfactory if I dictate a reply to question 110 myself.

Reply to Question No. 110.

By F. H. Richardson, New York City.

The Question:

What is a "quarter size," "half size," "full size" lens? What is meant by "stopping down" a lens, and why is it sometimes done? What objection is there to the type of objective which focuses by twisting the lens barrel? Where should the lens focusing screw be placed, and why? How would you test your lenses for distortion of the picture?

The Answer:

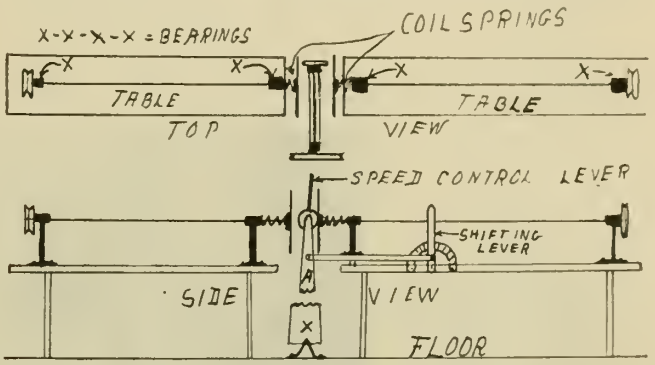
"Quarter size," "half size," "full size" were terms used some years ago with relation to the diameter of lenses, full size being what was known as 4/4, and, as I remember it, about 3½ inches in diameter. The use of these terms, however, is being discontinued. The only one which has been to any extent used with connection to moving picture projection is the half size, which has to some extent been applied by operators to the Gundlach No. 2 lens, though the Gundlach No. 2 has not the diameter of that which was formerly known as the "half size" lens. "Stopping down" a lens means reducing its diameter by inserting a ring made of paper or metal, usually against the front combination. "Stopping down" is resorted to where there is difficulty in getting clear definition when one has a heavy pitch in projection or a side throw, since it has the effect of eliminating the weakest portion of the lens, viz: its outer edges; it is also used to some extent in eliminating travel ghost where a lens of large diameter is used. The objection to using a lens which focuses by twisting the lens barrel is that one rarely gets a lens in which the rotating of the barrel will not change the position of the picture on the screen, and while projection lenses are better made, and better mounted now, it was no uncommon thing in the older days to get a lens which would raise, lower or move the picture sideways as much as one foot in a complete rotation of the barrel. The lens focusing screw should be placed where the operator can readily reach it, and this means at the aperture side of the projector, though its exact location would depend on the kind of machine used. The reason for placing it there is that in order to secure the very best results it is sometimes necessary to change the focus slightly on different scenes of a reel. There is not so much of that now as there used to be, but nevertheless the fault does to some extent still exist, and unless the lens focusing screw is in a very convenient location the operator is not going to bother to sharpen the focus in the various scenes of a reel.

To test an objective lens for distortion one should cut a piece of good, stiff mica (not a thin piece, which might buckle when the tension springs come down on it) and with a perfectly straight rule lay off perfectly straight lines on its surface, using the point of a knife, or other similar sharp tool for the purpose. These lines should be laid both ways, and about one-eighth to one-fourth of an inch apart. Place this mica over the aperture and close the gate, then project the light to the screen, and stretch a string along some of the lines, both horizontal and perpendicular. If they are perfectly straight, as they are on the mica, the lens has no distortion; if the lines are not straight, then the lens has distortion, and is not producing the best possible results.

Return Thanks.

William M. Bigler, Dallastown, Pennsylvania, writes:

After being a constant reader of the department ever since it started, and receiving many helpful ideas therefrom, I think it is about time to return thanks to whom thanks are due. (Am thankful that you feel thankful enough to send thanks. Thank you.—Ed.) I do not consider myself by any manner of means an expert, yet am sure that I have seen lots of projection in some of our eastern cities that would not for one moment be tolerated in our theater. I have both of the Handbooks, and literally could not get along without them. I have recently been working out a motor drive for our two machines, and at last have installed an outfit which is working perfectly. Attached find a rough sketch which I trust you will be able to understand. What I was aiming at was a drive that would handle both machines with one motor and this one fills the bill perfectly. My motor never stops, from the time the show starts until the end, and I am able to shift from one machine to the other almost instantly by means of the shifting lever. The motor frame rests on the edge of a piece of iron ¼ inch thick by 1 inch wide. On each end of the motor frame is a small piece of iron with a V-shaped cut to slide on the ¼ inch iron, thus enabling me to operate the control lever. I am not giving the size of pulleys, etc., because of the different speeds of motors. My own is a small sewing machine motor, made by the Fidelity Company; speed 2,500 to 2,800; pulley diameter 1 inch, belted to a 4 inch one on the driver shaft. The driver is 2½ inches and the disc 6½ inches; the pulley on disc shaft is 1¼ inches, belted to a 3½ inch pulley on a shaft on which I have a ¾ inch cog meshing into the master wheel on the machine. With this arrangement I am able to get any speed from 50 up. If you think this may be helpful to others pass it along. I am satisfied, for I am always glad to get anything new that others have to offer, and quite willing to do what I can in return. In closing I thank you cordially for the many good things you have already given us, and I presume will continue to give us in the future.



Well, in the language of Shakespeare, I dunno. I don't quite understand—that is about that V and the sliding of the motor. Seems to me like your driving pulley swings, and I guess the motor must set on a shelf opposite X, and block A must slide endwise in order to vary the speed. That is as near as I can come to it, but I think it must be correct.

A Patent Decision.

The United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, Judge Hand presiding, has rendered decision in the suit of Jean A. Le Roy, of 133 Third avenue, New York City, against Lewis Hetz, of 302 East 23d st, New York City, sustaining the validity of the Le Roy patent No. 864,314, 1907, covering an independent framing device for kinetoscopes, and ordering an injunction issued to restrain the defendant, Hetz, from the further infringement of this patent, or sale of any device containing it. The case was referred to a Master for the damage to be assessed in the case.

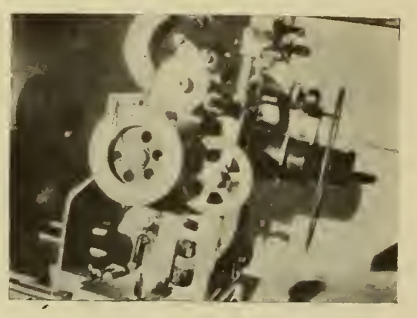
According to our understanding of the matter this patent covers any method of framing the film by moving the film itself, though it does not cover framing devices such as the Power's, Simplex, etc. Mr. Le Roy informs me that he now proposes to bring suit for damages against a number of projector manufacturers who, he claims, are infringing upon his patent.

Clever Scheme.

Harry O. Fogle, Savannah, Georgia, says:

For some time I have experienced a desire to butt into the department, but could cook up no excuse for so doing. However, it is said that perseverance will accomplish wonders, and at last I've found the excuse, which is attached hereto with a pin. (The same consists of three photographs, —Ed.). These photographs may be neither interesting nor new, but, as I said before, they afford the excuse. In photograph No. 1 you will notice an object attached to the condenser hood, in which you can see the spot on the cooling plate and the automatic fire shutter. It is not a mirror, but an amber lens taken from ordinary sunglasses. (I suppose he means colored automobile-goggle lens, or something of that kind—Ed.) By the use of this device I never need look at my spot on the cooling plate. Photograph No. 2 shows, at the point of the arrow a shield attached to the gate which makes it almost impossible to look directly at the spot. If this is new, and you think it is worth while, pass it along to the boys; if it is not new or not worth while pass it to the waste basket.

I am the possessor of a Handbook and read the department. Am much interested in the light ray dope.



Well, so far as I know this particular stunt is new, and certainly, if I understand it right, is good, except that it could only be used on one machine. So far as I can see the lens is attached to the hood, back of which, on the wall, is placed a white card upon which the lens projects a picture of the spot, all of which is excellent, and therefore escapes the waste basket, and it passed along, as requested, to the "boys."

Not in the Condensers.

Fort Scott, Kansas, says:

Would you tell me whether or not I have the right size condensers, and if not, what size should I use with a 99-foot 2-inch throw and a picture 12 feet wide? Aperture plate 11/16 by 15/16. Under these conditions I find it impossible to get a good focus with 7½ condensers. I use the best grade of lenses, but they are 7½ inches. When I focus the center of the picture the edges are out, and when I focus the edges the center is out, and more often it is impossible to focus the center of the picture at all. Hope to see this question replied to in the next issue of the World.

My dear Mr. Wood, how often must I tell you that it is utterly impossible to reply in the "next issue," and sometimes it will be four or five issues. See note at head of the department. Your condensers have nothing to do with the trouble you describe. The chances are ten to one that either your aperture plate tracks are worn, or the tension springs or shoes do not set squarely thereon. The answer is: get a new aperture plate, or square up the tension shoes or springs, or do both if needed. It is also possible there is a faint finger mark or oil on the center of your objective lens, the same possibly being on the interior of the lens, but if that is true, then it would be impossible to get a sharp focus in the center of the picture at all. In any event, according to your statement, it is evident that the film is buckling over the aperture, which means worn aperture, or tension springs wrongly set.

Insufficient Lens Aperture.

W. M. Spangler, Mortimer, North Carolina, says:

Am operating a Power's Six; diameter of objective opening 1¾ inches; back focus 2 15/16 inches. What size condensers should I have, and how should they be placed? Am now using a 6¼ next the arc and a 7 inch in front; 12 inches from apex of front condenser to aperture. Condenser is marked 6½, but won't measure anything else but 6¼, and it cost one dollar. The other one came with the machine. My objective has no name on it, so I do not know what make it is, or whether it is any good or not. Bought them from E. E. Fulton, Chicago.

It is never advisable to buy objectives which do not carry the name of their maker, and it is advisable to buy objective lenses of a recognized and thoroughly reliable dealer in optical goods. This advice will, of course, be objected to strenuously by many exchanges and dealers, but the fact remains that the average exchange is not in position to know whether an objective lens is high class or low class, or whether it is or is not suited to the work it is expected to perform. I cannot, of course, pass judgment on the quality of your objective. It may be a very fine article, but the very fact that it does not bear the imprint of its maker argues against its probable quality. But be that as it may, its aperture is entirely too small, always assuming that by "back focus" you mean the measurement from the surface of the rear combination to the face of the aperture plate tracks when the picture is in focus on the screen. I would advise you to insist on a lens of larger aperture diameter, say not less than 1½ inches, and preferably 1¾. Having secured this sort of lens the table will do the rest. You can use your present lens with two 7½ condensers and pull the lamphouse back as far as you can get it, but there will be a large loss of light, which there is no way of avoiding except by securing the larger diameter lens.

An Appreciation.

W. B. Babcock, Salem, Ore., says:

I feel that I must tell you how much I appreciate the good work the department is doing for the moving picture industry. It certainly hits the right spot every time anything is brought up for discussion. In my judgment every theater manager should make it a point to supply his operator with a copy of the WORLD every week, and not only supply him with it, but see that he reads it. If this were done there would be more real operators and less "bum" projection. The film inspection controversy is certainly going to do a lot of good, too. I am not an operator, but have become interested in the department from the point of view of the spectator who is compelled to endure the mistakes of a "half-baked" operator. I think that, although a layman, the department has increased my knowledge every week. And now I hope you will let me ask a few questions. First: Should a patch, when properly made, make any appreciable noise when going through the machine? When a certain theater in this town shows a Mutual program, and particularly a "Flying A" picture, every time a scene changes there is a sharp click—otherwise the projection is good, and the machine seems to be running fine. Also will you please describe a travel ghost, and why does a machine when running (a Simplex, I think) emit a ringing sound? When there is no music it can be heard all over the house—clink—clink—clink all the time. All the theaters in this town have some kind of patent screen, and projection seems to be pretty good, with one exception, and that is the fault of an old machine. In closing I will say that I hope the Moving Picture World staff realizes that the projection department is "half" the magazine.

There Messrs. Sargent, Bush, et al. I hope that last statement will hold you for a minute. Of course I thoroughly understand that the department is at least half the paper, but the rest of the force are jealous, hang 'em, and won't admit it. (Business of swelling up.) As to your questions: No, a properly made patch should not make any appreciable noise in passing through the machine. Very likely the "Flying A" patches may be a little stiff, and the operator in that particular house has his sprocket idlers set down a little more closely than they ought to be, though if they were too loose that too might have the same effect. A travel ghost is white streaks, or flashes of light up or down from white objects in the picture. It shows up particularly bad on white letters on a black background. As to the ringing sound, why what you hear is the intermittent movement of the machine, or possibly the lower film loop, though if it really is a ringing sound it is more likely the intermittent. If the noise is loud, the chances are that the intermittent is more or less worn or out of adjustment or both.

A Denial.

E. J. Manche, one of the owners of the Palace theater, Tacoma, Washington, is the author of the following letter. I do not quite see what there is in the Oct. 30 letter that should call for such a sharp rejoinder, but Friend Manche certainly is entitled to "his day in court," therefore his letter is published just as it was written.

If you will kindly permit me the use of your very valued space, I would like to say a few things (Few things is good.—Ed.) in answer to "I am the chief 'Scrubupus'," (That is not the proper title. The title was "Probably Quite True."—Ed.) whose letter was published in your issue of Oct. 30. This same "Scrubupus" has a very modern operating room, so called on account of its equipment, but if judged by its appearance any one with half an eye would call it a junk shop on account of the filth accumulated. He traces 60 per cent. of the fault to managers who will not buy parts, and says a certain manager has not bought any for three years. (Pardon me, Brother Manche, he did not say that. He said the intermittent sprocket had been in use for three years.—Ed.), although the poor (?) operator had tears in his eyes when asking for them. Now, as a matter of fact, there is but one manager in Tacoma who has been here for that length of time, and that one has an entirely new set of apparatus. It is needless to discuss the merits of the different houses, but I know any number of operators here who get better pictures, better results, with much older equipment, and still do not find it necessary to use 60 amperes to find the screen. In fact many use only 30 to 40 amperes, and don't blame their shortcomings on the carbons or the relief man. Furthermore there is not a house here which runs fourteen hours per day. (Who said there was?—Ed.) This same "Scrubupus" once held a position here for three days, and instead of keeping his eye on the screen where it belonged, and for which he was being paid, he either had his body stripped down to B. V. D.'s hanging out of the window, looking at the ladies as they passed, or sat in a rocker reading magazines or the dailies. Furthermore, I have gone among the operators and have yet to find one who ever paid the said "Scrubupus" the slightest compliment on his projection. You have somewhere in your files a photograph of this operating room, but the room was cleaned up at that one and only time for the special purpose. If permitted, I might suggest that you investigate a little into the truthfulness of the statements of this valuable correspondent. Thanking you in advance for giving this as much publicity as the misstatements before mentioned, I beg to remain.

The letter of which Neighbor Manche complains seemed to me to be written in very moderate language. It appeared to set forth facts. It is almost impossible to check up the truthfulness of letters, and if I were compelled in all cases to do this it would very much hamper the work of the department in a great many different ways. I cannot see any reason why "Scrubupus" should write things of that kind unless they were true. Also the letter was neatly typewritten, well punctuated, correctly spelled, and in short was a letter from a man who was evidently intelligent and well educated. He did not say that any Tacoma manager had refused to buy any repairs, but that one operator was compelled to use an intermittent sprocket which had been in use for three years.

This department takes the position that managers, as well as operators, are prone to become careless; also to try to save a little money at the expense of the result on the screen, and while a letter such as that of Oct. 30 may cause a flare up and some hard feeling, it still is more than likely to accomplish considerable good. The Tacoma man won't pay any particular attention to a bump that comes from Tacoma, but if it comes from Boston, or New York, or St. Louis, or Chicago, he is likely to sit up and take notice. I know if I were running a show in New York City, and from Tacoma, Wash., came a criticism, it would make me look around and see if something was not wrong. This department only seeks the best good of all concerned. It believes firmly that by insisting upon better wages, better operating room conditions, and those things which go to make for improved results on the screen, it is really doing the theater manager more good than any one else. I don't personally know what the operating room conditions in Tacoma are now, but when I was there two years ago, I must say that in several operating rooms both the equipment and the room itself stood in need of considerable improvement. That, however, is true of all cities, or at least in all the cities it has been my pleasure to visit.

In closing this comment let me say to Friend-Manche that the manager who expects excellence in results on the screen from antiquated equipment, equipment in need of repairs, or inadequate amperage at the arc, is entitled to "another expectation"; also modern practice, at least in New York, is to use high amperage, and in my judgment nothing less than 60 amperes A. C. ought to be used, except for a very small picture. The Strand theater, New York City, uses 75, and did use 90 amperes D. C. (there is an ammeter in the Strand operating room, so that the current reading is before the operator all the time) and this amperage was used by order of Mr. Rothapfel, whom, I believe, Mr. Manche will admit knows something about managing a theater; the picture at the Strand is not a very large one either. I do not, however, believe it is advisable to use that much current, but unless one is using a mirror screen I don't think there will be any mistake made in using any less than 40 to 45 amperes D. C. on a 16-foot picture, and 50 to 55 if it is larger than 16 feet—understanding, of course, that I am speaking of up-to-date practice in cities. The village theater cannot afford to use that much current, since the possible patronage is limited.

Decidedly Rank.

Clovis, New Mexico, sends in a sample clipped from "The Thief," a production of the Fox Film Corporation. The sample contains a strip of subtitle, three inches of which is semi-transparent and contains the assembling mark "'The Thief,' two reels," together with a notation to tint it blue. Following this is a foot of semi-transparent film with several static streaks running through it, but no picture.

This is distinctly rank. There is and can be no earthly excuse for the assembling department of a film manufacturer passing out such a glaring fault as this—a fault at least 18 inches long. It would seem that the Fox Film Corporation might well inform their assembling department that work of this kind is, to say the least, not in the best interest of the company, and back that statement up with a more or less gentle hint that any further slips of this kind will cause a shake-up in that particular department that will have the effect of prying some one loose from his job.

Cracked Condensers.

Lewis W. Cook, Ansonia, Connecticut, says:

> Here is a question I have never seen asked or answered in the department. What is the cause of a crack in a condenser lens showing through stereopticon, and not through the moving picture lens?

That particular question has been answered several times, though not recently. A crack in a condenser lens shows through the stereopticon by reason of the fact that the object (slide) is located right up against the condenser in stereopticon projection, or, in other words, the focal plane located at the condenser, and the condenser and crack are therefore focused on the screen together with the slide, whereas in the case of the moving picture the film is focused at the screen, and the condenser is not, because the condenser is located a considerable distance from the object (film), and therefore is not focused with it.

Highly Interesting.

R. W. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal., contributes the following:

> The function of the condenser is to focus the light from the arc upon the film in the aperture and thus illuminate the picture on the film. This is the proper function of the condenser, and the only action having to do with forming the picture on the screen. The rays of light which actually pass through the film, taking their direction from the condenser, cannot have any power to form the picture on the screen, but merely give a quantity of light which carries no definition from the film, and is not focused on the screen.
> The relation of the picture in the aperture to the objective lens is the same as that of an illuminated post card in an opaque projector; or the same as a subject to be photographed is to the lens of a camera. If this is true, then the action of light from the film through the objective system to the screen would be shown by the red lines in the drawing. Also, the distance of the aperture from the objective lens would be equal to the back focus of the objective, and this agrees with the data given in article, PART III., Oct. 2, 1915.
> This proper action of the lens, however, will only be true provided the light from the film picture emanates in all directions from every single point of the picture; but there is a quautity of light passing through the film which takes its direction from the condenser, and which direction does not agree with the true action of the objective system; therefore it cannot carry and definition from the film to the screen, and is worse than lost, because it illuminates the screen the same as light from an open window or any other source outside the projection room.
> In order to convert these last mentioned rays of light so that they may be properly utilized by the objective lens, it may be of advantage to place a piece of ground glass back of the aperture, and just far enough from the film to prevent the etchings from being focussed on the screen. The action of the glass would be to diffuse the rays from the condenser in all directions, from the film to the objective, and this would bring nearly all the available light from the arc into proper form for the objective system. It might then be possible to use some form of parabolic reflector and eliminate the condenser, together with its waste, entirely.

I would not care to express an opinion as to the practicability of this proposition, other than to say that it is worthy of consideration and should by no means be condemned at first glance.

There are two points which occur to me at this time. First: It would be very difficult to secure glass that would stand the heat of the spot—not necessarily impossible, but certainly very difficult. Second: No one has as yet succeeded in evolving a light concentrator practical for use in moving picture work. The Boylite Concentrator, which was described in the department a good while back, came nearest to it. It concentrated the light perfectly but was too delicate in its operation. The least movement produced a ghost, and a ghost, it seems to me, would show just as plainly with the ground glass as without it. I should like to have the comment of some of our optical correspondents on friend Martin's contribution. I would particularly like to know what Woods, of San Francisco; Griffiths, of Ansonia, Conn.; La Grow, of Albany, N. Y., and Armstrong, of Ashland, Wis., think about this particular plan, though the opinion of others will, of course, be welcom d and receive full and proper consideration.

I Stand Corrected.

John Solar, Watertown, New York, says:

> I cannot agree with either Brother Crawford's answer or the editor's comment to question No. 104. You seem to have confused total reflection with critical angle. The following is quoted from physics. "Whenever light passes from an optically denser medium into one that is rarer, in a direction normal to the dividing surface, practically none of it is reflected internally; but as the angle of incidence increases, more and more of the rays suffer internal reflection, as under these conditions the angle of refraction is always greater than that of incidence." * * *

Neighbor Solar continues at considerable length to elucidate his position, but it is, I think, not necessary to quote him in full, as I find, upon looking the matter up, I am wrong. I did, as Friend Solar presumes, confuse critical angle with total reflection, for which outrageous sin I most humbly apologize.

And now I am going to, in the parlance of the gambler, pass the buck, and request Brother Solar to give us his definition of the practical effect of total reflection as applied to projection. This is not a spectacular way to get out of the thing, but, nevertheless, I feel that Solar understands this particular thing considerably better than I do, and therefore, since I wish to profit by his knowledge and allow my readers to do the same thing, I take this course.

Motiograph.

George Monroe, St. Louis, Mo., says:

I understand there has been a change in the Motiograph mechanism, and that the toggle joint, which formerly gave considerable trouble, has been eliminated. Can you tell me what takes its place?

Yes, George, we can do that little thing for you all right. The illustration ought to make the matter clear, I think. The flywheel shaft fits into hub X and the cam shift into hub Y, the three parts being, of course, clamped together when in use, but the center part being free to slide either way in the slots. I think a minute's study will make the action clear to you. It is a big improvement over the old toggle and one which I believe obviates the objections so many operators had to that particular part of the Motiograph mechanism. The toggle worked all right, but became noisy after wear. Its successor should work all right, less the noise.

Light Ray Corrections.

John Griffiths, Ansonia, Connecticut, makes his bow with the following:

In order to get ahead of inevitable criticism of the light ray articles, I think we should correct such errors as have been discovered, some of which were due to lack of knowledge, owing to the shortness of available time in which to consider the results of our experiments.

The first error, and one that has no bearing on the theory of light action as shown in supplementary diagram No. 3 (which I consider to be a correct representation of light action through the projector system, thoroughly up to date with our present knowledge of the subject), is concerning the point at which the crater is in focus at the aperture.

Knowing that spherical aberration is present, when the crater is in focus at the aperture the image will show some signs of back focus, due to the aberrated rays crossing the axis before reaching the aperture. Good results may nevertheless be obtained with the sharp, clear spot, provided you can get it small enough, and at the same time maintain sufficient distance between the condenser and aperture to suit the diameter of the objective; also provided the arc is near enough to the condenser to avoid a great loss of light. When using the actual focus of the crater at the aperture it is necessary to enlarge it a greater number of times than is the case where the sharp spot is used, hence we must increase the distance between the condensers and aperture, so that the white spot will be large enough to fully cover the aperture. The condensers named in the tables are for the sharp spot, but I advise the actual focus spot where the tables call for two 7½ condensers. My objection to two 7½-inch condensers is that they place the arc too far from the condenser. With the actual focus spot, two 6½ condensers are good up to 20 to 22 inches, unless the amperage is very heavy, when one 6½ and 7½ will be more suitable. It will be noted that, working with the actual focus spot, we overcome the deficiencies of the present system of condensing the rays mentioned in the article on light ray action, without making any radical changes in condenser mounts, such as were suggested in the article. It also should be remembered that the distances named in the tables between the condenser and aperture are stated as a minimum, rather than an exact distance, because to increase this distance results in more even illumination.

The second error to which I must call attention is one that has some bearing on the theory of light ray action as described in the article. This error was due to the fact that we assumed the conditions between the crater and condenser and between the film and objective to be identical. On further investigation I find that whereas there are one set of rays converging and another set diverging between crater and condenser there are two sets of diverging rays between the film and objective, each set, however, having a different angle of divergence, viz: one set diverging from a pin point on the film, and another from a point on the back condenser, both sets being clearly shown in supplementary diagram No. 3, and their action described in the descriptive matter pertaining to diagram No. 13. We see the practical result of this double action in two images in front of the objective, viz: the image of the condenser and the image of the film picture. The rays diverging from each point of the film, and originally from each point of the crater, gives us the image of each point of the film at the screen, and the rays from each point of the condenser, originally from the whole of the crater, gives us the image of each point of the condenser, a few inches in front of the objective, from which point the rays diverge to the whole of the screen. It will be observed that the rays from a point of the condenser are trimmed rectangular in their passage through the aperture, and leave the objective as a pyramid, having its apex at a point in the condenser image, with its full base at the film aperture of the objective, whence it proceeds to the screen as a pyramid, having its apex at a point in the condenser image, and its base the entire screen. The other set of rays (remember "set of rays" is merely a term used for convenience) entering the objective from a point of the film, and originally from a point of the crater, are not converged into a point until they reach the screen, so that this set of rays leave the objective lens as a circular cone, having its base, or widest part at the back surface of the lens. The action of the objective is to overcome the divergence, but owing to the fact that the first surface of the objective may not be sufficiently strong to entirely accomplish that purpose the base can be considered as being somewhere within the lens and its apex on the screen. Thus we have one set of rays starting at a point of the crater and converging at a point of the film, and from a point of the film to a point of the screen, this set of rays being circular in form the entire distance. We have another set of rays leaving the crater as a whole, and coming to a point at the condenser, and from a point at the condenser to a point of the condenser image, and from a point of the condenser image to the whole of the screen. This set of rays has a rectangular form after passing through the aperture, but their shape is only in evidence at the back surface of the condenser, and again in front of the image of the condenser. When a slide carrier is used this set of rays, coming from a rectangular object, forms a rectangular image the shape of the slide carrier. This "two sets of rays" theory seems to have released a whole herd of nannies, and, while the term is something of a misnomer, because the rays of one set form the rays of the other set, yet I do not know how to describe these two different actions without calling them "two sets of rays." Our Friend Solar will kindly observe that my back focus theory has been considerably ruffled so far as the objective lens he concerned. (Mine is not.—Ed.) I feel pretty much of a bonehead to think I spent so much time in clearing up the action of that set of rays which cross at the condenser and continue to the objective through the film as diverging rays, coming to a focus at the condenser image. However, all puzzles look simple when they are finally solved. My back surface theory with regard to the condensers will, I think, hold good, because if the rays did not cross at the condenser how then is the condenser image formed? And in proof that the rays from the whole of the crater are passing through each point on the image of the condenser just hold a piece of metal with a pin hole in it at the image of the condenser, whereupon the whole screen will be faintly but fully illuminated, showing that rays from the whole of the crater are passing through each point of the condenser, diverging from the condenser lens to the film, and being converged to a pin hole, and again spreading to the extent of the screen. The fact that there is an image of the condenser situated as it is proves that the set of rays coming from the crater as a whole, and passing through a point in the condensers, are in active operation.

The errors herein corrected do not affect the result as shown in the tables, which are based on the action shown in supplementary diagram No. 3. Optics of the projector, as discussed in the article, may be considered elementary. There are several points to be considered when we have finally settled the various points brought out in the article, one of which I have in mind at present being the cause of high lights and shadows, commonly known as ghosts, the real cause of which, so far as I know, is yet to be published.

The foregoing sounds very complicated, but to those whose have carefully followed the light ray experiment articles it will be simple enough, and barring the fact that I still personally hold that whereas the light rays actually cross at many places, still, viewing it simply as a point, the first surface of the condenser and the first surface of the objective is where the crossing takes place. Aside from this one thing I think Friend Griffiths is absolutely right.

There has been but little criticism on the light ray articles up to date. I think this is largely due to the fact that, barring Solar, Armstrong, and two or three others, most of the men are just a little bit afraid to tackle the job of criticism, for which I don't in the least blame them. The tables are the really practical thing. The discussion of theory will, however, enable us to better understand the whole matter, and when the time comes I shall be glad to have Friend Griffiths set forth his theory as to high lights and shadows. Meanwhile all the reports of those who have tested the tables and have been able to make their equipment meet the requirements of the tables have been favorable—pretty good proof that the tables are at least approximately correct.

A New Stunt.

M. Walling, Springfield, Tennessee, says:

I am an old reader, and have received much benefit from the department. Recently I pulled off a little stunt which, while it may be old, is original so far as I am personally concerned. We are running a Power's Six A, motor driven, and my shutter in some way got loose and out of time. Instead of stopping to set it, I put a piece of paper over the top of the objective lens, covering a small portion of it. This eliminated Mr. Travel Ghost, and did not seem to materially injure the light. Am passing it along for what it is worth. It sure is a new one on me.

Yes, and on me too, though I can see where it might work out all right, but, of course, if you got it down into the actual light beam, you would promptly get a shadow on the screen—that is to say, into the main, central beam.

Operators Notice Speer Carbons.

The department is having tests made of the new American made Speer Carbon manufactured in Pennsylvania. Just as soon as these tests are complete they will be published; meanwhile I would welcome reports from any operators who are using them.

Inquiries.

QUESTIONS in cinematography addressed to this department will receive carbon copy of the department's reply by mail when four cents in stamps are enclosed. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot he replied to in this department, $1.00.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is a rule of this department that no apparatus will be recommended editorially until the value of such appliances has been demonstrated to its editor.

Overhauling Apparatus.

HOW often do you clean and oil your camera? Do you have a regular time for going over it from stem to stern, oiling, cleaning and adjusting? How long is it since you have put new velvet in the light traps of your retorts? Is the tension of your pressure plate too tight these cold days, when the film is stiff and brittle and every little hit of added friction adds to the danger of static? Are your pressure plate and your aperture plate perfectly polished, and as little liable as possible to gum up from the X back stock that you should he using these cold days? Have you unscrewed the cells of your lens and cleaned them carefully with soft Japanese tissue and a suspicion of alcohol? Did you look very carefully to see that there had been no deterioration in the Canada halsam which cements the lenses together? How long since you cleaned the trash and useless accumulations out of your dark room? Have you a separate waste can in your dark room for spoiled stock, so as to save it for leader stock? Are you making tests of your stock to see whether it has static before you put it in the camera?

Have a regular day once a week at least, for a thorough overhauling and cleaning up. Your camera needs attention to work right, just as much as your auto needs gas and oil.

Focusing Cinematograph Lenses.

J. D. W. L. Clayton, Mo., writes:

"A few questions on focusing have been on my mind very much and I would like to he put right on the subject. In the first place, let me state that for the present and for the last year, I have heen using the small model Ernemann which is focused entirely by a scale, that is by graduated marks on the mount. The camera has its limitations, of course, and since I have heen fortunate enough in getting good results in my pictures, I decided to get a very good professional camera and have placed my order for a Bell & Howell with complete equipment, tripod, 6-inch, B & L lens, etc. I expect to receive the outfit ahout the middle of December. By their catalogue, I see that the camera may he focused either by scale or on a ground glass.

"Now, what I want to know is that, when focusing by the ground glass, should I focus with the aperture at full opening—F 3.5—at all times or should I use the same stop in focusing that is to be used in photographing. Of course, if I open my lens wide I can see the image much plainer, but would my results be as sharp in the actual photograph when I stop my lens down to suit the light? Up to the present I have always set my lens at the infinity mark when taking pictures beyond 30 feet, regardless of the stop used. Have I been wrong?

"I am enclosing a copy of a 'depth of field' chart which I doped out from other charts of longer focal lengths. Does it look right to you? Now, for example, suppose I were using my Bell & Howell and the light required an F16 stop and I wanted to film an object fifty or one hundred feet away. Would I set my lens (using a two-inch) at the infinity mark, as graduated on the mount, or should I set it at 6'3" which seems to be the hyperfocal distance for the lens opening? Or should I use the ground glass, and if so, at what stop, F3.5 or F16? I should think that I would hardly get enough light at F16 to see the image clearly.

"I hardly think this letter is very clear, but I'm sure you can see what I'm driving at and can tell what's right or wrong."

If your lens is as good as it should be, it is perfectly right and proper to focus with the diaphragm wide open and then stop down to the required aperture. Unfortunately I have found a few lenses sent out by reputable makers that were evidently not as rigidly inspected as they should have heen, for the image made hy the portion of the lens nearest the edge, did not coincide with the image cast hy the center of the lens, with the consequence, that when the image was as sharp as possible, with the lens wide open, the image with the diaphragm stopped down was considerably out.

If you have any doubt about your lens, test it out on some kind of a chart or sharply defined checked black and white pattern, and if the image at F3.5 is not just as sharp as that made at F11 or F16, you should send it back and exchange it for a hetter one. In making such tests, be sure and close the shutter down enough when using the large aperture, so that the exposure will be equivalent to that given with the smaller stop.

It is entirely correct to set your lens at the Infinity mark for taking objects thirty feet or more away from the camera.

The chart which you sent, checks up very well and should prove of considerable value if referred to by camera men and directors, when engaged in making a picture.

When photographing distant objects with a small opening, tho lens should be set at infinity, unless there are objects in the foreground, which also appear in the picture, then it would he wise to set the lens at the hyperfocal distance if the intervening object is nearer than half the hyperfocal distance; if the object is further away than this then set the lens at infinity.

Hyerfocal distance means the distance from the lens to a sharply focused object, beyond which everything to Infinity is in focus, and in front of which, anything less than half way to the camera is also in focus.

Hyperfocal distance varies with the focal length and the diaphragm opening of a lens; and the infinity mark on a lens mount generally signifies that the lens, when set at that mark, is really set for the hyperfocal distance of the largest stop and not for actual infinity.

As motion picture photography is seldom done under ideal conditions it is a common practice among operators to do what they term "split the focus," that is, to focus on an object at such a distance as to include as much as possihle of the principal objects within the front and back depth of focus.

The question of focusing on the film or on the ground glass is one of personal preference with the photographer. Some claim that they get hetter results and save time hy focusing direct on the film, and others say that the scientific and accurate way is with a fine ground glass, which gives greater illumination and ease in focusing. With good bright light there is no trouble in getting a sharp focus on the film, hut when the lighting conditions are had, the film ahsorhs so much of the light that it is often ahsolutely necessary to use the ground glass.

In cameras where the lens is mounted accurately and rigidly against the aperture plat, so that there is no chance for an accidental deviation of the distance hetween lens and picture aperture, a carefully calihrated focusing scale can always he relied upon and when used with a fifty foot tape line, which is one of the indispensable articles in the cameraman's kit, will insure sharpness of definition in every scene.

Type Titles.

F. A. McD., St. Louis, Mo., writes:

Will you please tell me how the big companies make titles with type?

I am making a cartoon picture in twelve episodes down here and there will be about 60 positives off of each negative. Now, what I want to do is make the negatives of the titles right in with the rest of the negative so that when it is printed there will be no assembling to do on th positive.

The way I have been doing is to have a reverse zinc etching made of the border and type and then photograph a proof off of it. This costs about three dollars for every cut, and that is what I am trying to get away from. I am enclosing a sample piece of negative made this way.

Photograph your titles with the film reversed; that is, emulsion away from the lens, and then make a print from that and use this print as your title negative.

Or, cheaper than that in point of material cost, make a negative on a lantern slide plate and photograph your titles from the slide at a cost of about five cents for each title.

Diaphragm Numbers.

G. A. B., Gloversville, New York, writes:

Having just purchased a Watkins Kinematograph Exposure Meter, I found that on the left side of the movable dial it has the numbers for film.

(1) Will you kindly tell me the correct number to use for Eastman's Standard Motion Picture Film, also Eastman's X Back Film?

(2) Are the following lens stops the same on an F. 6 lens as on an F. 3.5 lens (F. 6) (.8) (11) (16)?

If, when after the correct lens opening, with an Exposure Meter, it should read lens opening F. 6-.8 .11 or .16 with a 1-32 Shutter, and you are using an F. 3.5 or F. 6 lens, would it he the correct lens opening for the F. 6 lens, if it is the correct opening for the F. 3.5 lens?

1. You will find the speed number of Eastman Film in the sheet of directions which accompany the Watkins meters, and it is the same for Standard or for X back.

2. Yes; any lens marked in the F. system has practically the same speed when set at any F. number as any other lens set at the same F. number.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN.

Improvising.

Article III.

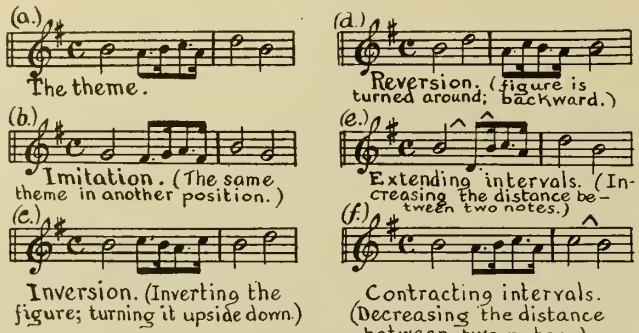
IN the previous article several expedients were given by which one may elaborate upon a melody. The first three mentioned:

(1) Changing the key. (Major to minor and vice versa.)

(2) Changing the tempo.

(3) Changing the figure.

were illustrated in examples 3, 4, 6, 7 and 8. (Articles I and II.) The other expedients mentioned are shown in Ex. 9.



Ex. 9.

(a) The theme. Notice the "figure" (pattern or form) which fills two measures.

(h) Imitation (or "repetition"). The same theme written in another position. In this case it is written two degrees lower.

(c) Inversion. Melody moves up in this where it moves down in the original and vice versa. Practically turning the figure hottom side up.

(d) Reversing the figure. In this illustration the figure is simply written backward, though one need not adhere so strictly to the original form. One may reverse the figure only without reversing the entire melody. However, the expedient is rarely used in improvising and its results seem so far-fetched that its value is doubtful.

(e) Extending the intervals. Increasing the distance between two notes. In this illustration we have increased the distance between the first two notes (which are B and A in the theme) and lowered the 2d note (A) to D (a fifth lower). The new intervals thus made are indicated by an inverted "v."

(f) Contracting the intervals. Decreasing the distance between two notes, making an interval smaller. In the theme we are now working with (a) there are no wide intervals—all of the notes lie quite closely together in pitch, so there is little opportunity for alteration hy contracting any intervals. In the 2d measure the note "D" was lowered to "C," making an interval of half a tone instead of a tone and a half.

(Elahoration and alteration through grace notes and passing notes will be illustrated later on.)

Of the five methods of elaboration shown in Example 9 (b, c, d, e and f) the last two are prohahly the more useful, particularly extension (e). Good dramatic effects are made and climaxes are emphasized hy repeating a closing phrase one or more times, with widening intervals at each repetition—usually with an upward movement.

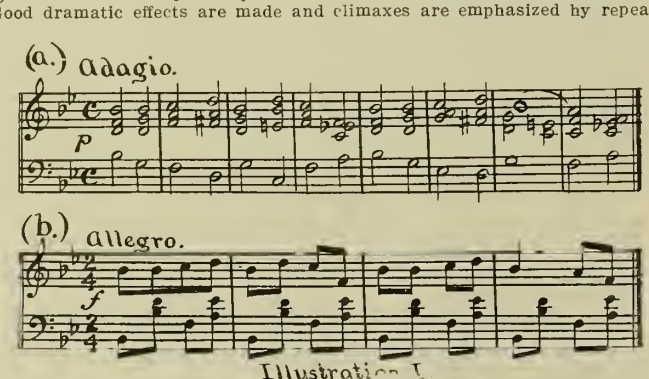


Illustration I.

Before going further it may he well to warn the reader that improvising music to a picture does not consist in merely twisting a tune out of all resemblance to its former self. It makes considerable difference what you play, of course, hut how you play it is very important. Playing a theme slow or fast, loud or soft, may make all the difference in the world as to its appropriateness to the situation. Usually you don't need to alter the tune so much as the expression. Look at the following illustration. The first theme (a) when played very slowly is of a pronounced religious character.

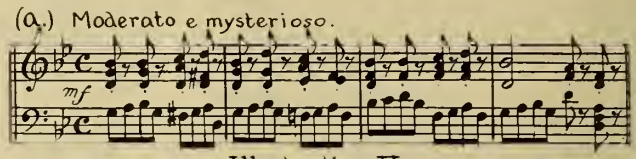

Illustration II.

hut when played up at a lively tempo, as in the lower line (b), we recognize our old friend "Yankee Doodle."

Nothing very religious ahout that. And merely playing it slowly does not necessarily mean religious. It might be played with a "running" accompaniment to produce a sentimental or pensive effect. Or it could be played in slow tempo—very staccato—to give a mysterious character to the theme. A configuration in the bass would help this.

Music for "Carmen."

Mr. Dick Bertram, Musical Director Palace Theatre, Burlington, Iowa, suhmits the following: "The accompanying program is meant as a suggestion for orchestras in the smaller cities and towns only, where music from the opera is not so well known. In this program I have chosen the three numbers which are the most popular. Victor records mentioned greatly enhance the value of the picture and fit the action nicely. If they are used I would suggest obtaining the hest model of phonograph for their reproduction. I use the Aeolian Graduola because its mechanism is such as to permit pp. and forte effects. The Carmen music used is all in the selection from the opera arranged by Emil Tavan and revised and published hy Emil Asher. This makes the program easy to handle as it is necessary to work the three themes several times. The overture also is taken from this selection as described. A rough and wild effect should he given to most of the numhers in order to preserve the proper effect."

CARMEN (with Geraldine Farrar.)
Paramount Production.

Overture. (From the selection.) Andante Moderato and Allegro 6/8. Introduction. Allegro Giocoso 2/4. Hahanera, jump to Toreador song and play to close.

(Slide mentioning Farrar records.)

Opening TACET until "As Carmen." Then:—

(1) "Gypsy Song." (This is the second Allegro Moderato 3/4 of the selection. Play B flat strain only; cadence and segue.

(2) "Los Banderilleros." (Spanish March hy Volpatti; pub. hy Cundy-Bettoney.) Play Moderato Assai through twice; stop.

At Title:—"Carmen," play

(3) "Gypsy Song." (Victor record No. 88512.) When record finished, the orchestra picks it up softly, playing hoth strains through twice. Segue:—

(4) "Carmena song." (Violin and Piano.) Repeat the F strain and D flat strain; through to finish, following action.

Title:—"Pastias Tavern That Night."

(5) "Spanish Gaiety" (a bolero). Follow dancers. Introduction and first strain only. (Puh. hy Jacohs.)

(6) "Toreador song." As written; to close, then stop.

(7) "Spanish Gaiety." Pick it up rough as Carmen darts from Pastia; play as written, until reach the hass solo of trio; repeat the pp. strain of trio if necessary. Die away as Carmen falls into Jose's arms.

(8) Horn call. (2 notes—E and A; the last one sustained.)

(9) Same as No. 8.

(10) "Hahanero." (Victor record No. 87210.) Follow this with:—

(11) Chorus of "Toreador" (piano only), two and a half times through and light. When Carmen and Jose at wall:—

(12) "Hahanero" (orchestra), twice through slowly and softly (violin and cornet muted). Stop.

NOTE.—Speed up picture machine when orchestra starts, slow down to ordinary speed when orchestra stops.

Title: "Blind One."

(13) "Spanish Patrol" (by Deshayes; puh. by Cundy Bettoney), start softly, play very fast—as written. Once through and stop.

(At title:) "You Will keep Key of Cell."

(14) Lakes hurry No. 5 (pub. by Carl Fischer). Play rough until Jose has adversary on table and stahs. Music dies away. Segue.

(15) "Away to Yonder Mountain." (Victor record No. 88513.)

(16) (When Jose meets Carmen in hills) play "Hahanero" (orchestra) to suit action until Jose off. Stop.

When Carmen and woman in cave:

(17) "Incantation" (from Tonani's cue hook No. 9, pub. by Fischer). Until Carmen and Escamilla leave cave. Stop.

(At title:) "Warn Carmen."

(18) "Near the Hills of Seville." (Victor record No. 88511.)

(19) "Toreador Song" (orchestra). Verse, Chorus and Verse until title "I Fear No Man." Segue.
(20) Agitato No. 45 from Tobani's cue book No. 10. (Carl Fischer.) Play three times; first p. second mf. third ff., work up to stab. As stabbed, die away. (Start slowly.)
(At title:) "You Have Killed Me."
(21) "Habanero" (orchestra), slow and double piano to end.
(Running time of picture—including overture—1 hour, 13 minutes.)

The Palace Theater used a slide mentioning the Farrar records. Mr. Bertram suggests that if no slides be available, an announcement be made pertaining to and explaining these records. Mr. Bertram says they proved valuable both as a musical accompaniment and as an added novelty. This may be all right with a good phonograph and new records, as he says they used. Using Geraldine Farrar records would seem to be a talking point for the exhibitor when showing the Farrar picture. I don't get the idea of so many stops in the music—or rather the manner of stopping so many of the numbers. "Once through and stop; twice and stop," etc., instead of finding a reason in the action for the cessation of the music. I am one of those who do not believe it necessary for the music to be grinding away incessantly throughout all pictures at all times, still I like the reason for pauses to be found in the picture itself rather than one has come to the end of the number. It seems just as important that we should have a "cue" for stopping the music as we have for beginning it. However I am not going to criticise Mr. Bertram's score on that point. He has probably timed everything and has reasons for the pauses in his music.

Musical Setting for "The Mill on the Floss"

Released December 16 by the Mutual Film Corporation.

Suggestions Prepared by S. M. Berg, by Special Arrangements with G. Schirmer, Inc., Music Publishers, New York.

This "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is intended as a partial solution of the problem of what to play for the picture and to assist in overcoming that chaotic condition encountered when the film is not available until almost the hour of showing, resulting in the first performance being a mere rehearsal.

For the benefit of those readers of the Moving Picture World who are exhibitors of Mutual Films the following suggestions for an accompaniment to "The Mill on the Flosss" were prepared by the photoplay department of the New York music publishing house of G. Schirmer, Inc. This advance publication will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film story he is to portray with his orchestra.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will assist the leader in anticipating the various cues, which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T), or by a described action (marked D).

Further inquiries concerning any phase of the work of the orchestra leader in a photoplay theater may be addressed to the Moving Picture World, and the answers of Mr. Berg will appear in a Question and Answer Department, which will be a regular feature of our Music Page.

Maggie, wild and impulsive daughter of Tulliver, the Miller, when visiting her brother at school meets Philip, a hunchback, whose father, a lawyer, oppresses Tulliver and gains possession of his property. An old tradition is fulfilled when the Floss overflows, destroying the mill and drowning Maggie and Tom.

Note particularly: Short Agitato 41¾
Ballroom Scene 49½
Flood Scenes 65½ to 73¼

Scheduled Time: Five reels (about 4,900 feet), 73½ minutes.
The theme selected is "Somewhere—Sometime," Clough-Leighter.

Time.		Sub-Titles or Descriptive Cues.	Music.
0	D	Opening.	Somewhere, Sometime—Clough-Leighter. (Andantino.) (Theme.)

73½	T	The End.

World readers experiencing any difficulty in obtaining from their dealers any of the above mentioned numbers can forward their orders direct to G. Schirmer, Inc., 3 East 43d street, New York City.

Lillian Drew

LILLIAN DREW, one of Essanay's clever players, is spending part of the holidays in New York. She took her new car with her and is planning to burn up the roads along the Hudson. She is making a combination pleasure and shopping trip, studying the latest fashions for new gowns for her parts in photoplays.

Miss Drew is a Chicago girl but is thoroughly acquainted with the Eastern metropolis, having played two seasons on Broadway. She has appeared in musical comedies, dramatic stock and vaudeville. She joined the Essanay company four years ago and has taken leads and heavy dramatic parts ever since. Her work is especially notable in the recent plays of "The Reaping," and "Fifty-Fifty," in which she took the leading feminine role.

Lillian Drew.

She has one great hobby, that of collecting oriental rugs. She has a large collection of the finest to be purchased and of an age to make a connoisseur envious.

Miss Drew recently returned to the Chicago studios after having spent the summer and early fall with the Essanay Southern Company at Chattanooga, where she played leading parts.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE.

"Jack" Wheeler Editor-in-Chief of Selig-Tribune.

LUCIEN C. WHEELER, who has been the personal guardian of three Presidents, recently resigned from the Federal Secret Service to become editor-in-chief of the Selig-Tribune, the new animated newspaper, the first issue of which will appear January 3.

Mr. Wheeler is familiarly called "Jack" by the men who know him best. For many years assistant district superintendent of the Bureau of Investigations of the Department of Justice, Washington, D. C., he has learned to know every nook and corner of this country and nearly everybody of prominence in it. Indeed, his duties have made of him a globe trotter; but, different from most men of that type, Mr. Wheeler has every foreign country at his finger tips, with respect both to the salient centers of information and to acquaintanceship with important personages.

For the past year Mr. Wheeler has been assistant superintendent of the United States Department of Investigation in Chicago. He is now in the east in the interests of the Selig-Tribune. The other day he was in Washington and called on President Wilson, who expressed his regret over Mr. Wheeler's departure from the Government service. Mr. Wheeler, however, at once explained to the President the importance of his new position and the great possibilities it created for bringing to the people, generally, moving pictures of world-wide events.

While in Washington, Mr. Wheeler appointed Louis J. Simmons as the permanent Selig-Tribune staff man. He will furnish pictorial records of the movements and public appearances of notables in the capitol city.

It will be interesting to learn that Mr. Wheeler has had government care of many royal personages who visited the United States, among them Prince Henry of Prussia, Grand Duke Boris of Russia, and others. Being assigned to the White House he had charge of all arrangements for the tours made by Mr. Roosevelt while President, also for those by Mr. Taft. On President Taft's tour of the United States, Mr. Wheeler traveled 12,579 miles, keeping two weeks ahead of the party. President Taft was so impressed by the arrangements made by Mr. Wheeler during this tour that he pronounced him a "master of detail."

In his trips over this and foreign countries, Mr. Wheeler has naturally developed the perception and the mind for live moving picture news, and his selection as chief editor for the Selig-Tribune should prove happy for all concerned.

Chicago Board of Censors and Shakespeare.

The Chicago Board of Censors has been furnishing action for mirth of a very peculiar kind recently. It is action of the kind that makes angels weep once in a while, and in this case, while it fails to prove a Chicago Tribune editor as belonging to that celestial type, it succeeds in making a whetstone for his writing iron.

The Globe Photoplay Company, which has made a series of photoplays of Shakespearean dramas, has been submitting the films to the Chicago board for censorship. In the issue of December 6, the Tribune had the following editorial under the heading, "Our Own 'Movie' Bulletin":

Several films of the Globe Photoplay company were passed upon by the censors recently. This company seems to have bought a job lot of movies written by Mr. W. Shakespeare, who, as reported the other day, is said to be one of the most popular writers in Germany, although formerly a British subject.

A melodrama called "Othello, the Moor of Venice," was at first disapproved on the ground that its principal scene is a murder. This is the more offensive as it takes place in the heroine's bedroom and shows her in the attire appropriate to that situation but not to the public stage. It was agreed that the spectacle of a husband smothering his wife with a pillow was especially dangerous to the institution of the family, suggesting a particularly convenient, if irregular, method of concluding domestic differences. The fact that the husband was a negro and his wife white was also pointed out as an incitement of race prejudice. However, the scene showing Othello addressing the Venetian senate was allowed to stand as indicating a broad recognition of the civil and political equality of the negro and the absence of the color line in Venice. But the owner decided to withdraw the film.

"Macbeth," another very sensational play, was approved in part as showing some attractive views of medieval architecture and mountain scenery, but the following cutouts were ordered: Incantation scene showing witches on the heath. If the witches are cut out no objection is made to the heath and the caldron. Cut out scene in bedroom and subtitle, "Who would have thought the old man to have had so much blood in him?" Shorten banquet scene to flash, eliminating ghost of Banquo. Cut to flash scene showing Lady Macbeth in her nightgown.

In the issue of December 11, under the same heading as above, the Tribune took another dig at the censor board, to-wit:

The Globe Photoplay company is still having difficulties with the censorship over its importations of the scenarios of the German popular playwright, Willy Shakespeare. A sensational melodrama called "Hamlet, Prince of Denmark," was considered yesterday and the following cuts and alterations ordered:

A view of the castle of Elsinore at night is approved, but scenes showing Hamlet, Horatio and Marcellus carrying deadly weapons must be shortened to flash. The ruling followed a heated debate. It was objected by one of the members of the board, not a Mason, that the actors suggested an assembly of Knights Templar, uniform rank, and thus tended to arouse sectarian feeling, but a vote taken was unfavorable to this view, and a cut to flash was accepted as a fair compromise. The ghost is ordered out for obvious reasons, and the subtitle "Angels and ministers of grace defend us! Be thou a spirit of health or goblin damned" must stop at goblin, omitting the expletive "damned."

In the scene of mimic play cut out view of player queen pouring poison in ear of player king. Scene between Hamlet and his mother and the killing of Polonius must all come out, as tending to encourage disrespect to parents and murder of old men. Scene in graveyard must be shortened. Cut out closeup of Hamlet holding skull, shorten to flash scene of burial cortege of Ophelia, and cut out Laertes and Hamlet in grave. Last act must be shortened by cutting out the fencing match and stabbing of king. Body of Hamlet on stretcher may be shown in flash and entrance of Fortinbras, though objectionable as of militarist character, tending to obscure the fact that war is horrid, may be retained.

On this point, the board is said to be considering the propriety of ordering the name of the playwright, Shakespeare, to be cut out of announcements as savoring of violence and harmfully suggestive to impressionable youth. The representative of the Chicago Peace Society on the board suggests that it be replaced by the nom de plume Shakehands.

Meeting of G. F. Company's Middle Western Exchange Managers.

A meeting of exchange managers of the General Film Company, in middle-western territory, was held at the Hotel La Salle, Saturday, December 4, and was followed by a dinner in that hostelry.

The main object of the meeting was to familiarize the exchange managers with the new policy of the General Film Company in its distributing department.

Officials and producers present at the dinner were: J. A. Berst, president; Wm. N. Selig, George K. Spoor, Frank L. Hough, representing George Kleine; F. C. Aiken, division manager, and H. C. Hoagland, assistant general manager of the Selig Polyscope Company.

The following exchange members were present: C. W. Jeffries, Des Moines; J. T. Van Meter, Milwaukee; Al. J. Gilligham, Detroit; R. O. Proctor, Kansas City; Robert Lieber, Indianapolis; C. W. McDaniels, Wabash branch, Chicago; Geo. Berg, City Hall branch, Chicago; H. C. Phillips, Omaha; H. P. Wolfberg, St. Louis; Paul Billington, Cincinnati; D. W. Phillips, Columbus; H. R. Schilds, Cleveland, and H. H. Buxbaum, Minneapolis.

German and Allies' War Pictures in Chicago.

Chicago was fairly bombarded by moving pictures of the war last week, not only in the Fine Arts theater, the Olympic and the La Salle, where the pictures were shown, but in the columns, both news and advertising, of the entire city press.

The pictures showing the great drive of von Hindenburg's army against the Russians, taken by W. H. Durborough, war photographer, in conjunction with Oswald F. Schuette, Chicago Daily News war correspondent, have occupied the screen at the Fine Arts and by common consent were awarded the preference. The pictures showing the war in the west from the Allies' side of the trenches, or French pictures as they have been called, have been screened at both the La Salle and the Olympic. Those shown at the La Salle are known as the Hearst, or Examiner, pictures, while those at the Olympic are called the Daily News pictures. They are similar, and were evidently obtained from the same source.

The admissions at the Fine Arts and Olympic have been 25 cents, and at the La Salle, 25 cents for balcony and 50 cents for orchestra seats. The entire net profits from the exhibitions at the first-mentioned theaters are being devoted to the American Red Cross, for use in all the war-stricken countries, without discrimination. The International Red Cross will receive 10 per cent of all proceeds of exhibition at the La Salle. No Sunday exhibitions are given at any of the three theaters.

Chicago Film Brevities.

John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, arrived in the city Tuesday, December 7, and left for St. Louis the same night and will return to New York from that point. While here, he and Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, Inc., viewed the first chapter of "The Girl and the Game," in the private projection room of the Mutual's branch office here. All who saw the films expressed themselves as being well pleased. Mr. Hutchinson said of this chapter after viewing it: "I think it is good and have no doubt that every succeeding chapter will be equally good, if not better. Each chapter in itself gives a feeling of satisfaction to the spectator, though not a complete story. Besides a decidedly hearty interest is created in the mind to see the following chapter." A. J. Normal, assistant branch manager in the Chicago office, afterward showed the first chapter to about seventy-five exhibitors. He stated that those present seemed to like it very much, and that it is being booked up rapidly in his territory.

H. Wood, manager of the Gaumont Hiring Co., London, England, spent several days in the city last week, on business for his company. He left for New York City, Friday, December 10.

Schuyler Colfax, of the Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y., made a flying trip to the city last week.

B. N. Judell, district manager of the Mutual Film Corporation in Middle Western territory, made a trip last week, which took in Minneapolis, Fargo, Sioux Falls, Omaha, Des Moines and Milwaukee. He found that business with exhibitors was a little slow at present, on account of the approaching Christmas holidays, but that in Minneapolis, Omaha and Des Moines business was brisk. While in Fargo, Mr. Judell appointed H. P. Johnson branch manager, in the place of B. E. Reed, resigned.

The Saxe Brothers sold the Lyric theater in Minneapolis last week to Messrs. Bainbridge, Elliott and Sherman. The new management has reduced the prices from 25 cents and 50 cents to 10 and 15 cents. A month before the sale of this house, programs of the Triangle and Paramount products were offered, the lengthy programs only permitting two shows a day, which accounts for the increased prices of 25 and 50 cents.

The annual ball of the Moving Picture Operators' Union, Local 110, was given at the Coliseum Annex, Wednesday evening, December 8. This was the seventh event of the kind given by the union, and, from all accounts, it was a successful affair.

Miss Gail Kane, who was recently added to the Equitable's list of stars, stopped over in the city to attend a luncheon party at the Blackstone Hotel, in her honor, one day last week, on her way to Albuquerque, where she will engage in the impersonation of a Yaqui Indian heroine. The new picture will be entitled "Her God."

The old Lyceum theater in Indianapolis has been secured by the Strand Theater Company, of Chicago, and will henceforth be known as the Strand. The interior will be thoroughly remodeled, under the direction of E. C. Divine, president of the Strand company. It is expected that the house will be opened about January 1, when it will be conducted along the same lines as the Strand theater in Chicago.

An organization known as the Screeners' Club, with headquarters in the Masonic Temple Building, is exploiting a mammoth ball for New Year's Eve, that is said to be in honor of numerous moving picture actors and actresses, who, it is announced, will come on here for the occasion. No one connected with the management of this affair, so far as I can learn, has anything to do with the moving picture business in any capacity. I have been told that it is a money-making scheme pure and simple, and as the Screeners' Club mentioned is an organization in no way connected with the film business, I can see no reason why the promoters of the affair should announce to the public through the daily press that they will bring on here noted stars engaged in the production of moving pictures. One day last week the promoters of the affair connected the Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago with the undertaking, but this was promptly contradicted by R. R. Nehls, president of that club, who stated that his organization had no connection whatsoever with the dance announced for New Year's eve at the Coliseum. J. R. Mills, president of the Screeners' Club, which is sponsor for the dance, denied that the name of the Reel Fellows' Club had been used.

D. W. Griffith stopped over in this city, between trains, on his way from Los Angeles to his old home in Kentucky, on Thursday, December 9. Mr. Griffith's journey was caused by the death of his mother, an old lady of 86 years, who passed away last week after a brief illness. She had never seen "The Birth of a Nation" and her famous son had planned for a special exhibition in Louisville for her particular benefit. The event was to have taken place some time next month.

"Bill Kalem" Wright arrived in the city Thursday night, December 9, from Detroit, having visited that city and Cleveland since he left New York City. He was so busy that he could only reach me by telephone before leaving for St. Louis on Friday night. After the Missouri city he will visit Pittsburgh and Buffalo. Mr. Wright told me that he had found business very good in Cleveland and Detroit, also that the General Film Company's exchange managers had all their best hustling clothes on and were jubilant over the new life that has been injected into their business. Mr. Wright told me also that the Kalem Stingaree series is going splendidly, chiefly for the reason that it had been written by an honest-to-God author, in the person of E. W. Hornung, the English author of the well-known novel, "Raffles."

"With the returning of the Studebaker into the Jones, Linick & Schaefer hands, our Triangle experiences, as we have known them, are much simplified," writes Kitty Kelly in the Chicago Tribune. This simplification, Miss Kelly states, refers especially to service, music and price. "This weekly entertainment is two reels short of the accustomed length," again to quote Miss Kitty. "Its length in the future, according to Manager Louis Jones, will be variable, depending on the quality of the offerings. When they are strong both features will be run, he says, and when otherwise, only one. Keystones will be run according to their cleanliness, the word being that no vulgarity is going to besmirch that screen." Louella O. Parsons, of the Chicago Herald, writes: "The difference between the former $2 program offered at the Studebaker and the present 25-cent performance is not apparent in anything but price and music. The same quality of pictures, the same pretty interior of the theater, with the ushers in their triangle costumes, is still with them. The program is minus a picture, but I am not so sure this detracts from the entertainment. In former days the four pictures were a bit too long. Then, too, most people like to wander in and out of a moving picture theater at their own convenience—that is one of the pleasant things about the movies. The Studebaker was comfortably filled yesterday, and the lovers of good pictures seemed to realize that a bargain was being offered by the 25-cent schedule. People like bargains in films, as well as in merchandise or anything else."

Gus. Trulich, manager and part owner of the Kriterion and Robie theaters, this city, called on us last week. O. J. Trulich, his brother, is partner. The Kriterion and the Robie seat about 375 people each. The Robie programs consist of Universal and Mutual regular service and Broadway features, four and five reels being used, while the programs at the Kriterion are comprised of the General Film Company's product and Fox pictures. Five reels form the regular program at the Kriterion, and seven reels the special programs, which are offered on Wednesdays, Thursdays and Sundays, 5 cents admission being charged for the regular, and 10 cents for the special. Mr. Trulich reported first class business at the Kriterion, but only medium business at the Robie.

W. R. Skates was appointed manager of the General Film Company's Wabash branch, 17-19 South Wabash avenue, last week, by F. C. Aiken, division manager. Mr. Skates formerly, for several years, was connected with the General Film Company, in a managerial capacity, both in Chicago and Boston. Prior to that, for several years, he was secretary of the Theater Film Service Company of this city, of which Mr. Aiken was president and general manager. The numerous friends of Mr. Skates heartily congratulated him on his coming back to the fold.

Hopper in Modern Comedy

"Don Quixote" Comedian Will Revert to the Manner of "A Matinee Idol" and Gilbert & Sullivan.

DE WOLF HOPPER, D. W. Griffith's celebrated $125,000 a year comedian, who forsook operetta and musical comedy for the lure of Triangle films, has completed his "Don Quixote" picture for the Triangle-Fine Arts Studio and is making another which will be called "A Knight of the Garter."

Mr. Hopper enjoyed the filming of Chester Withey's adaptation of "Don Quixote" immensely, notwithstanding the hard time of it he had in finding a lean and scrawny Rosinante that would bear his avoirdupois. Edward Dillon, the director, gave him a good supporting cast that included Max Davison as Sancho Panza, Fay Tincher as Dulcinea and Chester Withey as Don Fernandez. Stills of the Don Quixote films recently received show that it is the true spirit of classic satire, and the windmill scene particularly will evoke hearty mirth. Mr. Hopper is glad, however, to get back to his more recent stamping ground of modern comedy characterization and to put away for the nonce his costume togs. "A Knight of the Garter" will present him as a modern in the long cutaway coat, striped trousers and silk hat of "A Matinee Idol," in which he was so successful a few years ago. Herewith is a picture showing how he will look in the new comedy.

CHICAGO ASSOCIATION DISAVOWS "MOVIE BALL."

Chicago, December 11, 1915.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Please give this your special mention, that the International Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association is not identified in any manner, shape or form with the "Movie Ball" advertised to be held at the Coliseum on New Year's Eve, December 31, 1915. Neither are we in any way connected with any promoter of same. Thanking you in advance for your immediate attention, we beg to remain,

Very truly yours,
I. M. P. A. OF ILL.,

HUGHES' CENSOR BILL REINTRODUCED IN CONGRESS.

Despatches from Washington, D. C., are to the effect that the Hughes' censorship bill has been again introduced in the House of Representatives. This is the measure that was supported by the Rev. W. F. Crafts a year ago, but which failed of enactment.

HARRY O. HOYT WITH METRO.

HARRY O. HOYT, who has had more than four hundred scenarios accepted and produced, and who is the highest salaried writer in the profession, has joined the Metro staff, and in the future will write exclusively for that company. Until he was attracted to the Metro forces Mr. Hoyt was scenario editor for the Fox company, and before that was on the scenario staff of Kalem and Biograph.

Harry O. Hoyt.

Mr. Hoyt's record as a scenario author is practically the history of the scenario field of endeavor. He began writing for motion pictures ten years ago, when he was still a student at Columbia University. He continued writing after he went to Yale, where he was graduated with a view of taking up practice of law. A few months in a law office was sufficient to Mr. Hoyt, and the increasing demand for his scripts prompted him to give up his proposed career as a barrister, and devote all his time and energy to writing.

Among other things, Mr. Hoyt wrote the first picture in which Mary Pickford was featured. In fact, there is not a single artist, of any note, in the motion picture business, that has not appeared in at least one of his photoplays.

Mr. Hoyt is an indefatigable worker, and under high pressure recently made a picturization of Booth Tarkington's famous novel, "The Turmoil," for Rolfe-Metro, in thirty-six hours. Edgar Jones, who directed "The Turmoil," was obliged to have the script within that time, or else call for a postponement of the production. Mr. Hoyt proved equal to the task, though he was obliged to exist on three hours' sleep, and numerous quarts of black coffee.

Mr. Hoyt wrote the scenario of "The Man Without a Conscience," in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne will be starred, and which is now in process of production for an early release on the Metro program. This feature is being made by the Quality Pictures Corporation. Mr. Hoyt has also scenarioized the new and popular novel, "Big Tremaine," which Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne will also use for a starring vehicle.

"Rose of the Alley," an original five-part feature, in which little Mary Miles Minter is starred for the Metro program, is also the work of Mr. Hoyt. It is a story of New York's underworld, a gripping drama brimful of real thrills. Mr. Hoyt also picturized "Dimples," a big five-part production in which Miss Minter will be starred, and which is now being made under the direction of Edgar Jones, in the everglades near St. Augustine, Florida.

BROWN UNIVERSITY TO CENSOR FILMS.

That the morals of young women entrusted to its care shall not be perverted through the viewing of plays, or moving picture films of an unwholesome character has been decided by the Brown University of Providence, R. I., and its governing board. All of the plays and films shown at the Providence theaters are to be looked over by a committee of the college consisting of Dean Lida Shaw King, and Mrs. W. H. P. Faunce, wife of President Faunce, and Miss Sarah E. Doyle, who, although nearly eighty-five years old, is still alert and active, will represent the Rhode Island Society for the Instruction of Women. Plays which are approved by the committee will be announced to the students, who will not be allowed to attend other productions without the consent of their parents.

MOTION PICTURE FREEDOM LEAGUE.

As a Result of J. A. Quinn's Campaign Against Local Censors, Club Is Formed by Exhibitors and Manufacturers to Protect Their Films.

THE committee organized at the recent dinner of the producers, exchangemen and exhibitors met here Wednesday evening in the offices of the Broadway Theater Company, and organized the Motion Picture Freedom League for the purpose of conducting a nation-wide campaign against local censorship of films. The committee was composed of Thomas Dixon, G. M. Hutchinson, Fred Kley, D. Whiting, C. J. Morlen, J. A. Quinn, Dr. Sam Atkinson and A. W. Strong.

The plan of action was mapped out and the following officers elected: J. A. Quinn, president, Sam Atkinson, secretary; C. J. Morlen, treasurer, and Thomas Dixon, G. M. Hutchinson and Jesse L. Lasky, vice-presidents.

It is the idea of the league to first show the world what the film center, Los Angeles, has to say about local censors by abolishing the board here. A petition signed by bankers, property owners, business men, producers, exhibitors, manufacturers, lodge and club members, education board members, and every prominent person in this section, will be presented to the city council at its next meeting. The petition asks that the council abolish the board and instead employ a film commissioner to see that the proper eliminations are made in films as the national board directs, before they are shown in this city. From the prominence of those who have placed their signatures upon the petition, the movement seems to have a momentum which will roll it straight through to victory, and when it does, Los Angeles film men will be able to wave the feather in their hats and pass the formula for abolishing local boards broadcast.

Charges Against Tugwell Dropped.

The Public Welfare Committee of the Council has decided that the affidavits charging A. P. Tugwell, deposed president of the Board of Motion Picture Censors, with misconduct, are really not officially filed and therefore are not answerable. The fine line of distinction between affidavits that are presented to the Mayor and Council and affidavits that are "on file" saved Mr. Tugwell an embarrassing hearing.

He was present, however, with a sheaf of affidavits to controvert those which aided in his being dismissed from the board and after he had made a very eloquent speech, Chairman Lindsey, of the committee, declared that there is no need of a defense, as there has appeared no official prosecution. Mr. Tugwell is out of the commission and all he asked was that his age and reputation be safeguarded by a hearing of the charges. The report of the committee, which probably will be accepted by the Council, virtually declares that the Mayor was justified in removing Mr. Tugwell, that the Council did the proper thing in confirming the removal, but that the charges that figured in the transaction need not be answered.

PREACHER LAUDS "DAMAGED GOODS."

Says That Trainers of Children Should Be Instructed on This Subject, and That Ignorance Is the Mother of Vice.

Dr. Brougher, of Los Angeles, preached a wonderful sermon last Sunday to a great audience in Temple auditorium. His subject was "Damaged Goods," and the sermon was based on the photoplay of that title which is being exhibited at Quinn's Superba this week.

"The subject of impurity with its consequences is one upon which preachers and teachers of morals are beginning to speak," said Dr. Brougher. "There has been a conspiracy of silence in the past that has made it possible for the Devil to ruin thousands of young men and women. In recent years, however, it has been discovered that ignorance is not the mother of virtue, but the mother of vice.

"'Damaged Goods' is a great warning. I believe that every trainer of children who has not been well instructed on this subject at home ought to see this photoplay and learn its powerful lessons.

"We cannot be too careful in training the rising generation. Instead of doing away with the censoring committee I think it ought to be made larger. It might be well to have one expert commissioner paid to give all his time to the work. He would see to it that every elimination recommended by the national board of censors is made. Furthermore, if he is in doubt about a play that is to be presented to children under sixteen years of age, he ought to be compelled by law to call in an advisory committee of twenty-one or more representative parents, teachers and church leaders.

"There are five D's upon which this photoplay gives instruction—Drink, Dissipation, the Double Standard, Disease and Death.

"Be sure, young man, young woman, that you are going to lose out in the game of pleasure, and life will only end in shame and sorrow, if you do not have a divine friend to help you to fight the Devil and all his trickery."

This means that preparedness is better than lamenting the lack of proper fighting equipment. Several men who have voiced their opinions say that the proverbs and sayings can easily be reversed. "Ignorance is bliss," is painfully changed to "Ignorance is unhappiness, death and destruction," and so on. Educators here are highly in favor of broadening the educational standards and men who are prominent in professional worlds are of the same opinion.

FOX'S WESTERN MAN HAS STORY.

Harry Leonhardt Tells Fish Story That Is a Whale.

When, on Thanksgiving, Harry Leonhardt drove to San Diego with Clarke Irvine and R. E. Barron, traveling exchangeman for Fox, they reported sighting a great whale on the beach. In Los Angeles the story met with near-derision until Irvine, who had graflexed the whale, produced the pictures this week, and the laugh is now on those who disbelieved the film men's story.

Harry Leonhardt's version is as follows: "We had been touring leisurely along the coast road, when about a mile from Del Mar we were attracted to the waters of a cove, about a mile ahead of us. I took a squint through the binoculars and saw what looked like a round back of a submarine, with the conning tower and periscope showing. The ship destroyer, as I thought it to be, was cruising along, stopping, then going down, and again rising. We all watched it for some time, then as we approached a point on shore opposite the maneuvering torpedoer, we saw that it was gradually coming ashore. Soon the outlines of a big whale were seen, and we found that in our excitement and interest in the present war, had forgotten that there was such a thing as a whale's back which resembles a submarine.

"In half an hour the big brute was high and dry It had become stranded in the shallow waters and the receding tides left it to the mercy of the shore. On the way back we photographed the monster when it was clear out of the water.

"Anyway, the picture shows the whale and we would not like to call this a fish story, for it certainly is not a fish story —it is a whale of a story."

SMALL TOWN GOT ITS "FACTORY."

The city of Inglewood long desired an industrial section of its village, and here is what the News said about its big enterprise. It's good.

A FACTORY WITHOUT THE ASKING.

E. A. Spalding remarked the other day that after Inglewood has been working for years to get a factory here, along comes the Keystone Moving Picture Company and builds a big three-story factory, with water tank, whistle and all complete, all in three days, over by the old brick smoke stack near the water pumping station. The chimney was recently purchased by the Keystone people to be blown up in making an exciting film. The factory is only an artificial front, supported at the rear by a framework of light lumber, but it looks just as much like a factory as if it were the real thing. And in the explosion it will be burned, with employees fleeing in every direction, so the picture should be a hair-raising one. Last Monday and Tuesday, employees of the Keystone Company were busy at the old chimney, which is 135 to 140 feet high, assisting Tyler, the noted steeple-jack, in getting a rope up through the chimney and down on the outside, with which to draw a rope ladder up the outside. The idea for the picture was for Tyler to climb to the top of the chimney and be rescued by an aeroplane just before the explosion wrecks the big stack and the factory. In trying to get the rope to the top of the chimney he used several devices, first trying to fly paper balloons with long ropes tied to them, up through the inside of the chimney, but the breeze tore the light balloons to pieces before they could finish their work. Another plan was to use powerful rockets, tying rope to them and shooting them up through the inside of the chimney. After several experiments Tyler succeeded in aiming the rockets so accurately that they shot straight up through the chimney and a couple of hundred feet higher into the air.

It seems that the big motion picture companies spare no trouble or expense to get even one small feature that they want in some of their special films. The picture of this Inglewood smoke stack being blown to pieces with dynamite will be shown all over the United States, and will doubtless be used for years as parts of other scenes.

Selig Players Are the Whole Show in Big Outdoor Event at Las Vegas.

From Las Vegas, N. M., papers we are informed that Tom Mix and his company of Selig players took a prominent part in the Annual Fall Festival of that city last week. The Selig players led the big parade headed by Tom Mix. Then followed one of the oldest stage coaches of the early days with a number of cowboys, cowgirls, Indians and other wild and Western things.

After the parade a large crowd left the city for the field on which the interesting events of the day were held. The first event on the program was the riding of tough bronchos, a reward of $100 being offered for any horse that could not be ridden. Joe Ryan and Sid Jordan, of the Selig forces, demonstrated to the spectators that they could ride "a little" and that there was no broncho too tough for them to handle.

In the women's shooting contest, Miss Victoria Forde, shooting at a distance of 35 yards, shot three chickens.

Tom Mix was given a hand for the several rope and lariat stunts he put on.

The men's shooting, which lasted late into the day, proved to be a real event. The first honors were tied between Tom Mix and a local resident.

Mother of D. W. Griffith Is Dead.

Plans for a happy family reunion to be held in Louisville, Ky., December 12, to celebrate the eighty-seventh birthday of Mrs. Mary Perkins Griffith, mother af D. W. Griffith, were shattered by the grim hand of death.

Mrs. Griffith, who was to have been greeted on her birthday by her two devoted sons and a loving daughter, suffered a relapse from an attack of pneumonia and died early Monday morning this week.

Instead of the rejoicing family party, the three children will gather in sorrow at their mother's bier to pay a final tribute.

Albert Griffith, the other son, made a special trip to the United States from London to attend the family reunion, and was present when his mother died. So was Miss Ruth Griffith, the daughter.

Filled with sorrow, Mr. Griffith immediately left Los Angeles to attend his mother's funeral. All arrangements for the funeral have been suspended, pending his arrival in Louisville.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Hamilton Smith, the new Pacific Coast representative of the Kalem Company, has now taken charge of his office and made his headquarters at the Hollywood studios. As Mr. Smith is writing the stories of "The Hazard of Helen" series, it was decided to move James Davis and his players from Glendale to Hollywood.

There was quite a panic this week at Inceville when it was rumored that smallpox had broken out among the Russians who work in one of the mob scenes in a current Ince-Triangle feature in which William H. Thompson is being starred. The foreigners, who numbered more than a hundred men, women and children, had been brought from the little fishing village on the shore road to Santa Monica. Physicians were immediately sent for and every Russian carefully examined, but no signs of the dreaded disease could be found. Inceville breathed freely once more.

Monte M. Katterjohn, the young photoplaywright, is expecting to leave Inceville in about a week to take a trip way down to Kentucky. Monte says he wants to learn the habits of the mountaineers, have a peep at some moonshining and get real atmosphere for a story he is writing from this region.

The Fox players arrived from New York Sunday afternoon this week accompanied by General Manager W. R. Sheehan. They were met at the station by Pacific Coast representative Harry Leonhardt, a number of photoplayers, representatives of the Chamber of Commerce and others. The party includes Robert Mantell and his wife Genevieve Hamper, Theda Bara, William Farnum, Dorothy Bernard, director Oscar Apfel and wife, Lester Scott, Jr., Willard Lewis, H. S. Herbert, H. J. Barrows, A. Gondolfi, John J. Meighan, Mr. and Mrs. Grenier, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore and Barry Klein.

The Fox Film Corporation has leased the old Selig Edendale studio for a long period. Mr. Leonhardt stated that this is just the beginning of the Fox activities on the Coast and that several more companies will be sent out within a few months, and that his concern eventually will build a large studio here.

Long Beach papers advise that G. H. Hawling, representative for the Metropolitan Motion Picture Company of New York, has been there for several days endeavoring to select a site for the construction of a large motion picture plant which he declares will be built by his concern soon. He wants a place in the eastern section of the city, several blocks from the ocean front. Balboa is the only motion picture studio at present in Long Beach.

Rain hit the film hub this week and many cameras in studios where only the canopy of the sky is used were forced to stop exposing film. Wind and fog put a damper on production, but only two days were lost. Reports from Bear Valley say that five feet of snow lies on the ground and that several companies are now working. Sturgeon's Vitagraph players are up in the wilds getting scenes for "God's Country and the Woman," which is to feature Nell Shipman.

Two high school boys who are wide awake this week started a small moving picture company to produce pictures showing school life. They are Perry Hollingsworth and Jerome Waller, and they have purchased equipment and have begun operations.

This week passports were applied for by a party of local persons who expect to voyage to China and journey into the depths of that country to make films depicting the life of the missionaries and natives. The list includes Albert E. Douglas, wife and child; Charles Gifford, John K. Anderson and wife, and Miss Elle Van Lanighan.

"Water stuff" may be all right when the camera is trained on the scene and when there are warm blankets and a draught of hot ginger ready, but when a boatload of actors are nearing the dock after a rough trip across the channel, and the thing turns turtle and gives everyone a good ducking, it is no laughing matter. This happened to a bunch of Americans returning from the channel islands off Santa Barbara this week, and Bill Russell rescued Charlotte Burton and her fur coat, and then had to swim clear in to shore because the little boat could not carry so much water and people with wet clothes.

The old photoplayers' club, or the new, as it now is, after eight weeks of pulling and boosting, has at last opened club rooms on Broadway, fitted up the place, decorated it, and installed a telephone and a file of papers, and on the coming meeting night will hold a big "action" which will be attended by a large number of film men. There will be plenty of music, song and entertainment, and a lunch will be served. It now looks as if the photoplay artists of the center of production were to have a permanent and efficient club.

We were in a drug store the other day, and while being waited upon a man entered and asked for some mercury bichloride, saying that he wanted enough to kill a dog. The druggist asked him his name, and when the man said he was Kenneth McGaffey, of the Lasky Company, and that he was hired as a publicity man, the druggist smiled and said that that kind of a dog should not be killed. However, this is the excuse that McGaffey gives for druggists refusing to sell poison to press agents:

Say, why don't you ever write something about me?

Don't I get a notice for that swell fall I made?

Don't send anything about me to the Humestown, Iowa, papers. It would spoil Pa's political chances if it was known I was an actress.

Why do these dames always get their pictures in the papers? Why don't you print some pictures of us cowhands?

Why do the stars get all the publicity? I've been working extra here for a year and not a line, not a line.

Why ain't my name in the cast? It ain't my fault that the Director cut out my scene.

Have a cigar. Could you use a couple of hundred of my pictures I just had taken in a new sport shirt?

I ain't gonna do no stunt if she's gonna be in it.

I doubled for the star in that dive and I want credit for it.

The Daily Pain is going to run two pages of picture stuff every day. Now we look to you for a nice big ad. to help us out.

The Gamut club, composed of artists, musicians, players, and many men of letters, entertained the Scream club at one of its delightful monthly dinners this week. William E. Wing, scenarioist, humorist and publicist, arranged the dinner and as a result every loyal Screamer held private and silent sessions afterward to offer down thanks to the wonderful hospitality of Wing and the Gamuters. Miss Maud Powell was also an honored guest. Wing told in exceptionally arid and humorous language about the members of the Scream club, calling us super-human, because the publicity men members were wont to build buildings in the hours 'tween darkness and dawn, and to have eagles soar down Christmas day and steal candy children from Inceville Christmas trees, etc. Each blushing member of the screaming organization was personally and publicly introduced, and left standing, to sit down as best he could. After the affair was over we all breathed one big sigh of relief and then listened to some wonderful music and song. Anyway all hats were off to Wing.

A meeting is slated for the western representatives of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America to be held at the home of Miss Mabel Condon in Hollywood. There will be a dinner and then the business plans gone over for the coming season. Those named by J. W. Binder, executive secretary of the organization, to act on the coast committee, are Miss Mabel Condon, Kenneth A. O'Hara, J. C. Jessen, and the writer, Clarke Irvine.

Mary Boland has completed her picture performance with Frank Keenan and left, this week, for New York. Mr. Keenan will also shortly depart East to spend the holidays. On his return to Inceville he will be starred in a new Triangle feature production now being prepared for him.

Somebody around here is going to get an automobile free! Next week the Hollywood people are staging a poinsetta fete and historical ensemble for the benefit of its citizens and visiting tourists. As usual photoplay artists will hold forth each evening. The first night is laid out for the Lasky people and the second evening will be for the Triangle Fine Arts folks, while the third and closing night is to be run by Universalites. On this momentous evening Anita King, the Lasky tourist, will give away a nice touring car for which tickets will have been given out during the three-day fete. The affair will exhibit the wonderful flaming flowers of the state.

Chief Eagleye, the Indian actor and playwright of the Fine Arts studios, was seriously injured last week while working in a scene aboard a ship in San Pedro Harbor. He fell, hurting one side and sustaining internal injuries. The chief was rushed to the landing, where an ambulance met the boat and took the injured man to the San Pedro Hospital.

Here is a funny one from Balboa. Jackie Saunders has accomplished the feat of kissing herself on the screen, and on the lips, in a wonderful double exposure. Usually the characters, played by one actor, cannot approach to the dividing line of the picture more than about three inches, but the cameraman on the job made this feat possible, and as a result of the clever photography the girl actually kisses herself on the lips without spoiling the picture. Joseph Brotherton was the cranker.

The Clune Co. has rented 1,000 head of sheep and will use them in a part of their forthcoming release, "Ramona." The location is several miles east of Ventura, in the Santa Barbara mountains, and already great preparations are under way. Many persons from the little city are to journey up into the hills to watch the staging under the direction of Donald Crisp. This is a new location and ought to produce some excellent scenes for the historical play which Mr. Clune is making.

"Carmen," the wonderful Fox version of the well-known story, has been re-run at Miller's Alhambra theater on Hill street, which was recently reopened with Fox features. We dropped in to see the picture again. There was only one little trouble with the house. It was three-quarters full, and it seats about 800. The projection was poor, and parts of the excellent production were lost through this trouble. Once the film skidded off the wheels and the operator neglected to put on a slide and even the organist was asleep at the switch, and before long, about six minutes, we were wanting action. Evidently there is no house manager, or if there was one he was sadly in need of pep, or else he is not on to his job.

The residents of Edendale who are used to most any kind of excitement, being surrounded by half a dozen motion picture studios, were slightly startled this week when a keg of blasting powder was set off in a Phunphilm comedy scene at the Rolin studios. The explosion rocked the ground like a miniature earthquake and shattered many of the windows in the neighboring houses. Such a realistic effect had not been intended by Director Hal Roach, who had issued orders to the property man for a small keg of gunpowder to blow the top off a barrel. The property man evidently got the wrong kind of a keg and when the explosion came off the whole company was covered with dirt and debris. The assistant director had to be sent to the hospital with a piece of the barrel embedded in his leg and the Rolin Company is now busy paying for all those broken windows. Fortunately Director Roach was safely hidden behind the camera man.

Glenn Gano, a female impersonator employed by the Kalem Company to "double" a particularly dangerous feat in the "Hazards of Helen" series was perhaps fatally injured Tuesday afternoon this week, while making a leap from the Fourth street bridge in front of a moving train. Gano, dressed as a girl, was suspended in mid-air on a rope which was supposed to swing him to safety as the train rushed by. In some manner the rope caught in the folds of his dress, and instead of swinging clear the unfortunate man was struck a glancing blow by the engine. He was taken at once to the receiving hospital.

The happy youngsters were transported from the McKinley home to the Hill street theater in a big "Rubberneck" car hired by Mr. Leonhardt. The bus was covered with pennants of the McKinley home and the Alhambra theater, and attracted considerable attention on the streets downtown. That the kids enjoyed themselves is hardly necessary to mention.

What is planned to be one of the most attractive motion picture theaters on the Pacific Coast is now being constructed on the East Side of Main street, between Fifth and Sixth streets. Loewen Bros., real estate operators and amusement promoters, are building the house, which it is estimated will cost $50,000, and have a seating capacity of 800. It has been named "The Sherman," in honor of the owner of the property, General M. A. Sherman, one of California's oldest and wealthiest citizens. The theater will be equipped with modern heating and ventilating devices; will have a large rest room for women and children, finished in ivory, blue and gold, a smoking room for the men, etc. Six two-hour shows will be given daily from eleven in the morning until eleven at night. Music will be a feature and a large pipe organ installed. The house is scheduled to open on Christmas Day. S. H. Freidlander is the manager.

Ocean Meets Exchange Men

At Meeting at Hotel Astor Mr. Goldburg Explains His Company's Plans.

WITH more than fifty exchange men and their agents, representing in their combined interests the leading independent distributors of film of the United States, Canada and Europe, the convention of the newly formed Ocean Film Corporation was formally opened in session at the Hotel Astor in New York City on Saturday last and continued through Saturday night and Sunday, resulting in the signature to franchises of exchanges controlling the greater majority of the territory of this country and abroad.

Vice-President and General Manager Jesse J. Goldburg in his opening address outlined in full the plans and intent of his organization, which is in part as follows:

"The Ocean Film Corporation begins its operations with a definite intent to make feature productions of motion pictures which will not violate the meaning of that oft-misused word—feature. We have spared no effort or expense in gathering together an organization comprised of those men who are conversant with the motion picture industry in its every branch—men who know pictures, know how not to make them and know what the public and exchange men demand. It is our intent to get and offer the best money will buy; to present stage and screen stars without the idiotic expenditure of these fabulous salaries which the incompetent "star of a night" has been coached to exact, thereby putting money in production instead of exorbitant salaries—to present stage and fiction masterpieces and original scenarios which have a just right and qualification to be presented in motion pictures and to embody these essentials in the making of pictures under competent direction, with intelligent castings and with qualified discrimination of practical motion picture material in our subjects.

"The Ocean Film Corporation will begin releasing on or about February 1. It is the plan of the company to release a minimum of two feature pictures each month, one on the first day and one on the fifteenth, in each instance to be a minimum length of five parts. The directing staff, which now consists of George DeCarlton, director general of productions; Col. Joseph Smiley, formerly of Lubin and World Film Corporation; Marshall Farnum, formerly of Selig and Fox, and Lawrence McGill, formerly of All Star and Metro companies, is at present at work on the first four of the company's productions. With the date of the first release, the company will have on hand ready for release more than ten productions, and we will insist upon that amount of surplus being at all times on hand that the insurance against unforeseen conditions may be adequately met.

"We will insist upon merit in production first, last and completely, and then realization of the import that proper presentation plays in this newer theatrical industry; we will pay an attention to the advertising publicity helps to the distributing body which will be befitting to the merit of the productions which the Ocean Film Corporation will present. If there is a value in advertising matter, paper, heralds, photos, lobby displays, etc., and such value is undeniably essential we all know, then such departures as should have long since been injected into this great industry, but which have been, for some unaccountable reason, so grossly overlooked, are promised to you and will come from the department of exploitation which will play an important part in Ocean films."

In attendance at the convention were representatives of the following companies: Detroit Kriterion Film Service, of Detroit; Majestic Feature Film Co., of Detroit; Western Kriterion Film Service of Minneapolis; All Star Feature Distributors, of San Francisco; Alliance Films Co., of Cleveland; Union Film Supply Co., of Boston; Quality Film Co., of Pittsburgh; Electric Theater Supply Co., of Philadelphia, Pa.; Central Film Co., of Chicago; Casino Feature Film Co., of Detroit; American Feature Film Co., of Boston; Celebrated Players Film Co., of Chicago; S. A. Lynch, of Asheville, N. C.; Central Feature Film Co., of Boston; Greene's Feature Photo Plays, of New York and Boston; International Cinematograph Co., Ltd., of London.

Each of the aforesaid concerns have submitted bids for control of the Ocean product in their territories and news of the exchanges who have secured franchises together with the territory to be controlled will be announced by the management of the Ocean Film Corporation within the next few days.

In addition to those in attendance, the following concerns are at present negotiating with the Ocean Film Corporation: Monarch Feature Film Co., of Kansas City; Notable Feature Film Co., Salt Lake City; J. A. Pogue Feature Film Co., of Des Moines; N. A. Magner, of San Francisco; Liberty Film Renting Co., of Pittsburgh; Colonial Film Corp., of Atlanta; Author's Film Co., Inc., of New York City; Southern Paramount Pictures Corp., of Atlanta; Kriterion Co., of Boston; Wichita Film and Supply Co., of Wichita.

Pathe Acquires Savage's Plays

The First to be "Madame X" and "Excuse Me"—Famous Theatrical Producer to Release Through Pathe.

RIGHT on top of the announcement of the acquisition by Pathe of the A. H. Woods plays comes the news that the same house has purchased the rights to Henry W. Savage's great list of theatrical successes. Mr. Savage has to his credit some of the most popular productions of the time, and two at least—"Madame X" and "Excuse Me"—hold records as being the most successful drama and farce respectively of recent years. "Everywoman" also has made a great name for itself.

These two plays have already ben filmed under the direction of Geo. F. Marion, who originally produced them, and who has been Mr. Savage's chief producer for the past fifteen years. Practically the entire original casts were used in these pictures. Dorothy Donnelly starring in "Madame X" and Geo. F. Marion in "Excuse Me." Both pictures will be placed upon Pathe's Gold Rooster Program in the near future. "Madame X," which was written by Alexander Bisson, enjoyed the tremendous run of seven seasons, and for eighteen weeks in New York played to an average of $20,000 weekly. It proved to be as popular on tour as it was in the metropolis, and many theater managers remember it as the biggest attraction they ever played. It will be released in six parts. "Excuse Me" ran for four seasons, a phenomenal record for a comedy-drama. It was written by Rupert Hughes and will be released in five parts.

Among the other famous Savage productions which before long may be seen in pictures are "The Shogun," "Little Boy Blue," "The Sultan of Sulu," " King Dodo," "Maids of Athens," "Woodland," "Somewhere Else," "Peggy from Paris," and the "Prince of Pilsen" (operas) and "Common Sense Brackett," "Behold Thy Wife," "Along Came Ruth," "The Stolen Story" and "Miss Patsy" (dramas).

Mr. Savage was (and is) one of the Boston's most prominent business men before embarking in the theatrical business. It is said that it was by mere accident that he went into it. If true, it was a lucky accident for the amusement world for he applied to his new business the same high principle that won fame in a more commercial calling.

As a result of this deal, Pathe, before so strongly fortified with photoplay material, becomes almost a monopolist in the possession of stage successes.

General Film Assignments

President Berst Announces Many Changes in the Management of Branch Offices.

PRESIDENT J. A. BERST of the General Film Company, who has been busy with the task of reorganizing the distributing forces of that company, has been making a number of changes in the management of several branches. Up to the present, these changes have been made:

E. J. Farrell has been appointed district manager for the whole south. Mr. Farrell was formerly manager of the Boston branch.

W. R. Scates has been appointed manager of the Wabash branch in Chicago. Mr. Scates is very well known in the film industry, especially in the Middle West.

H. G. Morrow has been appointed manager in New Orleans.

D. Prince in the office at Dallas has been appointed manager of the same office.

A. L. Ehrgott, formerly manager at Bangor, has been appointed to New Haven, Conn.

A. Bevan, manager at New Haven, has been appointed to Albany, N. Y.

J. A. Koerpel, formerly at Albany, has been appointed branch manager at Washington, D. C.

G. Newhall, formerly of the Boston office, has been appointed manager of Bangor, Me.

M. Milder has been appointed branch manager of Cleveland, O. He was formerly at Pittsburgh.

N. I. Ehrlich has been appointed branch manager for Pittsburgh. He was formerly assistant manager in one of the New York branches.

The Railroad Screen Novel

President Hutchinson, of the Signal Film Corporation, Talks of the Making of an Interesting Form of Picture Story.

By S. S. Hutchinson.

FROM the day that the idea of the power of steam was conceived in the mind of a boy sitting in mother's kitchen, watching the stream of vapor rise from the spout of a boiling kettle, down to the present day of billions of dollars worth of railroad properties and the speed of the lightning express trains and powerful mogul engines, there has not developed a theme of greater popular interest than the railroad.

In all the rural and suburban communities, the people depend upon the railroad as a means of transportation. In the larger cities and the business centers of our civilization, commerce depends upon the railroads. A large percentage of the working class are directly or indirectly in the employ of these great organizations, and countless of persons, great and small in our social scale, derive their livelihood from the earnings of these common carriers.

Capitalists watch the management and earnings of railroads, as well as legislation for or against them, as the chief barometer of the times. It can be well said that in the railroads beat the pulse of our national life. Therefore, to portray a railroad story on the screen requires that those who attempt it, be the best in their line. Frank Hamilton Spearman, the author of "The Girl and the Game," made a study of railroad life which carried him into the innermost secrets of the financial and operating ends of transcontinental lines. He knows "the game."

James P. McGowan, the director, is a practical railroad man and his screened pictures have won for him the praise of railroad officials the country over.

Helen Holmes, the heroine in "The Girl and the Game," is the ideal for the part. She possesses the deep and thorough understanding of picture values and ability to present exceptional dramatic interpretations and the courage to take any sort of personal risk to bring realism to the story, that places her in a niche all her own. Miss Holmes is fair and fearless—the heroine perfect.

In order that the director and his company might be accorded every facility for the taking of the unusual and spectacular scenes in "The Girl and the Game," I had erected a depot on the grounds of the Signal studios, practicable in every way inside and outside, switch towers at various points on the Signal trackage and all the known safeguards as well as hazards of the rail were installed or provided for, including locotmotives and rolling stock.

An idea of the completeness of the Signal studios may be gleaned from this: in the taking of the first chapter of "The Girl and the Game," Director McGowan, twenty minutes after the author's script had been given to him, had a train consisting of Pullmans, parlor car, diner, baggage car, day coaches and engine ready for the camera.

In the actual operation of railroads, there is much that is romantic, much that is adventurous, bringing into the hearts of all, a responsive feeling of compelling interest. Great writers have turned to the rail for their theme, but Mr. Spearman has felt the pulse of "the game" as has no one else, and a fertile imagination has enabled him to present, in all this realism, "the girl," dainty, charming, and daring.

Mr. Spearman has deciphered the mysterious web entangling the operations of vast railroad enterprises, drawn it gently aside from off the statuesque shoulders of a pampered daughter of society and hidden with it the piercing eyes of some charmer of another sisterhood, who has put her jewel-laden hands into "the game."

It is because there is so much of the human element in the life of those of the rail that Mr. Spearman was attracted to it as a subject teeming with unusual heart interest. He is thrilled by the hum of the long steel threads and the chant of the telegraph key, distributing its message of mingled hope, success, and despair. It all means something to him and he has knowingly written what that meaning is. Were he not a writer, it would mean just as much to him, for his understanding of it all is beyond a suppression of feeling—something unconquerably big and undeniably dominant.

Thus, in "The Girl and the Game," he gives you himself—his innermost self, wrapped in a lingerie of literary lace and a tremendous storm-coat of vigorous thought—which Director McGowan with convincing realism has put upon the screen.

The keyboard of life lives in "The Girl and the Game" and author, director and star, bring forth in natural continuity and definite sincerity, the pictured chants of regrets and anthems of triumphs, the great human notes of which are characters of blood and bone.

Metro Players in South

One Company in Savannah, Ga., Another in St. Augustine, Florida—Seek Permanent Southern Studio.

TWO Metro companies, one destined for Savannah, Ga., and the other for St. Augustine, Fla., have gone south to begin work on the exteriors for several important feature productions, which Metro will release early in the coming season. One company was from the Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., studio, while the other represented the best talent of the Columbia Pictures Corporation's forces.

Edwin Carewe is in charge of the Rolfe aggregation and will work in and around Savannah, while Edgar Jones will direct the Columbia company of players. Director Jones' assistant, P. Thad. Vollman, who recently resigned from the Lubin forces, preceded the company at St. Augustine by several days in order to make the necessary "locations" so that work might begin immediately upon the arrival of his chief and the players under Mr. Jones' direction.

Marguerite Snow will be starred in the production made in Savannah, which Edwin Carewe will direct, while little Mary Miles Minter will have the stellar role in the features directed by Edgar Jones which have the Florida Everglades for a background. Director Jones, it is said, has been given instructions to look over the lay of the land around St. Augustine, and if conditions are favorable to motion picture making, a permanent Metro studio for winter work may be established there. The same directions have been given Mr. Carewe in regard to Savannah and its environs, though it is not probable that studio sites will be selected at both places.

Miss Snow upon her arrival in Savannah will at once begin work on the vehicle selected for her initial venture under the direction of Rolfe Photoplays, Inc. This is an elaborate photo-dramatization of "The Upstart," which had a long run at the Maxine Elliott Theater, and one which will offer Miss Snow opportunity to exercise her wide range of talents in an unusual degree.

George Le Guere will be featured with Miss Snow in "The Upstart." He will also play across from her in another Rolfe-Metro feature picture, the exteriors for which will be taken in and around Savannah, which is as yet unnamed.

The Columbia-Metro aggregation of players, under Director Edgar Jones, will at once begin work on two five-part features, "Dimples" and "A Scrap of Pasteboard" both of them original manuscripts of unusually high calibre. Mary Miles Minter is starred in both productions, the parts chosen for her being exceptionally well adapted for her youthful grace and the appealing childish beauty which forms so great a part of her charm on the screen.

Tom J. Carrigan, a newcomer to the Metro forces, will be featured with Miss Minter in her two new pictures. Other players include Harry Ford, Peggy Hopkins, Fred Tidmarsh, Schuyler Ladd, Mae De Metz and William Tauscher. Besides this number, the party at St. Augustine also includes Mrs. Shelby, the mother of Miss Minter, Hal Rosson, the head cameraman, and several assistants.

CAMPBELL NOW OWNER OF GRAND.

T. A. Campbell is now the proprietor of the Grand Theater, Menominee, Mich. Immediately after acquiring the property, Mr. Campbell closed the house until the extensive improvements he had started were completed. The rejuvenated theater was opened recently and it is now a photoplay house that can be compared with some of those in bigger cities. Mr. Campbell has had many years' experience in the motion picture business, and was until he took over the Grand, the owner and manager of a photoplay theater in Littleton, N. H.

Vitagraph's New Release Schedule

COMMENCING with Monday, Dec. 20, the Vitagraph Company will inaugurate a new policy, releasing their output only on three days a week—Monday, Friday and Saturday. Monday's releases will consist of a one-reel comedy and a locked-reel program. This will be known as "a personally picked program," comprising a four-part drama and a single-reel comedy. Friday's release will be the same as before, with a single-reel Sidney Drew comedy, and a three-part Broadway Star Feature every Saturday. This change will bring the Vitagraph output up to ten reels a week, with three of comedy and seven of drama for the initial week.

The first "personally picked program," announced for Monday, Dec. 25, will consist of "On Her Wedding Night," a four-part drama, and the one-reel comedy, "The Patent Food Conveyor." The regular release is "Levy's Seven Daughters," a single-reel comedy.

"On Her Wedding Night" is a dramatic story of the murder of a man on his wedding night while speaking over the 'phone to the girl he was going to make his wife. The case bears on one of the guests, who is an amateur detective. He succeeds in clearing up the mystery after many trying experiences. Eugene Mullin wrote the story, and it was produced under the direction of William Humphrey, with an excellent cast, including Edith Storey, Antonio Moreno, Carolyn Birch, Charles Kent, William Dunn, Louise Beaudet.

The single-reel comedy accompanying this drama is "The Patent Food Conveyor," written by C. Graham Baker and produced by C. Jay Williams, with a cast comprising Kate Price, Harry Fisher, and Charles Eldridge. The other comedy release of this day is "Levy's Seven Daughters," produced by Wally Van from the script of J. G. Nattinger. Edward Elkas, Eulalie Jensen, Edwina Robbins and others will be seen in this comedy.

For Friday, Dec. 24, a one-part comedy is announced for release, entitled "Is Christmas a Bore?" featuring Sidney Drew. The story was written by James Montgomery Flagg and produced by Mr. Drew. This is an appropriate comedy for the Yuletide season. The story deals with the thought of Christmas boring on a man's mind, after being wished a Merry Christmas by his mother, wife and friends, to all of whom he pays no attention. He begins to realize the bad behavior toward his mother and becomes remorseful. He wakes up to find it all a dream, and on Christmas morning rejoices in wishing everyone "A Merry Christmas." Mr. Drew is assisted in the laugh-making by Mrs. Sidney Drew and Mary Maurice.

A three-part Broadway Star Feature is announced for release on Saturday, Dec. 25, entitled "The 13th Girl." This powerful drama is taken from the magazine story of "Where Did Lottie Go?" and was produced under the direction of Theodore Marston. The script is written around the hardships of a poor girl given a position of a model in a fashionable department store. Her beauty attracts the attention of the junior partner, also that of the head art advisor. The girl has many trying, exciting experiences. The story ends with the death of the father, caused by the shock of his son's scandal and the son's suicide. A lifelong friendship begins between the pretty model and the girl the junior partner was supposed to marry. Arline Pretty as "The 13th Girl" and Robert Whitworth as the Junior Partner will be seen at their best. The cast also includes such popular stars as Julia Swayne Gordon, Lillian Burns, Frank Currier and Arthur Cozine.

Grace Williams, Edison Leading Woman

A NEW and pretty face appearing in Edison leads of late is that of Grace Williams, whose work has been well received by critics and exhibitors. Though she has been appearing in Edison films for some little while, in minor parts, it was not suspected that so good material was so nearby.

Born and educated in New York, she still has the fairness of complexion of a country lass. She first appeared on the stage in stock. Much like girls out for a lark, she accompanied a girl friend who had a relative on the stage and landed in stock work. Later came an engagement with the "Coming Through the Rye" company while still a slip of a girl. In this she was introduced in a dance specialty, which she does very well. Then came "The Land of Nod" engagement and back into stock work again. Other companies which she has been with are: "The Rose Maid;" with Weber and Fields, in their New York theater in "Roly Poly"; with Christie McDonald in "Sweethearts"; and in "The War of Wars."

Grace Williams

She had done some work for Reliance and the Biograph before she went with Edison. Some of her films are: the features, "Faith and Fortune," "The Truth About Helen," "Waifs of the Sea," and "The Broken Word."

CENTAUR STUDIO NOT LEASED TO EQUITABLE.

Chester Beecroft, general manager of the Centaur Film Company, communicates to the Moving Picture World a denial of a statement published in these columns a few weeks ago to the effect that the Equitable had taken over the Centaur studios at Bayonne, N. J. Mr. Beecroft explains that one of the subsidiary companies of the Equitable used a part of the studio floor for a short time, but that it is not using it at present and at no time had a contract for the full floor space or for the factory or laboratory as claimed.

Paramount Cartoon Program

J. R. Bray Announces Interesting Subjects for Four Weeks in January.

FOLLOWING the anouncement that J. R. Bray, most famous of animated cartoonists, creator of "Coloncl Heeza Liar," and other famous cartoon characters, had become associated with Paramount Pictures Corporation and that the products of the Bray Studio, Inc., would be seen solely on the Paramount program, it is now stated that Mr. Bray's schedule of releases for the first four weeks has been prepared and, although subject to change, has been adopted.

The new year will usher in the first release on January 6th, when Mr. Bray's own cartoon, "Colonel Heeza Liar's Waterloo," and an educational "split" will have its initial unreeling under the Paramount banner. On January 13th, L. M. Glackens, one of Mr. Bray's corps of six assistants, will be represented by "Haddem Baad's Elopement," a cartoon, and also a part reel of educational material yet to be announced. On January 20th, a silhouette fantasy by C. Alan Gilbert, the noted illustrator, entitled "The Chess Queen," will be released with several hundred feet of educational film.

C. T. Anderson, another of Mr. Bray's assistants, will prepare for the Paramount program on January 27th, a cartoon entitled "The Police Dog on the Wire," and educational films of entertainment value will be assembled with the cartoons. In this connection, Mr. Bray has a big plan that he desires to work out fully before allowing the details to become generally known.

The releases of the Bray Studio, Inc., herein announced, are in addition to the political cartoons and others which Mr. Bray will draw for Paramount Newspictures, the first celluloid newspaper to be edited and published like a national magazine.

George R. Meeker, formerly manager of the re-booking department of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, has become editor-in-chief of Paramount Newspictures, and has succeeded in adding to his staff men of such national reputation that the success of his animated news is now a certainty.

TALKING IT OVER.

Edwin Carewe, who is directing the final scenes in "The House of Tears," a forthcoming Rolfe-Metro picture, in which Emily Stevens, the famous emotional actress is starred, will take a flying trip to his farm in Indian Territory to look after some business matters, before he begins work on his new Metro production. Mr. Carewe is one-fourth Chickasaw Indian, and inherited a farm of several hundred acres, through an Indian land grant, originally given his maternal grandmother. He has it stocked with high bred cattle and poultry and in addition keeps a large herd of Indian ponies.

Mr. Carewe has several Metro masterpictures to his credit, including "Destiny, or the Soul of a Woman," in which Miss Stevens is starred, and "The Final Judgment," in which Ethel Barrymore has the stellar role. In the accompanying photograph Mr. Carewe is seen discussing with Miss Stevens the fine points of one of the emotional scenes in "The House of Tears."

Authoress of "Bloom Center" Series Back

Tales Told by ex-Presidents Harrison and McKinley and Others at Her Father's Table Basis of Series of Which Maibelle Heikes Justice Is Sole Author.

THESE "Bloom Center" pictures are cutting such a wide swath among the sheaves of popularity that it was doubly interesting to find that they spring, as it were, from the very center of American life in the last generation. It has been said that they carry people back to their childhood, and well they may, for the typical life of the people is in them. Maibelle Heikes Justice, the sole author of them, except for a very few incidents, first prepared them to be published as a series of "Hoosier Tales," but recalled them, preferring to have the matter in the more popular form of pictures than in a magazine. Her father, the late James Monroe Justice, of Indiana, was a man well known in politics during his life (he is deceased these twenty years now).

Maibelle Heikes Justice.

A representative of the Moving Picture World found Miss Justice, who has just returned from a short stay in her chosen playground, the great Northwest woods, in her home here in New York and had an interesting interview with her in her beautiful library among books, paintings, delicate objects of art and relics of the past, among them a sword presented to her father by his old commander, Gen. Lew Wallace. She says: "The very material I use as many of the episode backgrounds I have heard told in my father's house when I was a girl in short dresses by such men as Benjamin Harrison, afterward president, and by my father's lifelong friend, William McKinley, before he was even governor of Ohio, and by Gen. Lew Wallace, of 'Ben-Hur' fame, with whom my father served as an officer in the Union army, as incidents they know of or that happened in their boyhood days, and they used to laugh over them. Some of the old-time events I have, of course, modernized; but some of those coming, 'Spooks,' a spiritualist story, and 'When the Circus Came,' and others, have come out wound round the stories I heard those famous men tell."

When the Lusitania was sunk Miss Justice's only sister was killed. She was a chemist of international repute and was on her way to England to provide the Allies with a disinfectant she had invented for cleansing the trenches. Her sister's work has been left to Miss Justice to carry on, and it is now incumbent on her to go into the chemical laboratory and study up her sister's line, so that the valuable work which her sister was doing shall not be lost to the world. The continuation of the "Bloom Center" stories in the face of these difficulties and the completion of a four-act drama that is just ready for the producer shows that this authoress is not afraid of hard work—but hard work is one of the first requirements of any solid authorship.

VERA MICHELENA WITH OCEAN FILM.

Following its successive announcement of purchasing the rights to standard dramatic productions and popular novels for photoplay adaptations and the signing up of legitimate stage stars to appear in its future releases, the Ocean Film Corporation announces a long term contract with Miss Vera Michelena, who has heretofore resisted the lure of the screen.

In competition with several other feature producers, the Ocean Film Corporation's offer appeared so attractive to Miss Michelena as to cause her to reject all other offers and enter into a contract with that company. Her first production with the Ocean Film Corporation will form the third release of its program of two five-part features a month, commencing January 15, 1916.

ANIMATED WEEKLY MOVES.

Philadelphia Exhibitors' Ball

Hundreds Make Merry and Most of the Big Guns Were There.

SHAKESPEARE, when he quoted his now time-honored axiom: "To business that we love, we rise betime and go't with delight," expressed to a degree the keynote of the spirit with which the exhibitors of Philadelphia and their many friends attended the Fourth Annual Ball of the Exhibitors' League of Philadelphia held on Wednesday evening, December 8, at the Turngemeinde Hall, Broad street and Columbia avenue. Guests began to arrive as early as eight o'clock and by the time the first act of vaudeville was staged, the hall was crowded. An excellent program was offered and each act brought forth an outburst of applause. Included among the entertainers were songsters of rare ability, club-swingers, dancers and a female impersonator of rare talent.

When the orchestra filed in and took their positions the ball room presented a wonderful sight. Gentlemen in evening dress and ladies in dazzling costumes added to the attractiveness of the occasion. The gallery was banked deep with enthusiastic onlookers who were satisfied to view the proceedings from an advantageous position. When the strains of the first waltz floated through the air partners were selected and the ball was on. Very few were left standing around idle and each number was encored again and again. Fox trots, one-steps and the hesitation seemed to be the ruling favorites and the scene presenting itself was one of merriment and laughter.

As time wore on star after star made their appearance, and each was introduced in turn. The Universal, Edison, Pathe, Kleine, Lubin and Oliver-Morosco companies were well represented and vied with each other in making the best display. Earl Metcalfe and Lillian Lorraine led the grand march, which was directed by Professor Cortizzos, the distinguished dancing master.

There seemed to be no disposition on the part of those present to start homeward bound and at two o'clock the affair was at its height. A flash-light was taken of the ball room and numerous souvenirs were distributed among those present; large balloons, circulated by a representative of the World Film Corporation, causing no end of enjoyment. As it approached three o'clock the crowd began to thin out and it became known that there was to be a banquet at the Bingham Hotel, Eleventh and Market streets, for the exhibitors and players.

The banquet was well attended and short speeches were in order from almost everyone present. The various representatives of the different film companies testified to the merits of their productions and the stars endeavored to entertain with witty sayings. Several songs were rendered and, but why forget the menu, which it may be remarked provided one of the chief enjoyments of the evening.

Included among those present were Rose Dugan, of the Vitagraph; Mabel Trunnele, Edison; Viola Dana, Edison; Virginia Pearson, Vitagraph; Bliss Milford, Pathe; Tom Moore, Lubin; Kate Price, Vitagraph; Sam Spedon, Vitagraph; Edwin August, Universal; Beulah Poynter, Universal; Lois Meredith, Pathe; Mimi Yvonne, Lubin; Peter Lang, Lubin; Earl Metcalfe, Lubin; Sheriff Pete Schmidt, Oliver Morosco; Robert Conness, Edison; Edward Earl, Edison; Octavia Handworth, Lubin; Billie Reeves, Lubin; D. L. Don, Lubin; Ruby Hoffman, Edison; Viola Lake, Vitagraph; May Ward, Continental; Rosetta Brice, Vitagraph; Stephen W. Bush and Wilson Bleloch, of the Moving Picture World; Edgar Lewis and Pop Lubin, Lubin; G. Smith, Pathe; H. Reichenbach, Equitable; Lillian Lorraine, Pathe; A. Horkheimer, Balboa; Kempton Green, Lubin; James Cassidy and Clarence Elmer, of the Lubin Company.

MEGOWN, LEAGUE ORGANIZER.

Charles A. Megown, proprietor of the Cameraphone theater on Euclid avenue, has just assumed his duties as special representative of the northeastern Ohio district of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. Mr. Megown, who is one of the most popular motion picture men in Cleveland, will act as organizer in this field.

The Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, which has just opened headquarters in the Republic building in Cleveland, has about seventy-five members at present. "Four hundred by Spring" is the slogan of the organization, and the burden of increasing the membership to the desired number has fallen on the shoulders of Megown.

The organization, which is a part of the Exhibitors' League of America, includes about half of the state, and it is expected that exhibitors from many cities will become members within a few weeks. A second big housewarming in the new headquarters is planned for next week.

Fourth Beefsteak at Screen Club

Adam Kessel Officiates at Most Successful Affair of the Kind Given by the Organization.

A BEEFSTEAK dinner was given by the Screen Club at the clubhouse, 165 West 47th street, on Saturday evening, December 11. Adam Kessel, third vice-president of the club, was toastmaster. It was the most successful and enjoyable of any of the beefsteak dinners that have been held at this club. It was also the initial entertainment given under the auspices of the new administration, of which Billy Quirk is the ranking officer, and is the forerunner of many pleasant evenings that are being planned for the winter season.

Many witty speeches and recitations were made, alternating with musical numbers. Addresses were made or stories told by Adam Kessel, Douglas Fairbanks, Sam Spedon, King Baggot, John Ince, William Steiner, George Beban, Harry A. Palmer, Fred B. Murphy of Boston, Gladden James, Charles Kessel, Norman Selby, Frank Kugler and Arthur Butler Graham.

There were musical numbers by Pauline Barry, accompanied by Bert Grant; Martin Von Bergman, accompanied by Maurice Abrahams; Al Burton, accompanied by Maurice Abrahams; Jim Flynn, accompanied by Jack Stern; Harry Benham, accompanied by Sidney Bracy, and William J. McKenna, who led the members in song.

Those present were Adam Kessel, Billy Quirk, Jules Burnstein, Alan Dwan, King Baggot, Douglas Fairbanks, Stanley Walpole, Eric Mayne, Lindsay J. Hall, J. W. Johnston, Harry B. Benham Harry Reichenbach, Royal Byron, Gladden James, George Reehm, Al Mayo, Hugh Hoffman, Herbert Miles, Edward Roskam, John W. Noble, William N. Bailey, Frank Carroll, Hopp Hadley, George Ingleton, William F. Aldrach, Tefft Johnston, Harry S. Waldron, Harry Keepers, C. AMERICAN'S NEW STUDIO.

The huge new glass studio being built by The American Film Company at Santa Barbara is fast nearing completion. The third floor of the structure already has been laid, and to external appearances the giant building is practically finished. The new studio is said to be one of the most complete in existence, and the various members of the American corps of directors are anxiously awaiting the word from President Hutchinson to go to work in the new quarters. Every appliance of modern motion picture photography is being installed. It is hoped that the new studio will be in full operation by the first of the new year.

"MANGER TO CROSS" IN WEST.

The Kalem Company announces that arrangements have been completed by which exhibitors west of Denver may book "From the Manger to the Cross" direct from the Progressive Motion Picture Corporation, 654 Pacific Building, San Francisco, California. East of Denver the five-reel holiday feature is being booked direct to exhibitors by the Kalem Company.

OH, FOR the life of a press agent. Nothing to do but ride around and look prosperous. That is the general impression that prevails when Harry L. Reichenbach, press representative for Equitable Films, is seen getting around town in the above classy outfit. It is all Harry's, and 136 inches long. The car is an Oldsmobile, with specially David Horsley is in town with Mrs. Horsley, for the purpose of doing some Christmas shopping early. These fellows who carry around commutation tickets for use between New York and coast, don't care how they spend their kale.

H. M. Horkheimer did hold the record for trips between New York and the coast for some time, but now it seems that he is waiting for some one to donate the necessary that he might get back. At least that is his excuse for staying with us so long.

Eleanor O'Keefe, often spoken of as the biggest little woman in the film business, recently resigned from the Horsley forces to join that of Paramount. Since Mr. Horsley has been in town, his persuasive method has convinced Miss O'Keefe that Horsley is the man from whom she should accept a salary, and she has submitted. Miss O'Keefe's business address will again be 71 West 23rd street, New York, care of Centaur Film Company.

South Americans Visit Vitagraph

Under Guidance of Spedon and Lang They Have a Glorious Time—Commodore Blackton Speaks to Australian Cadets.

ON FRIDAY morning, December 10, a delegation from the International Trade Conference, which had been sitting at the Hotel Astor for three days, paid a visit to the Vitagraph studio. Prominent among the delegates were a number of South American men representing various industries and professions. Among them were Senor J. G. Lorente of Cuba, Senor Augustin Nieto Cabellero of Colombia, Senor Francisco J. Peynado of the Republic of Domingo, Diego Martinez of Brazil, guest of National Association of Managers, Dr. Albert A. Snowden, Manader Don Vicente Gonzale, delegate from Peru; Senor Octavio Guzman of Mexico City. There were also present M. J. Kruming from Russia, Harry S. Graff from Australia, Baron J. de Neuflize of Paris, and N. M. Marshall of Bombay, India, and a company of Australian cadets. The cadet corps numbered thirty-five and was in charge of Lieut. Synmunds. After Sam Spedon had taken the entire delegation through all the interesting parts of the great Vitagraph studio the cadets assembled in the yard and played an Australian air, after which they gave the curious Australian salute, which consists of the corporal jumping like a kangaroo in front of his company.

Addresses were made by Dr. Snowden of Australia, Jacob Binder of the Board of Trade and J. Stuart Blackton, of the Vitagraph company. Mr. Blackton in his remarks dwelt with special emphasis on the fact that the South American field had been greatly neglected, but that the Vitagraph Company for one would hereafter pay particular attention to the possibilities of the South American market. He welcomed the Australian cadets, and called forth a cheer by remarking that he was decidedly pro-ally, but neutral enough not to care which one of the allies won. Laughter followed the cheer. When Mr. Blackton had ended, the cadets played the "Star Spangled Banner." Tefft Johnson, at this psychological moment, hung out the American flag and the cadets cheered and their cheers were echoed and re-echoed by the great crowd of Vitagraph employees who by this time had come into the yard. The cadets marched around the yard, and were duly filmed for the Vitagraph-Hearst weekly.

Mr. Lowe, prominent in the South-American export trade, proposed three cheers for Arthur J. Lang of the Nicholas Power Company. The cheers were given with a will. Mr. Lang acting on behalf of the Nicholas Power Company, had perfected the arrangements for the visit of the delegates to the studio and with his perfect knowledge of both Spanish and English had greatly aided the South American delegates to enjoy their visit.

CLIFFORD CALLIS, "KIDDO."

Clifford Callis, an infant prodigy of the American studios, takes an important role in "Kiddus, Kidds, Kiddo," comedy to be released December 28. Clifford is barely over five years of age, but already he is looked upon as a full-fledged screen actor. One of the proudest moments in his young life was experienced during the filming of "Kiddus, Kidds, and Kiddo," when the young hopeful was allowed to "smoke" his daddy's old pipe and wear his daddy's glasses.

HAUBER TO OPEN ANOTHER THEATER.

O. C. Hauber, owner of the A-muse-U theater, Pine Bluff, Ore., recently obtained a 10-year lease on the Simmons building at the southeast corner of Pine and Second streets, and will spend $10,000 remodeling it for a moving picture show. It is expected to have the house opened March 1, 1916. The new theater will have a seating capacity of 1,200. The dimensions of the new theater will be 48 by 146 feet, and it will be two stories high.

After the Ball Was Over

Although Boston's Big Affair Began on Wednesday It Kept on Rolling the Better Part of Thursday.

By George Blaisdell.

THE ball in Boston began on Wednesday, December 1, but it was late the following morning before any of the reel fellows (or girls) thought of taking a few hours of more or less needed rest. All were up early, meaning relatively early, of course, as many were to leave for New York on the 1 o'clock train. There were hurried breakfasts and a drop in on the Film Club, just to say howdy, although there were in sight many tempting dishes in the food line.

King Baggot was one of those who had intended departing at 1 o'clock. Outside the "snew was snewing"; there was a touch of real winter in the air, such as up to that time the New Yorkers had not experienced. Fur overcoats were as much in evidence as walking sticks on the Rialto in the early summer. "New York is not like this—what's the matter with the 5 o'clock train?" the writer suggested to Baggot. It was one of those cases where anything looking like an excuse would serve. A suitcase was checked and a start was made. One of the first points on the schedule was the executive chamber. The player the night before had been so thoroughly charmed by the many-sided good fellowship of Governor Walsh—and right there the World man's companion had nothing on the writer—that it seemed imperative a call should be made to pay respects. The Governor was not in the state house at the time. "The Governor is a wonderful man and he certainly has got a wonderful official home here," said Baggot as he wandered through the stately halls under the gilded dome.

At ten minutes to 5 the player was writing a dispatch to Mrs. Baggot that he was leaving on the next train. In walks Grossman of the Charter company and remarked that the Governor was at the Copley. "Don't tell Baggot until the train starts," implored the World man. "If you do he'll miss it as sure as shooting, and my name in one home in New York will lose what standing it has." That is how Baggot missed Governor Walsh.

An appointment with Samuel Grant early in the evening of Thursday afforded an opportunity of observing how the chairman of the ball arrangements committee handled the mass of detail of the annual function of the Massachusetts exhibitors. Mr. Grant had been a chairman in fact as well as in name; he had kept his finger on everything connected with the ball. He had had able co-operation from his aids, and between them they had succeeded in again breaking indoor records of attendance. The Massachusetts exhibitors constitute a live bunch. In the organization are the biggest picture showmen in the state. It is estimated that in the personnel of the state league there is represented an investment of $50,000,000 in theater property.

On Friday afternoon we took a run out to Hyde Park to meet W. M. Rose, manager of the publicity department of the B. F. Sturtevant Company, and L. G. Dennison, his associate. The sun, a great ball of red, was just sinking behind an ominous cloud. Its reflection in the ice-covered mill pond made a sight to remember. At the big factory Mr. Rose suggested a walk over some of the twenty-five acres of floor space which are contained in this great establishment. We walked through two buildings, each of them 500 feet in length and three stories in height. There are fourteen structures in all, and every one is devoted to the production of apparatus related in some way to air. We saw ventilating fans of all sizes and descriptions in the process of making. The real spectacle, though, was in the foundry. Outside darkness had settled. The few lamps in the great structure seemed insufficient to the tenderfoot. On the floors were everywhere fiery red uncooled casts. Overhead cranes ran in every direction. The writer watched molten metal being drawn into a receptacle, great sparks flying out unheeded by the workman under whose hand and eye the job wa being done. It was all weird, spooklike, a strange and a new world. We remarked to Mr. Rose that it would make a wonderful background for a screen setting. Through the whole foundry it was a case of "Watch your step!" Subway training, after all, had value, for we emerged unharmed, even untouched, and perhaps a bit surprised that such was the case.

One of the sights of the big institution is the department where aeroplane engines are assembled, especially the combinations of metal which are rated at 140 horsepower. As a criterion of the grade of product turned out at the Sturtevant the weight of these aluminum-inclosed machines is but 580 pounds—practically one horsepower to four pounds of metal. These have to undergo a continuous grind of eight hours before acceptance. There are fifteen hundred employes in the big plant. Mr. Rose said the difficulty was not in getting orders to keep them busy, but rather in finding skilled men to handle the rapidly increasing business.

Just by the way, since returning to New York we have seen in Vitagraph's "The Making Over of Geoffrey Manning" a setting that recalled the visit to the Sturtevant foundry. It was Harry Morey who wielded the long pole and pushed back the clay that dammed the fiery nozzle from which the molten metal was flowing.

Over at the V-L-S-E exchange we found George Balsdon looking happy. Mr. Balsdon reported business good. Since coming to Boston Mr. Balsdon has taken up a bit of philanthropic work which has the hearty co-operation of his superiors. This is in providing a weekly show for the inmates of the Rhode Island state prison. It's a long story and a good one and it is not going to be told here.

Fred Murphy at the United said that he was kept on the go between Boston, New York City and Buffalo. He has fine quarters, centrally located in the film district.

At the ball we met up with F. A. Clark, who when we had last collided with him was managing the Simplex booth at the San Francisco exposition. Mr. Clark was boosting the Movie Operators' Ball, which will be held in Convention Hall, New Year's eve. The members of the committee are Matt Max, chairman; Mr. Clark, secretary; W. H. Benoit, John Spence and Florie Parker. All of the members of the committee, aided by their feminine representative, Miss Marion Hanford, were distributing buttons advertising the event. They said they were going to try and get Brother Richardson to the Hub for the big night.

Lester Mayne, who is conducting a supply house, specializing in projectors and the Wotton Rexolux, piloted us over to the Kleine-Edison shop in Piedmont street, where we met R. D. Marson, who showed the visitor over his compact place. Mr. Marson sent his regards to his many friends in New York. Later Mr. Mayne showed the writer a new projector, the Blair, which is being demonstrated in a big room off of a popular restaurant. The outstanding feature of the invention is its cutting in two the amount of stock needed. In other words, it shows eight pictures instead of sixteen to the second. Mr. Blair was long connected with the Eastman works in Rochester. We did not meet Mr. Blair, as he was absent in New York. The crux of the machine is in the shutter, which may be attached to any projector. The pictures to be shown at the rate of eight to the second must, however, be taken on a special camera which Mr. Blair has invented.

There were a few minutes chat with Herman Rifkin, general manager of the Eastern Film Company, renewing old times. Mr. Rifkin is inclined to the belief that features are being overdone—that exchange men can make just as much money handling a smaller number of productions.

Saturday evening we called on Mr. Clark, one of the officials of the Massachusetts league, at his fine Huntington avenue theater. The house was filled. Mr. Clark has been making a specialty of a program that includes a single, a double and a three-part subject. He said that as a rule his patrons preferred pictures of those lengths—and the Huntington is in one of the finest residential districts of the Hub. Mr. Clark uses also one or two short acts to complete his entertainment. He reported great success with his serials. He said recently he has been using Broadway Universal Features to good advantage on one or two nights a week.

From the Huntington we strolled over to Washington street and dropped in on several houses. There was one stretch of six or eight hundred numbers without a single house. Neither could any be seen down side streets. At Loew's South End Theater we met Joseph L. Burton, who showed us over a playhouse with a long history. Back of the balcony there is a great room with tiled floor that in the heyday of dramatics served as the palm room. On the screen was being shown a Balboa subject, and Manager Burton said the product of the Long Beach studio was popular in his house. He said, too, that serials always went strong in the South End.

At the Washington theater we met Assistant Manager Edward Goodman and also Herman Hirsch of the Mutual Film Corporation. Mr. Hirsch said that during the evening he had signed up a thousand dollars worth of bookings for "The Girl and the Game." He reported the Mutual's new serial going strong.

Actor Withdraws From Success

Emmett Corrigan Leaves "Eternal Magdalene" to Join Equitable Roster of Stars.

EMMETT CORRIGAN, undoubtedly one of the foremost actors of the native American stage, and until Saturday of last week, leading player with Julia Arthur in the season's biggest dramatic success, "The Eternal Magdalene," which is now in its fourth month at the Forty-eighth Street Theater, will leave New York early next week for the everglades of Florida, where the first scene in the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation's production of "The Chain Invisible" will be staged. Mr. Corrigan left a season's work to fulfill a contract made before he accepted the legitimate position, "The Eternal Magdalene."

Frank J. Powell, the noted director, who comes to Equitable at the conclusion of his work on "The Fourth Estate," upon which he is now engaged, will have charge of the productional work on "The Chain Invisible," and will stage the entire picture in the exact locale of the original script, as rendered by Richard Le Gallienne, the poet and author.

Emmett Corrigan.

Mr. Corrigan has already had some picture experience, having made his debut in "Greater Love Hath No Man," for Metro. He comes to the screen, perhaps, the screen's most ardent admirer.

In 1895, before Edison took up, seriously, film matters, Mr. Corrigan purchased a Gaumont projection machine. He installed the machine in his home at Verona Island, near Bucksport, Me., and with each improvement Corrigan has traded in his old projector for a new one, and at present owns fifty thousand feet of industrial and educational film, which he often runs for his guests.

Frank Powell, who begins his Equitable activities with the production of "The Chain Invisible," is busily engaged assembling the supporting cast.

Mr. Powell will bring with him to the Equitable his camera man, various constructional workers, and will do his interior work at the Equitable's Fifty-second street studio.

"The Chain Invisible" by Le Gallienne, marks an advance in the matter of securing material for the screen. Several months ago, President Arthur H. Spiegel, of Equitable, conceived the idea of recruiting the more important authors to screen work. Le Gallienne, after considerable persuasion, was prevailed upon to supply an original work, and his first is a human story built along novel and sensational lines, with a new and unconventional idea in romance, as its basis.

"The Chain Invisible" representing the debut of Emmett Corrigan, Frank Powell and Richard Le Gallienne, will be released on the regular Equitable program, through World Film, early in February.

PATHE TAKES ANOTHER FLOOR AT 25 WEST 45TH STREET.

Owing to the great increase of business Pathe has taken the twelfth floor at 25 West 45th street, and is now occupying two entire floors in that fine new building. The bookkeeping and clerical staff will be located on the twelfth floor and the executive offices on the eleventh.

Extry! "Ham" is Back

Kalem Comedian, Recently Injured, Meets Surprise on Return After Two Months' Absence.

LLOYD V. HAMILTON, the "Ham" of Kalem's "Ham and Bud" comedies, is once more in the harness, having started work last week at the Kalem California studios. "Ham" steps before the camera again after an absence of close to two months caused by an injury to his leg which kept him in St. Catherine's Hospital, Santa Monica, for six weeks. During the last two weeks, "Ham," unable to keep away from the atmosphere of the studio, has hobbled about on crutches lending his advice and encouragement to the making of "The Caretaker's Dilemma" and "The Missing Mummy" burlesque comedies in which "Bud" Duncan and Ethel Teare are featured.

A gala feast, tendered by the players in the comedy company, marked "Ham's" return to active work. At the height of the festivities, Hamilton Smith, the recently appointed Kalem Western representative, sprang a surprise he had taken along with him from the New York offices. It consisted of a handsome album, the three hundred pages covered with letters from exhibitors requesting news concerning "Ham's" injury and expressing their anxiety for his early return to the screen. More scrap books could have been made up from letters of the fans, but the Kalem officials selected the exhibitors' letters as unusually significant of the popularity of the "Ham and Bud" comedies.

New Triangle Deal for Detroit

P. P. Craft, of Apex Fame, Secures Rights to "Triangle Program" for That City.

P. P. CRAFT, for a long time the head of the Apex Film Corporation, at one time the leading distributor of foreign feature pictures in the United States, has purchased the rights to handle the productions of the Triangle Film Corporation for the city of Detroit, Mich. Mr. Craft closed the deal on Wednesday, December 8, and hurried away to Detroit the same day to start things.

The franchise covers the city only, but, although the territory is limited, Mr. Craft considers that it is the best proposition open at this time and predicts that he will do an exceptional amount of business with Triangle features in the "flivver" city and considerably better than trying to handle features in the present state of the market.

Mr. Craft has secured two first-class downtown theaters in Detroit in which to show Triangle subjects. S. L. Rothapfel will go to Detroit for the opening on January 3 and will arrange special effects. There will be augmented orchestras.

Joseph T. Rucker, Universal's Forder

THE Universal Animated Weekly has sent over Cameraman Joseph T. Rucker to photograph the Ford peace pilgrims on their trip across the ocean. Cameraman Rucker has been with the Universal for the past three years, having come to the New York office after a few years in the South, where for a time he covered all the principal events for the Animated. His ability to get over the big stuff when it was news, and his alertness in planting his camera on a scene ahead of others, prompted Jack Cohn, editor of the Universal Animated Weekly, to promote Mr. Rucker to the New York office.

Joseph Rucker.

Mr. Cohn selected Mr. Rucker to represent the Universal on the Ford journey, and photograph the important event for the American public. This kind of work is particularly pleasing to Mr. Rucker, as he was selected as the official photographer to accompany the United States fleet to Vera Cruz, and later went to the opening of the Panama Canal, where the clearness of his pictures and the wonderful photography he obtained made his pictures notable.

When the pilot ship left the Oscar II at Sandy Hook, Mr. Rucker sent back the first can of original pictures of the expedition ship. The finished result already has been released in the Weekly.

"The Making Over of Geoffrey Manning"

Harry Morey Distinguishes Himself in a Typical Morey Role —Vitagraph Four-Part Subject Has Powerful Appeal.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THERE is a sub-title in "The Making Over of Goeffrey Manning," a four-part Vitagraph subject, which sets forth that "The laboring man is so busy fighting to pay next week's bills that he can't get ahead." Which to many may mean nothing; and then again it will strike others with great force. It depends on whether they have ever been down and out, or down without being out.

The story is one of wide appeal. It will reach down into the hearts of men and women, whether they be workers struggling to keep their heads above flooding adverse circumstances or whether they be in positions of comfort or of affluence. The tale is of a care-free son of a manufacturer who when chided by his father determines to cut loose from his bank roll and go into the world on his own feet. It shows his rebuffs when he tries to obtain work and his sudden letting out from his first job—wielding a shovel in the subway—when he smashes on the jaw a foreman who had struck a diminutive fellow-worker. It shows him as a stoker in his father's foundry and his gradual promotion to a foremanship—his acquaintance with the hardships of the toiler, the quickening of his sympathies and the making over of the man of the one-tenth to a real man of the whole world.

Harry Morey is Geoffrey Manning. It is a typical Morey role, and this splendid player enacts it with a feeling and an understanding that make of Manning a living, breathing person. Rare indeed is it one player so thoroughly dominates a subject, that so large a proportion of the action falls to one actor. The story holds from the beginning and moves not once but many times.

The cast speaks for itself. L. Rogers Lytton is the father, the foundry owner who tells his employes they may take the 10 per cent. cut or take nothing. In spite of his lack of consideration for his workmen, the regard Manning displays for the son and his dreams of the future, his hope that he may see his son succeed him, measurably retain the sympathy; the fatherly attitude at the denouement and the gracious reception of the young woman Geoffrey brings home completely win it. Mr. Lytton's work is flawless; and that's a strong statement.

Belle Bruce charms as Harmony, the young singer who boards in the humble structure where Geoffrey takes up his quarters when he goes out to see if his fellow-clubman was right when he asserted that he could not earn daily bread; it is Harmony that Geoffrey brings to his father at the unusually happy conclusion of the story.

William Addison Lathrop and Charles T. Dazey are the authors of this Broadway Star Feature, which will be released December 27. Harry Davenport is the director. Mr. Davenport has given us a story that is likely to rank with the most popular of recent productions. His handling of the thrilling factory fire is skillful, to mention but one detail of an absorbing subject. The foundry scenes, too, are convincing. "The Making Over of Geoffrey Manning" is an all-around fine picture.

"The Woman of Mystery"

Biograph Company Finds Material for Three-Part Picture in Novel by Georges Ohnet.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IN THIS adaptation of a novel by Georges Ohnet we find a reasonably diverting and generally dramatic story, based on the experiences of secret agents of a government in their efforts to get the formula for a high explosive that is destined to revolutionize warfare. Here is a familiar theme, indeed; one that has been treated by many companies in as many ways, but even at that the Biograph has succeeded in finding enough unexpected plot turns to make an interesting picture. There is a fair degree of suspense and the acting opportunities afforded an able cast are ample.

Louise Vale is Sophia, "the Woman of Mystery," called upon to get the formula for a coveted explosive invented by General Tremont. The role is admirably suited to Miss Vale, who can be very alluring at times, without allowing an audience to forget the purpose behind her blandishments. When the general is killed and the formula passes into the hands of Marcel, a young chemist, Sophia transfers her attentions to him and has little difficulty in arousing his love. But she makes the serious mistake of falling in love, too, and the passion is strong enough to overshadow her sense of duty to her country. Having stolen the formula, she relents and summons Marcel to her apartment that she may return it, prior to ending her life by drinking poison. The dramatic action in these final scenes is especially tense.

If Miss Vale's acting attracts first attention, there are at least two other performances that contribute materially to the story, those of Franklin Ritchie as Marcel and Charles Mailes as Hans, the secret service agent, whose right hand is blown off in an explosion. "The Unfaithful Wife"

Robert B. Mantell and Genevieve Hamper Appear in Tragic Story Produced by Fox.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IF AN exhibitor wants a strong, forcefully acted drama and does not object to scenes so unpleasant that they may properly be termed morbid, he should be quite content with this five-part production—the second starring Robert B. Mantell since his connection with the Fox Company. "The Unfaithful Wife" is built upon treachery and blood-curdling horhors and cannot be said to point a moral lesson, although we read at the close the familiar quotation, "The wages of sin is death," and observe that the treacherous wife and her accomplice in crime pay for their misdeeds. The moral tone of a picture must be judged by the total impression it leaves, and in this case it is far from inspiring.

The scene is in Italy; an epidemic of cholera sweeps over the town and it appears that Count Fabrio is destined to be one of the victims. But his wife and her lover do not wait for him to die naturally. Fearing that he may recover and spoil their plans, they have him secretly nailed in a coffin and deposited in a vault. We even are treated to a close-up of Mr. Mantell lying unconscious in the coffin. Then the noted actor of Shakespearean roles is confronted with a task that might puzzle Houdini. He regains consciousness, forces his way out of the coffin, and, in time, breaks through the wall of the vault —a difficult task, one might imagine, but necessary for the continuation of the story.

A commonplace revenge does not satisfy Count Fabrio. By impersonating a distinguished nobleman and fooling his wife and her lover as to his true identity, he plays with his intended victims, something as a cat plays with a mouse, until he is ready to pounce upon them. His revenge is all the sweeter for the delay. Barring a few scenes in the first reel that have no obvious bearing on the story, the construction of the picture is dramatically sound, and Director J. Gordon Edwards' production is a great aid to the sombre tragedy. Mr. Mantell puts much feeling and passion into his performance and is ably supported by Genevieve Hamper and Stuart Holmes.

"The Beloved Vagabond"

Splendid Six-Part, Hand-Colored Vizualization of William J. Locke's Book, With Edwin Arden in the Title Role.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

SO MARVELOUS an interpretation has Edwin Arden given us of the character of the "beloved vagabond," and with such artistic skill has Director Edward Jose outlined the significance of Locke's theme that there seems little left to be desired to make the Pathe production a singularly perfect one.

Months previous to its actual date of release "The Beloved Vagabond" has been heralded. Many and varied have been the comments on the advisability of filming this particular story of William J. Locke's, and again it is proven that the treatment the story gets at the hands of first the adapter, and then the director, is the final word as to the film possibilities of any literary work.

The filmed version is so arranged that the first reel acquaints us of the love between Gaston De Nerac (Edwin Arden) and Joanna Rushworth (Katherine Brown-Decker), De Scene from "The Beloved Vagabond" (Pathe).

Nerac's sacrifice to save his future father-in-law from financial ruin and disgrace, and the commencement of the two-year separation of the lovers, consequent to the agreement of a mutual friend with De Nerac on the occasion of the loan of the money for Joanna's father. And so, before we have launched into the second reel of the six we have the basis of the plot, and a knowledge of some of the main characters with their eccentricities and embellishments.

With the second reel we skip ahead two years, to the expiration of the agreed separation of the lovers, and here, at the very opening of this reel, we find clearly defined the manner in which fate manoeuvered with the lives of these two people, opening an easy path for the arch enemy of both to lead the woman, in ignorance of his villainy and falsification, to the marriage altar.

With the close of the second reel the intense nature of De Nerac has forcefully manifested its relinquishment of faith in all womankind. And then, with the opening of the third reel, thirteen years are passed up without further comment, and we meet with De Nerac in the role of the "vagabond" and known by the name of Paragot. Here the story is singularly attractive and well portrayed. Wonderful types and realistic touches have been added to this portion of the production, in which we meet with Asticot, the young son of the laundress, whom Paragot adopts into his own Bohemian quarters so that he will have plenty of books to read, and Blanquette (Bliss Milford), one of a duet of wandering musicians, whom Paragot also adopts at the death of her aged partner, and who afterwards learns to love with a womanly love the hand that was kind to her. Many scenes of indescribable charm have been utilized, depicting the troubles, the humble joys, and the pathos which existed at various times in the lives of the wanderers. And when at last, after the final meeting of Paragot and Joanna, when the latter's husband is killed in the street, Paragot, about to marry Joanna, finds the ways of society unbearable, and society finds him unbearable also, he returns to his little home which he has made from the earnings of his musical talent, the happy climax of the story arrives. For Banquette, about to throw herself in the river, is clasped in the arms of Paragot, who discovers at last that Happiness has been hovering at his elbow, waiting to be recognized.

The film, made here in America, was sent to Paris to be hand colored, the result being a delightful enhancement of an already beautiful production.

"Blind Justice"

A Stirring Social Photoplay in Three Parts by Essanay, Featuring Henry B. Walthall—Scenario Specially Written by H. S. Sheldon.

I HAVE viewed many five-reel features that did not create one-half the interest aroused by "Blind Justice," a three-reel photoplay by Essanay that has to do with human short-sightedness in dealing with the problem of punishment of youthful breakers of the law. Too often the arresting policeman has it in his power to make or mar the future of a boy who has been placed under arrest for the first time. He can give color to his testimony that influences the presiding magistrate, and the novice in wrong-doing, instead of being placed on probation, in proper care, is hurried off to the house of correction, where he receives instruction in criminality from old offenders that makes him a future menace to society.

We are given just a glimpse of this blind justice in the photoplay under review, but it lingers with us all through the three reels, although the poor waif to whom such justice had been meted out appears only in two or three of the opening scenes. Associated with the waif, however, is a companion, seemingly in the same social stratum; but, as the story reveals, a benefactor of society, who seeks to learn at first hand the mistakes made in the name of the law, in the treatment of the young of both sexes, who have committed their first offense. He goes by the name of Jack Langdon, and he is willing to be treated just the same as if he were a real criminal, so that he may be better able to write the sequel to a well-known book that has created a sensation among intelligent social workers.

Henry B. Walthall is seen in the role of Jack Langdon. As we watch the latter carefully throughout the changes in his social standing, before the judge of the police court and in the home of the philanthropist, William Harding, we can learn that he is hiding his real self behind a mask, revealing it only now and then to the spectator in a furtive smile, that he is careful to conceal from his fellows. And this smile excites the mind of the spectator and makes him eager to unravel the mystery, the latter being very skilfully hidden until the closing scene.

To the police court judge F. Langdon says: "I tried to hinder this boy's arrest, your Honor, because experience has taught me that being arrested for vagrancy at his age is a poor start. If three months on the Island can improve a mere boy, your Honor, it might do me some good." His face is turned away from the judge at the close, and the smile I have already referred to is shown to us on the screen. We see it again when the bumptious butler of the Harding household attempts to show his superiority to the "parole man," and again when

Walter Harding, son of the philanthropist, says to Langdon, with brutal vulgarity: "My sister's party calls for evening clothes. I trust you will not depend on borrowing mine." This when Langdon had been invited to the party by the young lady in question.

But Mr. Walthall makes Langdon change his attitude from that of patient submission to one of firm, dignified manhood, immediately afterwards. It occurred at the party mentioned, when Langdon informed Mr. Harding, Sr., that Miss Harding had just promised to become his wife.

"How dare you—the beggar I picked from the gutter—speak of marrying my daughter?"

"My mistake, Mr. Philanthropist. I did not realize that your charity both began and ended at home," replied Jack, with fine dignity, as he left the room.

At this point we are convinced that Langdon has finished his course of paroleship, and that he will soon reveal himself as he is known. This is done shortly afterwards, in one of the most affecting and powerful scenes in the photoplay. Just how, the reader must find out for himself on the screen. In that scene Mr. Walthall, Ernest Maupain (William Harding), Miss Elizabeth Burbridge (Elsie Harding, Jack Langdon's wife) and John, Junior (Walter Harding) participate. Miss Burbridge is new to Essanay films, but her first appearance, in the role of Elsie Harding, gives sufficient promise of talent and success.

The release was made through the General Film Co., Dec. 11.

"Sealed Lips"

Equitable Makes a Powerful Photoplay Out of Maxwell Gray's Story, "The Silence of Dean Maitland."

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

FIGURING the quality of "Sealed Lips" on a percentage basis, allowing so much for the story, so much for the acting and so much for the production, the result would be safely over the ninety mark. As a matter of fact, this five-part photoplay, made under the direction of John Ince and starring William Courtenay, appears to have about all the elements that go to make a popular picture. It catches the attention right at the start with scenes showing two sharply contrasted love affairs, one spiritual, the other essentially physical, and as the story progresses, the spectator becomes more and more engrossed in the very human tragedy unfolded in a logical and finely dramatic manner. Here is a melodrama that is also something of a character study; a picture filled with action that has recognizable motives behind it.

Arthur Ashley, playing the role of a young minister, is quite as vital a figure in the production as is Mr. Courtenay, in the role of the lifelong friend who suffers for a crime he did not commit. Both of these characters are strongly presented and equally able is the performance given by Mary Charleson, as the girl who ensnares the minister and then pays dearly for her indiscretions. Completing the prominent members of a wisely selected cast are Adele Ray and Marie Wells.

All of these players may share credit with Director Ince for the emphatic success of "Sealed Lips," which, unlike so many feature productions, is consistently interesting throughout and not dependent upon the sensational appeal of a few striking scenes. In developing his story the author advanced naturally to reasonable climaxes, and their effect is all the greater for the care taken in arousing sympathy for the characters. One feels the weakness, rather than the guilt, of the minister and is ready to appreciate the mental agony he must have experienced before making a full confession to his congregation in a sermon delivered after he has become Dean Maitland. The scenes, apparently photographed in a large Episcopal church, are remarkably correct in regard to appointments and ritual. Accurate settings, in fact, are a distinguishing mark of the production. The rooms of an old country house seldom have been more convincingly reproduced.

"A Price for Folly"

A Vitagraph "Blue Ribbon" Feature Starring Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno.

HORRORS are piled upon horrors in this feature. A large part of the play consists of a dream. This dream was horribly realistic. The terror of it was intense and prolonged. In the dream we see an old gentleman, venerable in his white hair and his courteous dignity, stab his charming old wife in the heart and killing her. All the agony which tortures the human imagination in a vivid and horrble dream is reproduced with an almost uncanny skill that makes us creep and shiver. One cannot speak of dramatic elements in a dream or of any thing like a motive and to this extent the visualization of a dream must always remain immune from criticism.

All the extraordinary art and the technical skill of the Vitagraph company, all the superb acting of Edith Storey and all her splendid support cannot obscure the fact that the story is too thin to occupy five thousand feet of film. Not only is it too thin, but it lacks genuine dramatic force and coherence. The son of a noble French family falls in love with a dancer. The dancer has other admirers and tries to fleece them all. The dissolute life of the young man scandalizes his old father, who vainly tries to win him back to a respectable and well-ordered life. While the action up to this point has moved at a snail's pace we have learned enough to make us fear the worst for the young man and his parents. At this juncture the young man falls asleep on a lounge and goes through his nightmare. In his troubled vision he sees himself ruined. When the meretricious dancer learns that he is poor she turns from him to an older but apparently wealthy admirer and sneers at the sufferings of her youthful dupe. There is gossip in the clubs about the young man's unlucky "liaison," he challenges his rival to a duel and is mortally wounded. The heartless coquette of a dancer comes to the duelling grounds, scatters the petals of a flower about the body of the dying youth and then walks off with the murderous rival in a perfect frenzy of heartlessness. Then the young man wakes up and finds that everything has been a dream. As a result he breaks off his relations with the sinuous corpyhee and his aged parents are made very happy in consequence.

"The Hand of the Law"

An Edison Three-Reel Photoplay, With Bessie Learn and Edward Earle in the Leading Roles.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

CHARLES R. ANGELL, the author of "The Hand of the Law," has written a photoplay that is cast in the same mould as the comedy-dramas that Owen Davis was wont to supply so plentifully to the spoken stage. Its theme is sensational but wholesome, the characters are such as may be found in a small New England village, and one is not asked to discover any symbolic or hidden meanings in the three reels of action. There is also not the slightest danger of mistaking the good people for the bad—the deeds of the dramatis personae proclaim their merits or demerits upon every possible occasion. The comic relief contributed by Abner, the Correspondence School detective, and Sally, the hired help, adds nothing to the picture's worth.

The serious interest of the story is absorbing, plausible and culminates in an adroitly contrived denouement. The different types of character are true to their environment, and director Edward C. Taylor displays excellent judgment in his choice of locations—notably, the old mill.

Reuben Hazleton, once the owner of the grist mill, has been defrauded of his property by Squire Evans and Hiram Gregory. Reuben takes to drink, vows to get even with the two men and, when Gregory is murdered, is accused of the crime. Through the efforts of his daughter, Bessie, and her sweetheart, Reuben's innocence is established and his property restored to him. The character of Bessie Hazleton is very sympathetic, her loyalty to her father, no matter what his condition, being a strong factor in her favor. Bessie Learn realizes the part in every particular. Edward Earle is a likable and convincing Dan Chamberlain, and Bigelow Cooper, William Wadsworth, John Sturgeon, Billie Ruge and Nellie Grant are seen in well played character roles.

"The Mill on the Floss"

Five-Reel Adaptation of George Eliot's Novel by Thanhouser, With Mignon Anderson As Maggie Tulliver.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

ESPECIALLY well suited to screen interpretation is George Eliot's novel, "The Mill on the Floss," and which has been adapted to film requirements by Philip Lonergan, master of scripts at the Thanhouser studios. The meat of this fascinating story has been carefully extracted, and has been handled effectively on the producing side by W. Eugene Moore.

Mignon Anderson as Maggie Tulliver is especially pleasing. She gives an apparently effortless portrayal of the impulsive character of the miller's daughter, and is never more attractive than when, in open rebellion against the application of curl papers to her naturally straight hair. Or when in an angry fret she pushes her curly headed cousin Lucy, dressed in all her finery, into the water.

Harris Gordon does well as Maggie's brother Tom, while George Marlo is all that is required in the role of Philip Wakem. W. Eugene Moore plays the hole of the miller. He is not alone an excellent type, but has a fine conception of the character of Miller Tulliver. Others in the cast are Fannie Hoyt, Arthur Bauer, Leo Wirth and Boyd Marshall.

This production of a standard work of literature cannot fail to please. Once in a while a costume that seems inappropriate to the period jars on our sensibilities. But in this matter we must not forget that the manner of dress of today, especially that of the feminine, does not differ very widely from what appeared in the fashion plates of several years ago. We believe that none of the humanity or realism of the story has been lost by its transmission to the screen. That portion of the story dealing with the overflow of the river is vividly realistic, and would suggest its having been staged on the scene of some flood disaster.

"The Burglar and the Lady"

James J. Corbett Is Starred in Entertaining Picture Handled by the Sun Photoplay Co., Inc.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

A PRODUCER of photoplays might well employ James J. Corbett because of the advertising value of his name. Of his drawing power there can be no question, and it is pleasant to note that audiences gathered to see Corbett, the former world's champion, will remain to watch Corbett, the actor, give a capital performance in this five-part picture, produced by Herbert Blanche and handled on the state rights plan by the Sun Photoplay Company, Inc. The grace of movement for which Corbett was famed in the ring, the poise and the assurance that are so much a part of his personality, blend very well with the character of Raffles, the gentleman burglar, whose exploits are the basis of this production.

"The Burglar and the Lady" is the story of a criminal career handled in a manner that has found favor in magazine and screen fiction. The author is careful to make his law-breaking hero a sympathetic figure. He is a courteous, kindly and wonderfully resourceful person, whose wits are pitted against those of the most astute detective of the age. This time he is called Stone, instead of Sherlock Holmes. Having entered the home of a banker in quest of the family jewels, Raffles remains to cultivate the friendship of the banker's pretty daughter, impersonating a detective the while. He makes a dignified escape when it suits his fancy, and, still impersonating a detective, nearly carries through a nicely arranged bank robbery. Here his escape is less dignified, but more thrilling, as he leads the police a merry chase from one hiding place to another and finally eludes them in the structure for a city sewer.

The plot is plausible enough for a picture of this type; moreover, the situations are cleverly handled and there is a pleasing element of romance in the meetings of the burglar and the girl, who is ready to marry him after he has reformed and paid his obligations to society by serving a term in jail.

Scene from "The Burglar and the Lady" (Sun).

Claire Whitney is very fetching as the banker's daughter and the child in the role of her little sister is delightful. The picture was tastefully staged and notably well photographed.

"NEVERMORE," the first of the fourteen episodes into which the above-named serial is to be divided, gives just a look in at the starting point of the story, or what might be termed its inspiration. The two reels of preliminary suggestion leave a deep impression, and start the ball rolling with considerable force.

Ruth Roland, the heroine of "Who Pays?" is the star of the serial. She is supported by Frank Mayo, who gives promise of good things. Daniel Gilfeather as "Circle" Jim Borden does effective work, but passes out of the story before the end of the episode, when he kills himself and his son that there may be an end to the criminal career of the Bordens.

The idea of the serial, we are told, is to show that the instincts of heredity can be overcome by proper environment and education. The scenarios are being written by Will M. Rickey and produced by Sherwood McDonald.

At the close of this particular episode a woman's hand protruding from beneath the curtains of an automobile displays again the red circle, leaving the audience surprised and wondering.

The story of "The Red Circle" has been novelized by Albert Payson Terhune, and will appear in leading newspapers throughout the country.

in his story that Morgan is the most commanding figure in the photoplay. This gentleman deserts his wife, goes to the city and acquires wealth by questionable means. He then makes a bold bid for position by courting an heiress, and is prevented from marrying her by the arrival of the woman he deserted, at the proper dramatic moment. Ill luck pursues him further and lands him behind prison bars for swindling. During his incarceration, the heiress and the reporter are married, and Morgan's wife dies, after giving birth to a girl. The baby is adopted by Mrs. Darwin, the lady's fortune enabling her husband to become the proprietor of a newspaper himself. Several years later, when Morgan escapes from prison, he attempts to get even with the Darwins by stealing the child and hiding her in an inner chamber of an abandoned mine. The mine is blown up by a railroad construction gang, but Morgan, who has learned the truth, saves the girl at the cost of his own life. Aside from retarding the catastrophe by an over supply of incidents leading up to the explosion, "The Inner Chamber" may be assigned an honorable position among well made photo-melodramas. The proper blend of love, hate, clash of wills, diversity of scenes and "thrill" at the finish enter into its composition. The blowing up of the mine is an excellent effect. As before stated, Ralph Morgan dominates the action of the play, and Melvin Mayo rises to the occasion by acting the part with uncommon power and skill for character delineation. L. C. Shumway, Helen Eddy and Adda Gleason make the most of the opportunities offered by their respective roles.

"The Great Divide"

Memories of Henry Miller and Margaret Anglin Revived by This Magnificent Lubin Production.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

JUDGED by the most exacting standards, this Lubin production ranks with the best releases of the V-L-S-E. In many respects it surpasses the most successful released features within the last few months.

In the first place, the direction of Edgar Lewis is beyond all praise. This talented director, who has developed remarkable powers, never did anything better than this production. "The Great Divide" presented some good filming materials, but it needed the highest degree of directorial skill to bring them out, and Mr. Lewis has shown himself fully equal to the task. He has played the melodramatic and the psychological chord with perfect skill. In this way he has succeeded in conveying a most subtle but exceedingly powerful theme to the average patron of the motion picture theater. Nor has he sacrificed one jet of real appeal in this play. His work here is a masterpiece of visualization.

He has been aided, and very materially, too, by the genuine Arizona settings. All the art of the conventional stage cannot produce the effect which these sublime settings of Nature produce instantaneously. The scenes, which have the Grand Canyon for their background, are among the choicest screen visions it has been my privilege to look upon—and I have looked on many. No picture was ever made which reproduces atmosphere as "The Great Divide" does. Here we see the "ne plus ultra" in realistic and majestic atmosphere. The grandeur of the scenery is awe-inspiring throughout. I am happy to be able to add that every other essential point of the play was on a par with this point of excellence. The interior settings added to the atmosphere, the types and characters were most convincingly natural; indeed no detail was neglected to bring the atmosphere home to the spectator, and I venture to say that the creation of the right atmosphere in a play like "The Great Divide" is an assurance of absolute success. The acting was creditable throughout. Ethel Clayton, a conscientious and capable artist, rendered a fine impersonation of Ruth, while House Peters did the best he knew how with the part of the "derelict." The conception that Mrs. Peters has of this part is quite original with himself. He emphasized to what seemed an unnecessary degree the physical degradation of the "derelict." This conception really weakened his portrayal of the character and made his task needlessly severe.

The minor parts were all in good hands. "The Great Divide" is a feature that will go exceedingly well wherever it may be shown.

picture is built, and in directing the production, James Davis was careful to catch the attention of the spectator and work up the interest to the highest pitch as he approached the climax—a scene showing Helen Gibson dropping from the trestle of a railroad bridge into the tender of a moving engine. Here is a photoplay sensation that demanded real nerve on the part of Kalem's intrepid actress and one that will draw applause from any normally receptive audience.

Miss Gibson's leap from the iron framework comes at just the right moment. Through swiftly moving scenes, the audience has been thoroughly aroused by the predicament of a little boy, the son of an engineer, who climbed into the cab of his father's engine and pulled the throttle. For a good ten minutes of gripping action—with the scenes shifting from the frightened child in the runaway locomotive to the group of railroad employees at a loss for a means of averting a disaster—the nerves of the spectator have been skilfully played upon. A collision seems inevitable and as a last resort the girl climbs high on the trestle under which the engine must pass. Apparently she risks her own life in accomplishing a fall that few men would care to attempt.

Wherever pictures are shown there is an audience for the type of railroad melodrama that Kalem continues to issue under the general title of "The Hazards of Helen." The appeal is to a normal love of perilous adventure and displays of physical bravery, especially when the heroine is an attractive young woman. As in the past, Miss Gibson is assisted by an able company.

"Landon's Legacy"

Warren Kerrigan in a Frankly Melodramatic Broadway Universal Feature Will Be Liked by His Admirers.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IT IS a frankly melodramatic subject, this "Landon's Legacy," a five-part Universal Feature to be released January 3. J. Warren Kerrigan has the leading role, a heroic one—that of Landon, an American mining engineer who has troubles with a grafting governor in a Peruvian province. The story shifts to San Francisco and then to New England, to a point between Boston and Portland. The picture will be liked by Kerrigan's admirers, who will see him both in the rough garb of the camp and in society togs. Meredith Nicholson is the author of the story from which the script was adapted. The original version will appear in Collier's Weekly of January 8. Walter Woods has written the scenario and Otis Turner has produced it.

Mr. Kerrigan is the leading participant in several strong situations in the first half of "Langdon's Legacy." There are adventures on the streets of the little town and about the mining camp. There are escapes so narrow they will satisfy the most exacting. There are personal encounters in which, d'Artagnan like, Landon stands 'em all off. When one assailant grabs him around the neck Landon throws him over his head with a skill that would do credit to a Japanese wrestler. In the latter half the situations are more those of straight drama—and they are well handled.

Lois Wilson, as Pepita, the daughter of the governor, who on first sight was impressed by Landon, does good work. She is a convincing schoolgirl. Maude George is strong as the duenna, who conspires with the governor's secretary to aid him in his suit for the hand of her charge. Harry Carter, the secretary, interests as the bad man of the story. His characterization of the South American with the ways of the Latin is good.

Mr. Turner has carefully staged his subject. His South American mining town is an elaborate piece of work. It is not a simple matter to obtain in Southern California the atmosphere of New England; but his success in this respect was measurably good. The commencement setting, wherein there appeared seemingly two hundred girls, is unique. Presumably that number of young women would be interested in the personality of the young man who has just fallen heir to the seminary they are attending. Actually it is an easy matter to determine that they are very much concerned about the leading man who is talking to them.

"Landon's Legacy" is good melodrama; and it should be a popular release.

In a succession of impressive pictures, impressive because the illusion is preserved by infinite pains in settings, types, costumes, that we have been transported on a magic rug to the land of Arabian Nights, little Tsuru Aoki is given opportunity to create a role of delicate and tender sympathy. She looks the part of Janira, daughter of an East India nobleman, and she plays it with high intelligence, but the close attention accorded the story is largely held by the fine balance, nice arrangement and artistic composition shown in the long string of attractive pictures thrown on the screen. The success of the presentation depends, as is occasionally the case, upon directorial judgment and good taste alone. Janira falls in love with an English officer on the eve of her wedding to debauched Prince Chandra. The ceremony has barely taken place when her husband dies of an apoplectic stroke. Her fate is to be burned on his funeral pyre, but she is rescued by the English officer and carried to a distant post. There she lives with him in the disguise of a pretty boy, until the moment of inevitable discovery arrives in conjunction with the arrival of the officer's fiancee from England. Janira realizes that her tiny love story is at an end, and to save him who saved her she vanishes in a funeral pyre of her own making.

"The Missing Links" indicates in its title that it needs a guardian. To use any name so near the Darwinian "Missing Links," long a subject of comedy comment, as the title of a story dependent on the solving of a murder mystery for interest, is, to say the least, deplorable. The story contains some dramatic elements and, worked out in true motion-picture form, the form that Griffith did so much to create and make popular, it might be developed into a thrilling one-reel or two-reel screen story. In its attenuated five-reel form, in spite of good acting, good directing and fine scientific work, it is not up to the standard set by earlier Fine Art films. The director has evidently done the best he could be expected to do with scant material, a murder mystery solved through the finding of one of a pair of cuff links left by the murderer at his victim's side, rounded out by the weakest of endings, the criminal's confession.

"Over Night"

Brady-World Film Version of Successful Farce Contains Many Amusing Incidents.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

VIVIAN MARTIN, as winsome as ever, is starred in this entertaining adaptation of Philip Bartholomae's clever farce, produced for the World Film program under the direction of James Young. Sam B. Hardy plays Miss Martin's six-foot husband, Herbert Yost is the negative member of the Kettle family, whereas the domineering suffragette wife is presented by Florence Morrison. There are others in the cast, but these four players are always leaders in bringing out the humor of a first rate farcical complication—a complication that improves as the story advances and reaches its best moments in the fourth and fifth reels.

This does not mean that the earlier parts of the picture are uninteresting, for, on the contrary, Director Young found quite a bit of humor in the three courtships preceding the eventful night at the little hotel near Poughkeepsie. Kettle woos his future wife at Suffragette headquarters, takes part in the Suffrage parade on Fifth avenue, and after the marriage ceremony boards the boat for Albany, accompanied, of course, by his bride. On the same day the Darlings start on their honeymoon and the two couples meet aboard the boat. It is right here that the picture begins to strike its best comedy pace. The assertive members of the domestic alliance go ashore to look after some delayed baggage, miss the boat and leave their feeble partners to their own resources.

Kettle is quite helpless until inspired by half a dozen cocktails, after which his antics are funny without becoming vulgar, and equally entertaining are the experiences of the pair left on land. They are conveyed, first in a dilapidated rig drawn by a decrepit horse, then in a ludicrously antiquated jitney, and eventually reach the hotel where their partners have registered as man and wife. In handling a delicate situation, Director Young kept the picture from becoming risque. "Over Night" is brightly acted, carefully produced and may be recommended as enjoyable comedy.

Pawnee Bill in Motion Pictures.

Major G. W. Lillie, of Pawnee Bill fame, has immortalized his famous herd of buffalo and his large collection of cattle, horses, goats, mules and burros, not to mention the tribe of Pawnee Indians from which he derives his name, by producing four large feature motion pictures with the Pawnee Bill buffalo ranch as a background. Pawnee Bill's ranch is located at Pawnee, Oklahoma, in the heart of the buffalo country and surrounded on all sides by the reservation of the Pawnee tribe.

Major Lillie placed his ranch with its equipment at the command of motion picture dramatists and directors, and even consented to appear in the pictures himself, not as Major G. W. Lillie, but as Pawnee Bill, "The White Chief," as he is known to countless thousands of men, women and children throughout the world. The result is four feature motion pictures of five reels in length.

Pawnee Bill's buffalo ranch pictures are being sold to state rights buyers by the All Feature Booking Agency of 71 West 23rd street, New York, which is also booking them to theaters in Greater New York direct.

Sees Lots of Picture Stories

G. Blair Garrison of Premier Program Says a Lot of Good Stories Are Lying Around Loose.

BEGINNING with the statement that Premier Program features are picturizations of famous novels and plays that have been and will be selected for their peculiar suitability for reproduction on the screen, G. Blair Garrison, secretary of Premier, makes some comment on the supply of such material in sight.

"One of the men prominent in the feature film trade recently stated that the number of novels, plays and stories available for motion picture adaptation grows constantly smaller, but it is doubtful if this is materially so," he said. "For years authors have been producing stories. Annually the output of popular novels—not to mention short stories, is enormous, running well into the thousands. Furthermore, stories in foreign languages as well as in English are available for picturization. The untold mass of material already published has scarcely been touched. It is true that the better known novelists, such as Dickens, Scott, Thackeray, Balzac and some of the short story writers like DeMaupassant and Bret Harte, have been picturized—but these are the most obvious material and therefore bound to be the first stories to reach the screen and are not necessarily the only ones suited for production on it. Many an author compresses into a short story enough action and material for a five-reel feature, whereas another author will not have enough material for two reels in a 300-page novel. This is due to the fact that stirring action and not psychological mind processes are the best material for screen productions.

"In selecting material for Premier Program, therefore, the only limitation which has been placed upon that material is that the story must contain genuine action, genuine interest and genuine incident. It must contain material of such a character as to allow not only of artistic but also of effective telling through the medium of motion pictures.

"Of such material the world is full and it only requires competent men familiar with literature and the source of literature to dig out original mines of valuable material from the encumbering mass of that which is unsuitable. One might as well say that the world's supply of coal was nearly exhausted because it is daily decreasing, but the possibility of discovery of future coal fields may at any time remove that to a still more distant date.

"I am willing to grant that good material for motion pictures is difficult to find. I am willing to grant that anything of value in this world can only be attained by the overcoming of difficulties and it is because Premier Program appreciates the importance and value of the story in a motion picture that it has retained in its own organization the scenario department for its producing companies.

"We have selected for the scenario department of the Premier Program two men who possess both imagination and originality. Both Cogan and Frederick come to the Premier with established reputations as masters of their art, but we have chosen them particularly because of their capacity to visualize a story and of gauging its interest to the picture going public.

Lubin's First "Unit Program"

Two Subjects in the Release That Have Been Highly Commended.

EXHIBITORS and exchange men of the General Film Company have been most generous in their praise of the first offering of the Lubin Manufacturing Company under the new Unit-Program release and there has been accorded to "Heartaches," the four-act drama in which the Lubin star, June Daye, makes her first bow to the public, and which forms the major part of the Unit of five reels, a consensus of comment which undeniably stamps that Lubin production as one of the best offerings of the year. The picture is an original story from the pen of Daniel Carson Goodman and was produced under the direction of Joseph Kaufman of the Lubin directorial forces.

Miss Daye's delineation of the character of the simple little girl of the shops is one which has given her instant accord as a favorite who is destined to jump to the top rungs of public favor, and her supporting cast have been equally well received.

The other part of the five-reel Unit is a single-reel comedy with D. L. Don in the lead, "Otto's Cabaret," a story written for that popular comedian by George Spink of the Lubin script staff and produced by Edwin McKin. In it Mr. Don, the droll and different comedian, is seen at his best in the character of the keeper of a small German restaurant, a character study which this same man made famous on the speaking stage in "The Belle of New York" and "The Girl from Paris."

In addition to the Unit-Lubin Program offering through the General Film Exchanges each week, the company also releases as heretofore a three-act dramatic subject each Thursday and a single-reel Billie Reeves Comedy every Saturday.

Lynn Reynolds and his company of Universailites have left the Universal City studios for Mount Wilson, where they are to stage exterior scenes in their production of a two reel story of the mountains written by Reynolds under the title, "Missy." Myrtle Gonzales, Frank Newburg and Val Paul appear in the leading roles.

Comments on the Films

Exclusively by Our Own Staff.

General Film Company

THE OTHER SISTER (Lubin), Dec. 6.—An excellent one-reel drama in which an elder sister sacrifices her happiness for the sake of a selfish young girl. The story is interestingly told and equally well acted by Lillie Leslie, Flora Lea, Joseph W. Smiley and Wm. Cohill.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 97, 1915 (Selig), Dec. 6.—Rushing reserves to aid Italians at Gortz; fire, San Francisco; 300 marines leave San Francisco for Mexico; New York shows treasure seized by pirates; women sew for wounded soldiers, Boston; Washington, President Wilson receives telegrams for peace movement; man seeks pearls in river, Newark, Ark., and Cooper wins auto race, San Francisco, are the news items.

HER LAST FLIRTATION (Vitagraph), Dec. 6.—To adopt the note of admiration of a well-known American, this one-reel comedy is "corking"! The picture is a clean-cut, modern version of the "Taming of the Shrew," and was written by A. Laroque. Alfred Vosburgh, Myrtle Gonzalez, George Kunkel, Carleton Weatherby and Otto Lederer make an enjoyable cast. Ulysses Davis directed the reel.

MINNIE, THE TIGER (Kalem), Dec. 7.—Bud Duncan, Ethel Teare, Charles Inslee and Harry Griffith are the bipeds in this one-reel burlesque, but the name of the gentleman who fills the role and also the skin of Minnie is not on the program. The story is the work of that master of screen burlesque, Lloyd V. Hamilton, and proves that "Ham" has not lost his sense of humor during his confinement in the hospital.

PLAYING THE SAME GAME (Lubin), Dec. 7.—In this one-reel comedy, D. L. Don gives a humorous impersonation of a husband who wrongly suspects his wife and tries to turn the tables on her by flirting with every woman he meets. The reel is well supplied with broad fun, and the star is assisted by Florence Williams, Carrie Reynolds, Mary Rowland and Bartley McCullum.

ORDERS (Selig), Dec. 7.—The story of a traffic policeman's adherence to duty, this one-reel drama will find many admirers. It has strong heart interest and is skilfully constructed. Thomas Santschi, who produced the picture, is manly and earnest in the leading part. Edith Johnson gives a sympathetic portrayal of the officer's wife.

MARY (Edison), Dec. 8.—The heroine of William Addison Lathrop's one-reel drama is a noble little woman who sacrifices herself in order to secure another woman's happiness. The story is pleasing, although of no great dramatic strength, and derives valuable assistance from the acting of Margaret Prussing, Carlton King and Dorothy Graham.

DREAMY DUD IN LOVE (Essanay), Dec. 8.—Another of Wallace A. Carlson's diverting cartoon comedies, in which Dud and Wag both fall victims to the charm of the craftier sex. Five hundred feet of scenes taken in the Canadian Rockies are on the same reel with the cartoon comedy.

SONNY JIM'S FIRST LOVE AFFAIR (Vitagraph), Dec. 8.—Sonny Jim's doings in this one-reel comedy compare favorably with his adventures in previous pictures. They are humorous and natural and will appeal to Bobby Connelly's hosts of friends among patrons of the screen. Helen Connelly and Johnny Cahill are two other bright children in the cast. Tefft Johnson, as usual, is the "Sonny Jim" director.

THE MASTERFUL HIRELING (Biograph), Dec. 9.—An excellent one-reel drama, adapted from a story by Roy Norton. The plot is refreshingly different and Ivan Christy plays the high-minded, eccentric Dr. Harvey in accord with the author's intent. Charles H. Mailes and Mary Malatesta are effective members of the cast.

THE MERRY MODELS (Essanay), Dec. 9.—One reel of lively burlesque is the measure of this photoplay, and Ben Turpin and Harry Todd are responsible for most of the fun. Margaret Joslin and Carrie Turpin are valuable members of the cast, also, but Ben and Harry put the big punch in the picture.

FORTY-FIVE MINUTES FROM NOWHERE (MinA), Dec. 9.—Broad burlesque is the sole ingredient in this one-reel picture. There is little of novelty in its fun, although the cast work hard to create a laugh. A cartoon comedy, "Why Hubby Grows Bald," on the same reel, is not particularly well done.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 98, 1915 (Selig), Dec. 9.—The departure of the Ford Peace Ship from New York; the arrival of the steamship Zealandia in New York harbor, after being chased by a submarine; the car strike in Wilkes-Barre; departure of the Great Northern from Los Angeles on her first trip to Honolulu; illumination of State House, Boston; new wireless invention, Chicago; Washington, law makers at the Capitol, and Ohio corn growers calling on the President are found in this installment.

SAM'S SWEETHEART (Vitagraph), Dec. 9.—A simple little love story in one reel, written by Elizabeth R. Carpenter, but productive of pleasant thoughts and ready sympathy with the hero and heroine. Carolyn Birch, Anders Randolf, Rose Tapley, Templer Saxe and Mary Maurice form a worthy cast.

THE PAINTED LADY (Biograph), Dec. 10.—Blanche Sweet, Madge Kirby, Kate Bruce, Charles H. Mailes, Joseph Graybill and Wm. J. Butler are in the cast of this D. W. Griffith re-issue. The story is dramatic, up to the Griffith artistic standard, and the pathetic heroine could not have had a better interpreter than Blanche Sweet.

THE ESCAPE OF BRONCHO BILLY (Essanay), Dec. 10.—The evidence of a little child saves Broncho Billy from being convicted of murder, in this one-reel western drama. The incidents, construction and acting of the photoplay are all that could be desired. G. M. Anderson, Rodney Hildebrand, Lee Willard and Ruth Saville are members of the cast.

THE ANCIENT COIN (No. 7 of "The Ventures of Marguerite" Series) (Kalem), Dec. 10.—Marguerite's sweetheart, Bob Winters, comes in for the greater share of adventure in this one-reel drama. Hamilton Smith has made an interesting little play on the subject of the ancient coin, and Miss Courtot, Richard Purdon, Bradley Barker and Edwin Brandt do justice to the acting.

THE STOOL PIGEON (Lubin), Dec. 10.—A vivid picture of "the evil that men do" when impelled by their lowest instincts and love of gain is drawn in this one-reel drama. The plot is terse, plausible and calls for a realistic fight between the hero and the villain. L. C. Shumway, George Routh, Robert Gray and Velma Whitman constitute an entirely satisfactory cast.

STRANGLED HARMONY (Vim), Dec. 10.—The strenuous action that has erstwhile marked the paths of Pokes and Jabbs, is somewhat modified in this one-reel farce. Perhaps the notes of music from Pokes' violin may have had something to do with it, that gentleman having taken to horsehair and catgut. However, the spirit of fun in the picture has by no means been strangled, and the grotesque capers of the comics are as amusing as ever.

ROONEY'S SAD CASE (Vitagraph), Dec. 10.—The grandfather of Sidney Drew was celebrated for his acting of Irish character parts. In this picture the grandson shows that he has inherited much of his grandsire's skill, and even Mrs. Drew may be said to shine with a reflected light in the same line of endeavor. The plot of the play is not particularly strong, but the Drews and their associates succeed in making the reel very amusing.

THE LONE GAME (Edison), Dec. 11.—This one-reel drama tells in story form of the work being done by the Red Cross Society for the cure of tuberculosis. The subject is handled in a forceful manner and points out the best means for checking the ravages of the White Plague. Bessie Learn, Robert Walker and Wilfred Young give realistic impersonations of sufferers from the disease.

CROSSED WIRES (Episode No. 57 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—Kalem), Dec. 11.—The woman operator jumps from an automobile to the ladder of a moving freight car in this one-reel drama, and foils a band of crooks who are trying to smuggle a number of Chinese into this country. Miss Gibson also shows her contempt for life and limb in various other ways. Robyn Adair, Clarence Burton and Franklin Hall are members of the cast.

BASHFUL BILLIE (Lubin), Dec. 11.—Some of the best work Mr. Reeves has ever done for the screen is found in this one-reel comedy. The situation of a bashful man attempting to benefit his health while receiving instructions from a female teacher of athletics admits of much good fun. Carrie Reynolds renders Mr. Reeves able support as the instructress.

THE BABY AND LEOPARD (Selig), Dec. 11.—There is no denying the grip of this one-reel Jungle-Zoo drama. The baby and the leopard are the center of the tense situation which S. A. Van Patten has made the big moment of his play. Edith Johnson, Lafayette McKee, Jean Frazer and George Larkin are well cast.

General Film Company Specials.

THE MONEY GULF (Kalem), Dec. 6.—A professional gambler, who reforms to please his sweetheart and gives his ill-gotten gains to the poor, is the hero of this two-reel drama by M. G. Sabel. The picture is melodramatic, brisk of movement and has but one mission—to entertain those who are willing to believe in the reformation of the gambler-hero. Harry Millarde plays the part in the right spirit and Alice Hollister is capable as the heroine.

CHRONICLES OF BLOOM CENTER, NO. 5, "The Run on Percy" (Selig), Dec. 6.—The plot of this installment of the "Chronicles" is decidedly more conventional than in its predecessors, and the fun is not so well sustained. The picture has considerable merit, however, and Director Sidney Smith has given it a careful production. The work of the cast is as rich in character drawing as ever.

A WOMAN WITHOUT SOUL (Biograph), Dec. 7.—The subject of this two-reel drama is treated with a grim realism that holds the interest from start to finish. The woman who plays fast and loose with her admirers meets her Nemesis in the man she marries. The acting in the picture is of excellent quality, Vera Sisson, Jack Mulhall, Robert Nolan, Helen Bray and G. Raymond Nye comprising the cast.

WASTED LIVES (Vitagraph), Dec. 7.—This three-reel drama, written by Ouida Bergere, is not up to the Vitagraph standard in several respects. The story is morbid, there is a preponderance of worthless, disagreeable characters, and the dramatic strength of the situations does not atone for the sordid atmosphere that pervades almost the entire picture. The production also is not above censure, the appearance presented by Julia Swayne Gordon in a canoe being the reverse of artistic; the pink tea costume she wears is as incongruous as her attempts at using the paddle are inexpert. The individual efforts of the cast deserve nothing but praise.

A POOR RELATION (Biograph), Dec. 8.—Released in three reels, this version of a play once made popular on the stage by Sol Smith Russell is an exceptionally strong attraction. Thomas Jefferson gives a telling characterization of Noah Vale and the children in his support add greatly to the heart appeal of an excellent picture.

THE WEB OF HATE (Lubin), Dec. 8.—Melodrama of the kind that can be spun from the lives of hot-blooded sons and daughters of Sunny Italy is found in this two-reel photoplay. The plot is replete with dramatic action and pulses with fierce love and fiercer hate. Helen Eddy puts intense feeling and fine artistic skill into her acting of an Italian girl, and L. C. Shumway, Melvin Mayo, Robert Gray and George Routh are always of value to the picture.

THE OGRE AND THE GIRL (Lubin), Dec. 9.—The acting and production of this three-reel drama are creditable, Bernard Seigel, Geraldine O'Brien and Kempton Greene being especially good in their respective roles; but the story is too improbable and loosely constructed to lend itself to the making of a satisfactory photoplay.

FAITH AND FORTUNE (Edison), Dec. 10.—An excellent melodrama, with scenes laid in the South and out West. Grace Williams and Curtis Cooksey are eminently successful in the leading roles. A review of this picture appeared in the issue of Dec. 11, page 2029.

BLIND JUSTICE (Essanay), Dec. 11.—Harry Sheldon has made a vastly entertaining drama of this three-reel photoplay. Its hold on the interest is cleverly contrived, the true character of the hero not being divulged until the very finish. The part fits Henry B. Walthall like a glove, consequently his performance is thoroughly enjoyable. Elizabeth Burbridge, the new Essanay leading lady, has a pleasing personality and is also an excellent actress; she plays the heroine very skillfully.

HUGHEY OF THE CIRCUS (Vitagraph), Dec. 11.—The circus atmosphere of this two-reel comedy is deftly woven into the plot, a love story involving Hughey, a Bearded Lady, a Fat Lady and a maiden lady of uncertain years, forming the groundwork of the plot. The situtions are distinctly comic, and Hughey Mack, Flora Finch, Nitra Frazer, Donald McBride, Anna Brody and Harry Fisher comprise a properly selected cast.

Fox Film Corporation.

THE UNFAITHFUL WIFE, Dec. 6.—The morbid tone of this picture may make it distasteful to many audiences. Robert B. Mantell as the deceived husband, Genevieve Hamper as the unfaithful wife and Stuart Holmes as the lover give forceful performances in a well-prepared production, directed by J. Gordon Edwards.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

ROSEMARY (Quality), Dec. 20.—Artistically staged and very well acted, this motion picture version of the old English play of the same name makes wholesome entertainment. The directors were especially fortunate in finding appropriate settings. Marguerite Snow as Dorothy Cruiksbank, William Clifford as Sir Jasper and George F. Hernandez as Captain Cruikshank are valuable members of the cast.

Mutual Film Corporation.

ARMY-NAVY FOOTBALL GAME (Novelty), Dec. 8.—This picture of the annual gridiron contest between Annapolis and West Point comprises about 900 feet of film, is a splendid illustration of what happened at the Polo Grounds, New York, on Nov. 28th. Close views of President Wilson, Mrs. Norman Galt, Lansing, Daniels and other high government officials, are presented, along with the most stirring incidents of the game.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 49, 1915 (Mutual), Dec. 9.—Some of the interesting items of this issue are a motor wolf drive and coyote roundup, the commemoration of the 308th birthday of John Harvard, founder of Harvard University, the Christmas tree harvest at Oquossoc, Me., and fox hunting at Droitwich, Eng.

THE BOOK AGENT (Novelty), Dec. 13.—The troubles of a book agent are manifold, but it remained for Shakespeare Poe to be placed in a piano box and rolled over a big waterfall. This adventure itself makes the reel worth while, though the first half is a little slow in interest.

A GIRL, A GUARD AND A GARRET (Beauty), Dec. 14.—A comedy number, featuring Carol Holloway, John Sheehan and Wm. Carroll. The girl's father is a banker and sets a special guard over her, to prevent her seeing her reporter friend. But "love finds a way" as usual. The number is not particularly original but makes good light amusement.

SEE AMERICA FIRST (No. 14—Pittsburgh, Pa.) (Gaumont), Dec. 4.—A fine half-reel, giving excellent glimpses of Pittsburgh and its environs. The city itself is shown (without smoke!), and some instructive views are given of the big steel works.

KEEPING UP WITH THE JONESES (Gaumont), Dec. 14. Another of H. S. Palmer's funny animated drawings, picturing Pa's experiences with the new styles. On same reel with above.

A MUSICAL MIX-UP (Novelty), Dec. 15.—A good deal of amusement can be had out of this picture, which is along the order of farce comedy. On opposite sides of a corridor are two music studios, one of which is occupied by a young woman, a singing teacher, and the other by a young man who teaches the banjo. A trick is played on the banjo teacher by three men who pretend to be deaf, dumb and blind. The story ends in the uniting of the two studios.

BILLY BUNKS THE BANDITS (Falstaff), Dec. 16.—A comedy number of the burlesque type, in which a young dry goods salesman dresses up as a cowboy and goes out to save a young girl from two unwelcome lovers. He accidentally brings two bandits to justice and becomes a hero in her eyes. This is quite entertaining.

SPIDER BARLOW'S SOFT SPOT (American), Dec. 17.—A Christmas story in which two young crooks rob a Christmas tree in a wealthy home in order to provide presents for some tenement children. One of them dresses up as Santa Claus in carrying out the plan. The number is interesting, but the good purpose of the deed does not quite justify the manner of its execution.

THE HOLD UP (Cub), Dec. 17.—This pictures more of the mishaps of Jerry. His adventures with Cyclone Pete bring out several laughs. The number is characteristic and will amuse Jerry's admirers.

TWO HEARTS AND A THIEF (Beauty), Dec. 16.—A comedy number, containing some bright situations, with Frank Borzage and Neva Gerber in the leading roles. An elopement is planned, but the mother frustrates this. Later a thief appears and complicates things. A pleasing love story.

CISSY'S INNOCENT WINK (Casino), Dec. 19.—Rather an amusing number, featuring Cissy Fitzgerald as the wife of a deacon. She has a nervous affliction which makes her right eye wink. This naturally brings on trouble in the congregation. A pleasing number of the kind.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE WAYWARD SON (Reliance), Dec. 12.—A two-part drama directed by Francis Powers. William Hinckley and Violet Wilkey have important roles in the play. The production does not always ring true; that is, it does not keep a steady average of consistency. The work of little Violet Wilkey is very pleasing.

THE ACE OF DEATH (Rialto), Dec. 15.—This three-part production from the Gaumont studios features Stella Hammerstein. W. F. Haddock has directed the picture, which is a melodrama with an interesting story, told lucidly. The ending of the story is rather improbable, and shows the heroine of the story after discovering a woman and her husband whom she believes to have drowned her child, forcing them to shoot each other with revolvers supplied by her. Before it is too late she discovers that a young girl she has been fostering is really her own child. The production will interest the majority of audiences.

THE ARAB'S VENGEANCE (Centaur), Dec. 16.—A two-reel production in which Margaret Gibson is featured. The work of Miss Gibson is very pleasing; and in fact the entire production is one that will please the average audience. Some attractive animal scenes are inserted in the course of the drama. The story is of a young woman, daughter of a naturalist, who is stolen from the government station by some incensed Arabs.

THE MILL ON THE FLOSS (Mutual Masterpicture, No. 51—Thanhouser), Dec. 16.—This five-reel adaptation of George Eliot's novel was made at the Thanhouser studio by W. Eugene Moore, from the scenario of Philip Lonergan. It is a pleasing presentation of a standard work of literature, and with the exception of the fact that some license has been taken in the matter of costuming, which does not always seem appropriate to the period, there is little fault to be found. A full review of the picture will be found on another page of this issue.

IN THE SUNSET COUNTRY (Mustang), Dec. 17.—A two-reel number, featuring E. Forrest Taylor, Nell Franzen, Lizette Thorne, Frank Cooly and others. The story is of a conventional Western sort, quite interesting in plot, but not so strong in action as some. In it a young prospector aids a girl from the dance hall to escape from the life that had become repugnant to her. The girl repays by saving his school teacher sweetheart from a dangerous situation. The Western scenes are pleasing.

THE PAINTED SOUL (Mutual Masterpicture, No. 52), Dec. 23.—This is an unusually fine production featuring Bessie Barriscale. She is supported by Charles Ray and Truly Stattuck. The story shows how a young woman of the underworld is transformed through contact with a painting called "The Resurrection." This happens when she is employed by the young artist to pose for a companion picture to be called "The Fallen Woman." A full review of this five-reel production will be found in our issue of Dec. 11.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 96, 1915 (Pathe), Dec. 1.—Interesting items of this number are an ovation given to the Liberty Bell at Lake City on its homeward way, ships passing at last through the Buffalo-Troy canal after 40 years' talk about it, scenes in the streets of Montgomery, Ala., during the Stock Show, Henry Ford at the White House and some scenes from the European war front.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 97, 1915 (Pathe), Dec. 4.—Interesting items of this issue are soldiers from Trinidad being reviewed by the Lord Mayor of London, children in Kansas who are in danger of tuberculosis being taught in the open, also sleeping in the open, Governor Ferguson of Texas crossing the border into Mexico to confer with Carranza and other current events.

SUGAR INDUSTRY IN THE MASCARENT ISLANDS (Globe), Dec. 6.—An excellent illustration of how the sugar cane is cut, gathered, etc., and the manner in which it is hauled to the crushing machines. The Mascarent Islands consist of Bourbon, Mauritius and Rodriguez, islands lying just east of Madagascar. On the same reel with "Picturesque Hanoi."

PICTURESQUE HANOI (French Indo-China) (Photocolor), Dec. 6.—A number of interesting views of the city of Hanoi, capital of French Indo-China are given in this half reel, which is well photographed and instructive.

A FOOZLE AT THE TEE PARTY (Phunphilm), Dec. 8.—One of the "Lonesome Luke" series and an interesting specimen. Luke, out of a job, dons the attire of an aristocrat whom he knocks senseless with a golf ball. Some amusing scenes occur after the transformation. The comedy is an acceptable one and will please most audiences.

DEEP DYED DUBS (Starligbt), Dec. 11.—One of the funniest of the Heinie and Louie films. Asleep in a stable one of the pair dreams a dream of how he and his partner try to impersonate a Baron and a statue. This is not unlike another Starlight film made some little time ago, but is thoroughly enjoyable, nevertheless.

MAX HITS THE HIGH SPOTS (Punch), Dec. 12.—This is a moderately good two-part Max Linder comedy. In this particular production Max plays the role of a shy young man whom his uncle tries in vain to persuade that a proposal of marriage to a certain young woman of good family will be a move in the right direction. Max, unable to "screw bis courage to the sticking point," is then taken to some drinking resort to get a touch of life. This part of the picture presents too vividly the drunken orgie. Some of the comedy in the film is good.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

THE ROSE AMONG THE BRIARS (Balboa), Dec. 9.—A three-reel colored production featuring Jackie Saunders. The story is that of a poor factory girl who is led, through association, into cabaret work. She gains a position as a dancer in a restaurant of the gayer sort, and is inveigled by an old roue into accompanying him to his home under the pretense that he and his wife, who, by the way, does not exist, wish to adopt her. She is rescued from his clutches by a young man of the factory who loves her, and has her shadowed in order to be able to protect her when the call came. Her love is not for him, however, and he is forced to see her the wife of another man.

THE GREATER WILL (Gold Rooster Play), Dec. 10.—The Premo Company has made this five-reel feature with Cyril Maude as the star. Others of the cast are Lois Meridith, who plays the feminine lead, Will T. Carleton, Montague Love and Chas. Francis. We have seen Cyril Maude in plays that suited him better. The story is not an especially healthy one, and often the star does not play with ease.

THE NEW ADVENTURES OF J. RUFUS WALLINGFORD, NO. 11, "A Stony Deal," Dec. 13.—"A Stony Deal" is the title of this episode in which Wallingford is outwitted by the eleventh of the clique. A pasture bought for a mere song from Jonas Squibble is sold back to him for fifteen thousand dollars; but Jonas, discovering the value of a stone quarry located in the pasture, sells out immediately to another party for $50,000. The episode is a good one and well produced. Any audience would be pleased with the comedy it contains.

THE RED CIRCLE, Episode I, "Nevermore" (Balboa), Dec. 15.—"Nevermore" is the title of this, the first number of the series. Ruth Roland plays the feminine lead supported by Frank Mayo. Daniel Gilfeather also appears in the first episode, but as "Circle" Jim kills himself and his son when on his release from prison he finds his son following in his footsteps. The red circle is a birthmark on Jim's hand which designates by way of family record that he who is unfortunate enough to be branded by the mark is doomed to a life of crime. The series promises to be a good one. There will be fourteen episodes of two reels each.

THE BELOVED VAGABOND (Gold Rooster Play), Dec. 17.—A five-reel production featuring Edwin Arden. It is one of the best picture productions of the season, and has been colored in France. Edward Jose has directed the picture, which is an adaptation of the novel of William J. Locke, and it will be found that nothing has been left undone to make the production one of singular beauty and interest. A full review of this picture will be found on another page of this issue.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 196 (Universal), Dec. 8.—Views of American tennis champions, Carranza and his troops, a fox hunt in Tennessee, the Ford peace ship, London parades, and Hy Mayer drawings are included in this entertaining number.

THE DOOMED GROOM (L-KO), Dec. 19.—An eccentric comedy number, picturing the adventures of an unwilling bridegroom. Fatty Voss, attired in woman's clothes, plays the blushing bride. A pleasing idea handled in a fairly amusing way.

LOVE AND A SAVAGE (Nestor), Dec. 20.—A clever comedy number by Al E. Christie, with Betty Compson, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran in the cast. The latter makes up as a Zulu chief to cure the girl of her longing to be a missionary. This is unusually pleasing.

HOWARD'S MONARCHS OF THE FOREST (Powers), Dec. 23.—A half reel number, picturing some dogs and trained black bears in a vaudeville act. This is one that will no doubt amuse children in particular.

WILD BIRD LIFE (Powers), Dec. 23.—On same reel with above, a splendid half reel, made by H. H. Cleaves, showing wild bird life on the Atlantic coast. White breast swallows, sand pipers, plovers and many other birds are shown in their native haunts.

WHEN THREE IS A CROWD (Nestor), Dec. 25.—An Al E. Christie comedy, featuring Neal Burns, Billie Rbodes and Ed Burns. The plot is slighter than usual. The number is fairly strong.

UNCLE SAM AT WORK, NO. 1, "Where Uncle Sam Makes His Laws and Keeps His Relics" (Powers), Dec. 25.—The first of a series of one-reel educational pictures taken at Washington, D. C., where there is a broad field for interesting and instructive views. This takes up the Smithsonian Institute in detail and also gives some general views of department buildings. This series looks very promising.

Universal Film Mfg. Company, Specials.

THE BACHELOR'S CHRISTMAS (Rex), Dec. 19.—A three-reel Christmas story, featuring Ben Wilson, Dorothy Phillips and two children. The scenario was written by Wm. Addison Lathrop. It shows tbe way in which a wealthy young landlord attains the property of a poor girl, who is forced to go on the stage to support her small brother and sister. The young man later meets the girl and plays Santa Claus to the children. The story is somewhat obvious, but contains a good Christmas flavor and makes a pleasing seasonable offering.

FATHER AND THE BOYS (Broadway-Universal Feature), Dec. 20.—An excellent five-reel comedy, adapted by Ida May Park from the play by George Ade. Digby Bell, the veteran character actor, is seen in the leading part. He is supported by a good cast, including Louise Carbasse, Hayward Mack, Lon Chaney, Thomas Chatterton and others. The story is a comedy of tbe quiet, refreshing type. It pictures the way in which a business man, worn out by the frivolous activities of his two sons, decides to take up the butterfly life himself and show them its absurdity. He succeeds in this and the production winds up with both the boys candidates for matrimony. A very pleasing comedy number.

THE TENEMENT HOUSE EVIL (Universal Special Feature), Dec. 20.—No. 2 of the "Graft" series. Hobart Henley, Jane Novak and Glen White again are featured. In this number the young district attorney has a second tilt with "The Fifteen" and succeeds in cleaning up the tenement trust after some exciting events. Dow, another member of the band, is killed for abandoning his friends. The fire scene in the tenement structure is excellently handled. A good number.

CHRISTMAS MEMORIES (Gold Seal), Dec. 21.—A three-reel Christmas offering, featuring Ella Hall and Robert Leonard. The orphan girl marries a city man. Later she tires of city life and flies back to the country, where her son is born. The story is worked up very effectively, the third reel being particularly strong. It makes a nice, seasonable offering and should have wide appeal.

FROM BEANERY TO BILLIONS (L-KO), Dec. 22.—A two-reel burlesque number, featuring Alice Howell and others. She is first seen as a waitress who marries the son of a rich man. Later she breaks into high society. Some of the scenes are funny in this, but the production has drawbacks and is coarse in several situations. The chase at the close is the best feature.

ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO (Laemmle), Dec. 23.—A two-reel number, with Dorothy Davenport and Rupert Julian in the leads. The story covers two periods, the first in colonial times and the second more modern, the principals repeating in each. The lovers are separated in the first, due to the father's anger, the girl dying of a broken heart. In the second episode the finding of the old dairy leads to happier results. This is well-photographed, appealing in costuming and settings and tells a story that holds the interest well. It makes an offering that is better than the average.

WHEN ROGUES FALL OUT (Bison), Dec. 25.—A strong railroad story in three reels, featuring Helen Holmes, L. D. Maloney and J. T. McDaniel. The story deals with the theft of a railroad franchise. Hynes, who admires the president's daughter, schemes to have the paper stolen, then railroads Brown, the tool, to the penitentiary. Brown escapes and undoes the villainy in which he took part, aided by the girl. Helen Holmes does more of the daring work for which she is noted, dropping from a railroad bridge on to a fast-moving passenger train. The story is unusually well-constructed and holds the interest firmly.

Triangle Film Corporation.

LET KATY DO IT (Fine Arts), Dec. 19.—Jane Grey, Tully Marshall, Ralph Lewis and seven clever children take part in this splendid comedy-drama. The story treats of how Katy, the only one of the household not afraid of work, was left with the care of the seven children of her dead sister. She goes with them to Mexico and lives with her uncle. Here an attack of the Mexicans is repulsed and an opportunity for spectacular results is made the most of.

THE CORNER (Kay-Bee), Dec. 19.—This is a labor play in which are featured George Fawcett, Clara Williams and Willard Mack. The production has been well produced, and has the human element that most audiences like. The cruel factory owner is in the end lured by one of his own workmen to the factory where he is seized and bound, and left to die among tons of food that he cannot get at.

FATTY AND THE BROADWAY STARS (Keystone), Dec. 19.—An excellent comedy which exploits the talents of a number of well-known stars, namely Weber and Fields, Sam Bernard, Joe Jackson and William Collier. Roscoe Arbuckle is of course the Fatty of the production, and after many vicissitudes goes to sleep and dreams a wonderful dream in which he is the hero of a studio fire.

V-L-S-E, Inc.

THE PRICE FOR FOLLY (Vitagraph), Dec. 13.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison, on page 1625, issue of June 5.

World Film Corporation.

SEALED LIPS (Equitable), Dec. 13.—"The Silence of Dean Maitland," by Maxwell Gray, is the inspiration for this very impressive five-part picture, produced by John Ince with William Courtney, Arthur Ashley and Mary Charleson playing the principal roles. The story is thoroughly human and its presentation in this photoplay is in all respects excellent.

THE SIREN'S SONG (Shubert), Dec. 13.—There are some effective scenes in this five-part melodrama produced by George W. Lederer; but in its entirety the picture is rather disappointing. Many of the situations appear forced and a lack of restraint too often characterizes the acting. The most satisfactory performances are given by Charles Trowbridge and Helen Ware.

Miscellaneous Specials.

THE BURGLAR AND THE LADY (Sun), State Rights, December.—James J. Corbett gives an able performance in the role of Raffles, a gentleman burglar, who eventually wins the love of the daughter of the man he attempted to rob. Claire Whitney is attractive as the daughter, and for the rest, the cast is adequate in a continuously entertaining five-part picture, directed by Herbert Blache and handled on the State Rights plan by the Sun Photoplay Company.

New Deodorizing and Perfuming Device

Massachusetts Concern Initiates Campaign for Placing on Market Fan Attachment to Purify Air of Theaters.

THE Springfield Deodorizing and Disinfectant Company, Inc., is preparing for an active campaign in the installation of its device for neutralizing all odors brought into a theater. A World man last week visited the busy Massachusetts town and called on the two principal officers of the company at their headquarters, 463 Main street. Frank S. Stone, the president, is one of Springfield's well-known residents and has for many years been a leading chemist. Dr. Philip W. Stone, the son of the president, is general manager.

The completed device and the liquids that perfume as well as deodorize the air are the result of experimentation for a year and a half of the two men named. The president has given especial attention to the composition of the chemicals as to their deodorizing qualities. It has been his aim to avoid absolutely any headache or nausea following the circulation of the vapor; to so mix them that even those most susceptible will be unaffected. With different kinds of vapor he has experimented on bacteria in order to find the most efficacious germ destroyers. "We can give an exhibitor anything in the way of odor he likes," said Dr. Stone. "For instance, if for a special occasion he wants violet, we can give him that. The basic principle of all the liquids is the same. Our idea is not to do away with a ventilating system, but to supplement it."

The device is made to conform to any size of electric fan. The nickel apparatus, which is placed in front of the blades, carries at the top a small container. By the pulling of a string or the pushing of a button the liquid is released into three small rubber tubes held in place by a freely perforated cloth. Through the courtesy of Manager Henry B. Schoch, the writer stood at the orchestra rail of the Bijou theater in Springfield, with twenty-six rows of seats intervening between that point and the demonstrating fan. In a couple of minutes the vapor made its presence felt—and not unpleasantly. It is estimated by the officers of the company that a five-minute operation a half dozen times a day will be sufficient to keep the air sweet. The president suggested that at a conservative estimate the fan retained at least 75 per cent of its power when the device was not in operation.

The company has prepared sixteen combinations which will be carried in stock. Some of these the writer saw demonstrated, including among others opera bouquet, sweet grass, violet, lemon. The company makes no charge for the device, the installation following an order for a stipulated quantity of liquid. Many Massachusetts houses already have been equipped and it is planned to extend operations to other States as rapidly as possible.

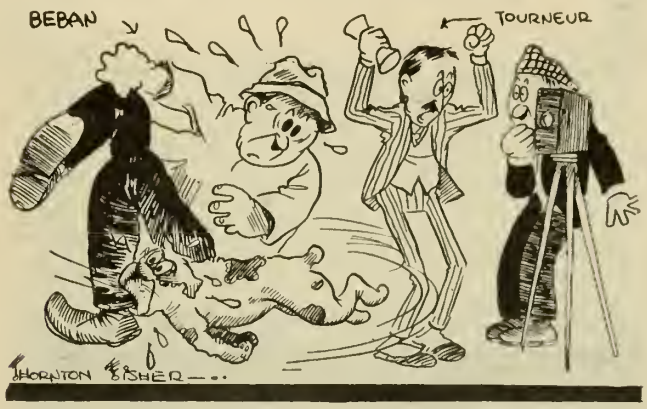
KELLY DOING GOOD WORK.

Anthony P. Kelly, whose very successful feature film, "The Soul of a Woman," led to his present engagement as Lubin's chief scenario man, is at work on a new feature for that company, entitled "The Light at Dusk." Lubin will soon release two of Kelly's four-reel original stories, called "The Sorrows of Happiness" and "The City of Failing Light." Through V-L-S-E will be released his five-part feature, "The Streets of Silence."

Beban's Bit

"Dog's Teeth Sterilized? Let Him Bite," Said Beban—The Retake that Failed.

A LITTLE thing like being bitten by a ferocious bull dog doesn't feaze George Beban, the World Film star, provided, of course, that the animal's teeth have been carefully sterilized before the biting scene is enacted.



They were taking the exterior stuff for the new feature drama in which Beban will star, "The Genius." They were proceeding with a scene in which Beban quarrels with his wife. The bull dog leaped into the picture and seized Beban by the leg.

"Great," cried Director Maurice Tourneur.

"Ouch!" cried Beban, "let go, you brute!"

The cameraman, not realizing the effect of the dog's impromptu entrance upon the scene, had stopped turning the crank.

"We'll do that bit over," said Tourneur, as some one called off the dog.

"What bit?" queried Beban, "the dog biting bit?"

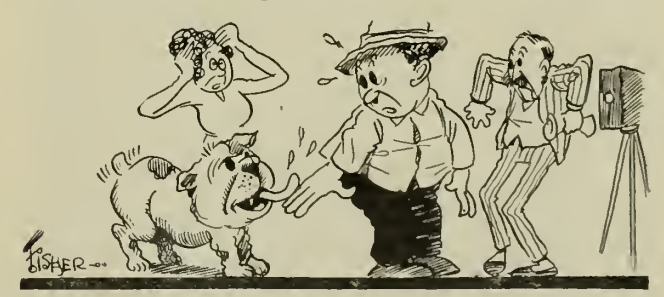
"Yes," said the director, enthusiastically. "It's fine."

"Nix," said Beban. "Yep," said Tourneur.

This ran back and fourth several times.

"Sterilize his teeth and I'll do it," ultimately agreed Beban.

They sent for tooth brushes and various dental antiseptics. Three men held the dog while its owner did the sterilizing.



Then they repeated the scene. The dog was released. He leaped forward—and began to lick Beban's hand.

"Ha, ha!" said Beban.

"Ha! h—l!" said Tourneur.

Vaudette Theater Changes Hands.

The Vaudette theater of Chino, Cal., has been sold by Fred Jackman to Harry B. Stark of the First National Bank of that city.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"THE BANKHURST MYSTERY" (Reliance).

AN adventure of Remar, the detective, whom followers of Reliance photoplays will remember as a heroic figure of force and daring, is the theme of this Reliance feature. A. D. Sears again plays the detective, while Irene Hunt, Margie Wilson, Alfred Paget and Jack Brammell are other principals.

The great diamond which Remar saved from the "Queen of the Band" (Reliance feature) is again the object of crooks. Mason (Jack Brammell) is manager of the jewel shop in the vault of which the diamond is kept. He plans with Hanson, hotel keeper (Alfred Paget), to steal it. Mason's wife discovers the plot. She is slain by Hanson and the local police cannot find that her death was other than natural.

Remar is called in to solve the murder mystery. Ultimately, by means of footsteps near the body, he fastens the crime upon Hanson.

Meanwhile Hanson and Mason have taken the huge diamond from the vault. Remar gets hint of the crooks' plans, but Hanson and a female confederate escape in an automobile with the gem. Remar follows in another machine. He overtakes the criminals but is stabbed and falls to the ground. He is picked up later by his assistant in another automobile. A final race with the crooks' car follows which ends in victory for Remar and the ultimate punishment of all the guilty.

The auto racing scenes are thrillingly presented, and it is no secret that A. D. Sears ran considerable risk in making his fall from the onrushing car. Closeups are used with rare artistic utility to show how the mysterious murder was committed and how it was solved.

MISS ZEIDLER IN BIG "A" FEATURES.

Miss Leatrice Joy Zeidler has been engaged to play leads in all future productions of the Nola Film Company, one of the releasing companies of the Associated Program. Miss Zeidler holds the unique distinction of being the only player of the Nola Film Company who has played in all of its productions and is held over for the Big "A" productions. Miss Zeidler is of a vivacious, ingenue type, though she also displays great skill in the interpretation of dramatic roles. Her beauty is that of the Spanish type, the kind that is liked by the patrons of the silent drama, as it photographs beautifully. The next feature she appears in, in which she triumphs over all her former performances, is "The Turning Point," soon to be released on the Associated Program.

LEONARD MAKES ANOTHER OF HIS FAMOUS BOOB COMEDIES.

With the possible exception of the serial feature, "The Master Key," there is probably no type of story which has made Robert Z. Leonard's name so welcome on the Universal program as his intermittent series of "Boob" comedy dramas with himself in the role of "Boob." That is why exhibitors and film fans the country over will be keenly interested to learn that he has just completed another of these two-reel subjects, this time the story of an amateur detective who scores a scoop on the real article sent out from the city on the trail of a gang of bandits.

"The Boob's Victory" is the title of the tale and in it Leonard plays the role of the corn-fed country boy whose interest is always divided between the work he is hired to do and the studying of a little hand-book on the subject, "How To Become a Detective." During the two reels comedy situations alternate with dramatic crisis in a way that lends strength to both. This is the first of Leonard's productions since returning from Arrowhead and in it Ella Hall plays opposite Leonard, with Marc Robbins and Kingsley Benedict comprising the supporting cast.

KINEMACOLOR MAKING A FEATURE.

The Kinemacolor Company has just started the production of a new five-reel feature to be called, "Her American Prince," and is a picturization of the play of the same name. It is a fiction romance on the order of "Graustark."

Arthur Donaldson is to be featured in the part of Baron Von Blumberg. Miss Ormi Hawley will play the leading feminine role. In the supporting cast the leading male role, opposite Miss Hawley, is Bradley Barker. The juvenile lead will be played by J. Frank Glendon.

FANNIE WARD IN "THE CHEAT" (Lasky).

There is unusual interest attached to the coming Lasky Feature Play Company's release, Fannie Ward in "The Cheat," a Cecil B. De Mille produced picture, which will be shown in Paramount theaters December 13. Jesse L. Lasky, in a letter to W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Paramount Corporation, declared his belief that the production was one of the very best, if not the best, photoplay the producing firm has done, and that it certainly placed Fannie Ward in a foremost place among motion picture actresses.

Hector Turnbull is the author of "The Cheat," the story of which finds an application to thousands and thousands of families. It is the story of an extravagant and unthinking wife who compromises herself through thoughtlessness. In the moment of her great peril her husband comes to her rescue, shoulders the blame for her pistol attack on a wealthy young Japanese and stands trial for the assault.

The verdict of the jury is that the husband is guilty. But the wife goes to the stand, tells the true story, shows the mark which the Japanese made on her shoulder and wins the acquittal of her husband. Meanwhile the Japanese is nearly mobbed in court.

It is a swift moving melodrama of many surprising scenes

Miss Ward, heretofore on the stage and on the screen (she was the star in the Lasky production, "The Marriage of Kitty") has been known chiefly as a comedienne. Now she becomes a dramatic actress of great skill and power.

The supporting company includes Jack Dean, as the husband; Sessue Hayakawa, as the Japanese; James Neill, Utaka Abe, Dana Ong and Hazel Childers.

"RECKONING DAY" (Essanay).

The bitterness of an unhappy married life which finally turns into the sunshine of happiness is the theme for this three-act photoplay. The girl weds a young scapegrace who has the dashing brilliancy, which young women are said to admire in men, only to find he is a forger and blackmailer. Her life is made miserable until the young man is forced to flee from the city after being exposed in a fraud. She hears that he is dead and marries again, only to find out that he is alive. The scapegrace husband enters her home at night to extort money from her. There unfortunately he meets a burglar, who kills him. The girl then finds happiness with her new husband, who has all the good qualities the other lacked. E. H. Calvert plays the scapegrace with all his characteristic faculty of making himself hated in the villain role. Elizabeth Burbridge takes the part of the girl.

"CISSY'S INNOCENT WINK" (Rialto).

Cissy Fitzgerald is always recognized on the screen by the fascinating wink, which one may almost regard as her "trademark." This has been taken advantage of by Ben Cohn, who has written an extremely humorous Casino Star Comedy about "Cissy and Her Wink."

Miss Fitzgerald is introduced as the young city wife of a Deacon in a rural community. Unknown to the deacon, she has a nervous affliction which takes the form of an unconscious wink. "Budd" Ross as the deacon puts into his playing all the skill that comes from his years upon the stage as a comedian.

When the deacon brings Cissy to his village home and introduces her to the men in his congregation, Cissy gives them all the wink. They think she is flirting with them and complications follow fast and furious. The chief offender is played by Charles Craig, who has been seen to such good advantage in some recent Casino Star Comedies.

The play is staged by Director Edwin Middleton with his usual care, and embodies all the fun one finds in such plays as "The Old Homestead."

"THE CLEAN UP" (American).

Edward Coxen, the leading man of the Coxen-Greenwood Company of "Flying A" players, is ill. Coxen contracted a severe cold recently and complications have set in to such an extent that Ed has been forced to take to his downy couch for a week or two at least. In the "Clean Up," a two-reel "Flying A" drama, a forthcoming American release, Miss Winifred Greenwood appears without her co-star. It is the first time for many months that the American has scheduled a week's output of film without the capable Coxen appearing opposite Miss Greenwood. Coxen's illness for a time was the cause of much apprehension among his confreres, but reports from the sick-room are now to the effect that threatened pneumonia has been averted.

Scene from "The Clean Up" (American).

"THE GIRL AND THE GAME" RELEASE POSTPONED.

In response to the requests of a large number of exhibitors the release of "The Girl and the Game," the Signal Film Corporation's series of railroad stories, featuring Helen Holmes, to be released through the Mutual Film Corporation, has been set forward to December 27th.

"SPEED KINGS" (Vim).

"Speed Kings" and "Mixed and Fixed"—Vim Comedies of December 17 and 24, respectively—promise to abound in unique and comical situations.

"Speed Kings" is the story of a couple of men—Pokes and Jabbs—who receive an automobile in payment for a debt and proceed to get the speed fever. The picture is marked by the explosion of an automobile which is said to be a most realistic bit of photography.

"Mixed and Fixed" presents a mix-up in wives and husbands, a mask ball and a "dummy" figure which is the cause of all the fuss. The comedy ends in a lively chase which promises to surprise even the most blase.

In both of these comedies "Bobbie" Burns and "Wait" Stull as Pokes and Jabbs are featured with pretty Ethel Burton as chief support.

GAUMONT TO RELEASE A COLORED FILM.

Giving its December 29 photoplay a holiday atmosphere by tinting the film, the Gaumont company will release on the Mutual Program a beautiful Rialto Star Feature called "A Prince of Yesterday." To secure the utmost in the way of pictorial effect, this prismatic play has been presented in costume amid settings of unparalleled richness.

The story deals with the efforts of the Prince of Ballanza to resist his councilors who seek to force him into a marriage of state with a princess whom he has never seen. Accompanied by one advisor, he travels in foreign lands, and happens to see a beautiful maiden at a convent casement. Unwittingly he has been brought to the very girl that he must marry to give his state happiness and prosperity. The love story develops along natural lines.

Whatever the beauty of the story, it is rendered incomparably greater by the wonderful effects of color. It is a multiple-reel photoplay, and as a holiday offering will be welcomed by exhibitors who delight in giving their patrons unexpected treats. It is released without extra charge on the Mutual Program as a regular Rialto Star Feature.

"THE TERROR OF THE FOLD" (Centaur).

The first Centaur Feature production directed by William J. Bowman, until recently director for Francis X. Bushman, is "The Terror of the Fold," a two-reel drama to be released December 30 on the Mutual program. In view of Mr. Bowman's past performances (he has staged a large number of photoplay successes), exceptional contributions are expected of him, and in this, his first effort, every anticipation has been realized.

The story of "The Terror of the Fold" was written by Miss Scene from "The Terror of the Fold" (Centaur).

Theodosia Harris, of David Horsley's scenario staff. It has a powerful motive charmingly treated. The scenes are laid in the woods of the Northwest and are decidedly picturesque. Some very thrilling scenes are enacted by the principals in the cast and the Bostock pumas, which are just being brought before the camera.

Besides being Mr. Bowman's first effort for Centaur Features, the picture marks the initial bow in this brand of William Clifford, erstwhile associate of Francis X. Bushman, and other stars in photoplay features. Mr. Clifford assumes the leading character, that of a government forest ranger. He is supported by Miss Marvell Spencer in the leading feminine part; Mr. Ed. Alexander in the character lead, and Mr. Howard Millcrest in the "heavy" role.

GERALDINE FARRAR IN "TEMPTATION."

Geraldine Farrar is to be seen in another Lasky Feature Film Company's production on the Paramount Program. The photoplay is a six-part feature, produced by Cecil B. DeMille, and entitled "Temptation." It will be shown in Paramount theaters for the first time on January 6.

Coming at a time when Miss Farrar's film version of "Carmen" is breaking records as a feature attraction throughout the country, announcement of the release of "Temptation" has evoked the keenest interest among motion picture men and the public.

It is the story of a grand opera prima donna, her trials, troubles and tribulations in the long, hard fight to the top. That many of the incidents which comprise the play have been taken from Miss Farrar's own personal experiences, lends no small amount of interest to the production. Many of the scenes reveal for the first time publicly the manner of life and artistic business behind the scenes of a great opera house. Hector Turnbull, formerly dramatic critic of the New York Tribune, is the author of "Temptation."

Geraldine Farrar appears in the role of Renee Dupree, a young American student of singing, who is able to pursue her studies by reason of a small income she earns by singing in big restaurants. She is in love with a young violinist and composer. One night Muller, the impresario of the opera company, hears Renee sing, sends for her to come to his table at the restaurant, where he is sitting with a young woman who is infatuated with him, and invites her to try for a place in the opera company.

Theodore Roberts never has done anything better than his interpretation of Muller, the impresario. Pedro de Cordoba appears as Julien and the cast includes also Raymond Hatton, Anita King and Elsie Jane Wilson.

RAVER TO USE PILOT STUDIOS.

Harry R. Raver, president of the Raver Film Corporation, has made arrangements through the courtesy of Dr. Shallenberger of the Arrow Film Company for the use of the Pilot studios, located in Yonkers.

This gives the Raver Company added facilities for the filming of the interior scenes of "The Other Girl," the successful Augustus Thomas stage play, which they are producing. At the outset it was thought that the production could be completed with the use of but one studio. Up to the present time the Gordon studios, on Staten Island, have been used exclusively. This new arrangement will not only facilitate the making of interiors, but also the filming of the outside scenes. Many of the locations have been picked in Yonkers, while other desirable spots were found on Staten Island.

CHANGE OF RELEASE DATE FOR RIALTO STAR FEATURE.

Announcement that "The Secret Agent" would change dates on the Mutual program with "The Ace of Death," in which Miss Stella Hammerstein is starred, has just been made by the Gaumont Co. Both these multiple-reel productions are Rialto Star features. "The Ace of Death" will be released Dec. 15 and the other photodrama Jan. 12. Robert T. Haines is the star of "The Secret Agent."

"THE MYSTERY OF CARTER BREENE" (Centaur).

The first episode of the "Adventures of Allan Dare" series, made by David Horsley and released under the brand name of Centaur Star Features, is entitled "The Mystery of Carter Breene." It is in three reels and will be released Wednesday, December 22, in the regular service of the Mutual program.

Unlike other continued pictures, this series will offer a complete story in each release. One picture will have no bearing on the preceding or subsequent release except that the principal characters are retained throughout. Each time another adventure of Allan Dare will be taken up and carried through to its final solution so that in the case of a patron missing a release the chain of the series will not be broken beyond following.

The advantage of carrying a series of this kind is manifold, as has been shown in the experiences of the biggest magazines of the time. A likable character when introduced will naturally bring to the magazine a number of followers, which will be maintained and increased with subsequent material concerning the same character. The Wallingford, the Craig Kennedy and the Penrod stories of Booth Tarkington are few of the instances in point. The same principle applied to motion pictures can only be expected to result the same way.

The series is written by Crane Wilbur, who has shown unusual ability as a photoplaywright with such scenarios as those used in "The Blood of Our Brothers," and "Could A Man Do More?" In each picture Mr. Wilbur will also enact the leading part.

In the cast besides Mr. Wilbur, who plays Dare, are Carl Von Schiller, Gordon Mullen, J. H. Lynch, Edward Collins, Celia Santon, Mrs. Williams and a host of others. The production was made under the direction of Robert B. Broadwell, with the assistance of E. F. Bishop. The next release of the series will be made in January.

IVAN ADOPTS STATE OPTIONS.

State right buyers no longer can purchase individual productions of the Ivan Film Corporation. For, as the records of the past few weeks in the sale of "Concealed Truth" and "Forbidden Fruit" demonstrate, state right buyers are eager for all Ivan productions. Answering the requests of many of his customers, General Manager Chadwick of the Ivan Film Corporation has evolved a new plan of selling his productions. He is disposing of options on his entire yearly output of a feature a month. He is connecting with the foremost state right buyers in every territory where possible, and is guaranteeing features of Ivan one a month regularly hereafter.

Statements to the effect that state right buyers haven't the faith of their own convictions is belied in the present Ivan situation. These concerns are today placing deposits on their faith in Ivan's "making good." Announcements have not been made yet of the titles of the forthcoming Ivan productions. Nevertheless, over half of the country has been sold on all Ivan productions issued during the coming year.

NOLA FILM CO.'S ACTIVITIES.

Two Orleans beauties are to have leading parts in the dramatic and comedy pictures of the Nola Film Company, the principal stock of which concern is owned and controlled by local persons. One of the girls is Miss Leatrice Joy Zeidler, who is to be leading woman, and the other is Miss Madelyn Nichols, who will be ingenue for the company. Miss Zeidler is a vivacious beauty of the Spanish type, and has acted in all Nola films produced so far.

Miss Nichols is the daughter of J. W. Nichols. She was picked out by Prof. George H. Dorsey of the University of Chicago as a beauty who would register well in the pictures. Miss Nichols has had some experience on the stage, having played with Emma Bunting in stock.

Plans for producing films equal to the best from California and the East are being made at the Nola studio. Captain William J. Hannon, president and general manager, has just returned from New York, where he signed up Walter Morton former Pathe and Edison director, to show the Nola players how to act. His new cameraman is Norton Travis, formerly with William Fox. William Morgan Hannon will be scenario editor and assistant director. The assistant cameraman is H. Guy Uyama, who once worked with David Griffith.

Nola films are to be released through the Associated Film Sales Corporation.

MUSTANG, NEW TYPE OF WESTERN DRAMA.

Without much ado, the old type of Western film drama, with its bucking bronchos and mad dashes over mountain trails, with its wild horseback rides and its sensational gun-play scenes, has evolved into a new type of photoplay. The new Mustang features produced by the American Film Co., Inc., and released on the Mutual Program, indicate the change that has been wrought. In these productions is found all the thrilling action that was seen in the old type of Western drama, but in addition have come stronger plots, involving intense emotional acting—stories that are more realistic and true to life.

In explaining the transition that brought about the new Mustang film productions, Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Co., Inc., said: "I have made a deep study of the production of Western dramas. There is a big demand for them; but the material of this type that was marketed as late as six months ago, in which only a wild chase was necessary for a film play to be labeled 'Western,' cannot find a place in film service today."

"A DAUGHTER OF THE CITY" (Essanay).

"A Daughter of the City," a five-act Essanay feature, adapted from the play of H. S. Sheldon, deals with a problem growing out of the present-day economical and social conditions. It is the story of a girl who, through the combination of beauty and poverty, falls prey to the flesh-hunters.

The parts of the play which point out the great evil threatening the girl are delicately handled and fascinating. These parts are necessary to the story and point out the moral with force and strength.

Marguerite Clayton, who takes the part of the girl, who falls into the trap of the rich flesh-hunter, is ideally cast. She is beautiful and her large eyes look out at you from the screen with all the innocence of the character she represents.

E. H. Calvert, who takes the role of the wealthy business man looking for young girls as his prey, carries out his part in a way that makes his sinister motives stand out clear and sharp, but he stops short of any demonstration that could give the slightest offence to the most fastidious. He pursues his victims as a hunter pursues game, carefully, relentlessly. His patient, methodical efforts to trap the girl bring a shudder at the calculating villainy of such men, and sounds a note of warning to all young women.

There is no melodrama, no killing, no hysteria. The photoplay is a cross section of life as it is today, and men are not killed as a general rule for plotting against the virtue of a girl. But the libertine is punished in a much more effective way than killing. He is stripped of his mask and revealed to himself for what he is in the light his wife's contempt and utter scorn throws on him. And the girl is saved through the love of a boyhood playmate, who saw the dangers she was falling into and watched over her, until he could prove to her the evil intent of the man who was supposed to be befriending her. The picture is logical and well constructed under the direction of Mr. Calvert.

PERKIN'S PEP PRODUCER" (Selig).

"Perkin's Pep Producer," released Monday, December 20th, through General Film service, is perhaps one of the most comical of the rural productions that have made "The Chronicles of Bloom Center" so popular. The same cast of characters which has added so much to the entertainment of the preceding Bloom Center Chronicles disport themselves in this latest comedy.

Bloom Center is peaceful, but in Pleasant Grove, a nearby town, Percival Perkin is peddling Perkin's Pep Producer, a marvelous fluid, guaranteed to make one feel like new. The Bloom Center Bugle states that Bloom Center needs a trained nurse, and Percival Perkin decided that his wife, Lucy, should supply this demand and do the advance advertising for the patent medicine. The masculine Bloom Centerites are immediately interested when the beautiful young nurse arrives among them. Many become suddenly ill, and the nurse is called to attend them.

Slim Boggs arrives in the village and is taken really ill. The doctor pronounces the case smallpox. In the midst of confusion, Percival Perkin arrives. He gives Slim a dose of whisky instead of the Pep Producer, with most beneficial results. The sales are numerous. When the Bloom Centerites go behind the barn to drink the stuff, they find it quite different from the sample. It is too late, though, for the Perkins are far down the road toward the next town they will victimize.

"THE DRAGON" (Equitable).

In the Equitable's forthcoming release, "The Dragon," the story is told of youth and innocence issuing forth from an humble home to conquer the dragon which it has been told lurks in Fifth Avenue, the city's great highway of fashion, seeking what it may devour. Youth and innocence are personified by Miss Margarita Fischer, and the one who warned her of the perils of the city's artificial life is her old father, who has suffered at the teeth and claws of the dreadful monster.

Scene from "The Dragon" (Equitable).

She meets various people of various sorts and conditions, among them being most of those who had brought ruin to her father and his family. Totally unconscious of the fact that she is working out the decrees of fate, she in her turn brings desolation to those who had injured her father, and retribution, if not poetic at least effective, overtakes them.

The scenes of the play include many taken in the streets and avenues of this city, Fifth avenue in particular, being the locale of some of the most striking—a big department store, a downtown bank, Washington Square, the downtown Italian section, and other sections of the great metropolis being included in the "locations." The fortunes of the family are recuperated through the results of the heroine's adventures, and the final triumph over the powers of evil embodied in the dragon of Fifth avenue makes a happy ending, and shows that the law of compensation some times works out in a peculiar way. The story is the first produced for the Equitable by Harry A. Pollard, and is regarded as a production of the highest class.

"THE HOLD UP" (Cub).

The Cub Comedy release on the Mutual program for December 17 entitled "The Hold-Up" presents George Ovey in the character of a gay Lothario under the always applied name of Jerry. As a swashbuckler, however, he is a questionable success, since his proclivities eventually land him in jail.

Jerry is in love with Bessie, whose mother objects to the attentions bestowed upon her daughter. In order to get her daughter from Jerry's influence she plans a long automobile trip. Bessie is not to be coerced in such a manner and tells Jerry of the plan. He promises to rescue her.

The party starts out and on the road is held up by Cyclone Pete, a Mexican bandit. Jerry has hovered near and, in the spirit of bravery, creeps up behind Pete, knocks him unconscious, and then takes from him all valuables, turning them over to the victims.

In time Pete revives and starts out for a country hotel, where Bessie and her parents and Jerry are enjoying themselves. Arriving there he starts on a rampage, shooting up the place and everybody in sight. One of the panic-stricken guests calls the police, who arrive while the excitement is at its height and put an end to the trouble by carting Pete and Jerry to the calaboose.

Besides George Ovey as Jerry, there is in the cast George George as Cyclone Pete; Belle Bennett as Bessie; Jefferson Osborne as her father; Janet Sully as her mother, and a host of others.

SELIG STUDIO NOTES.

Colin Campbell, Selig director, together with his stock company, including Thomas Santschi and Bessie Eyton, left Los Angeles for San Francisco on December 2. In 'Frisco special water scenes for a forthcoming Selig Special, "Flotsam and Jetsam," will be filmed. Director Campbell and his "Ne'er-do-well" company were present at the opening of the Panama Canal, and therefore it was appropriate that Mr. Campbell and company should have been present at the closing of the Panama Fair.

Lewis Cody has joined the Selig Polyscope Company as a leading man and will show to the best of advantage as "Donald Harvey" in "The Grinning Skull of Respectability," a Selig drama by W. E. Wing, now in course of production.

The Selig Jungle-Zoo possesses six fine specimens of llama. These have recently been broken to harness and carrying packs and they will be used in a South American feature pictureplay.

Producer Wm. Robert Daly, of the Selig Company, claims he has a remarkable detective story in "The Uncut Diamonds," a single-reel melodrama. Fritzi Brunette is featured, supported by E. J. Pell, Frank Clark, James Bradbury and others.

Frank Beal, Selig producer, has started work on a highly dramatic one-reel subject entitled "Her Dream of Life," in which Harry Mestayer and Grace Darmond will appear.

Earl Foxe, member of the Selig company of actors, is one of the best-known dancers in the country.

Chaplin in "Carmen"

Essanay's Popular Comedian Does a Burlesque on Well Known Story.

"CARMEN," the classical tale of love and passion, written by a Spaniard and so appealing that it has been translated into every language in the world and made into a play and into an opera and finally into a photoplay by two different companies, is the vehicle that Charlie Chaplin has chosen for his next offering to the world of mirth. The thing is so big that it lends itself readily to burlesque. And Chaplin as the smitten soldier uses Edna Purviance and the situations made by the story to such effect that the play is one continuous laugh. The situations aren't changed. But it is Chaplin, as the "lowbrow" in the part, that makes it ridiculous. Edna Purviance is a beautiful, passionate Carmen and Chaplin is a well-meaning and therefore extremely funny lover.

LIONEL BARRYMORE WITH METRO.

Lionel Barrymore has signed a long time contract to appear exclusively in Metro feature productions, according to an announcement made at the Metro offices in the Heidelberg Building early this week. Mr. Barrymore recently finished playing the stellar role in "A Yellow Streak," a Columbia-Metro feature. It is Mr. Barrymore's present plan to take a rest of several weeks before starting on his next picture. During this time he will go to the wilds of Long Island on a shooting trip, in quest of the festive wild duck. While on Long Island, Mr. Barrymore expects to spend a day or two on the country estate of his illustrious uncle, John Drew, who lives near Southampton.

Immediately upon his return to New York, Mr. Barrymore will begin work on the big five-part feature, "The Mysterious House," in which he will be co-starred with Marguerite Snow. "The Mysterious House" will be produced by the Columbia Pictures Corporation, for release on the Metro program. It is the first time that these two stars have been engaged for the same feature, and their joint appearance will be welcomed by a host of admirers.

"VITAGRAPH FAMILY."

The "Vitagraph Family" is the name of the attractive snappy new house organ issued weekly by the Vitagraph Company. Its purpose is to create a spirit of loyalty, co-operation, efficiency and harmony among the various individuals and departments of that concern, in order to reach out toward a higher achievement in years to come.

"The Family" is edited by J. Stuart Blackton and Albert E. Smith, heads of the Vitagraph Company, and besides containing a great many "Donts for Directors, Actors, Camera Men, etc.," it contains some valuable information on the proper making of pictures.

EQUITABLE'S FOR THE NEXT QUARTER.

The definite program for the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, which releases through the World Film Corporation, has been laid out for the forthcoming three months.

Following Henry Kolker in "The Warning," William Courtnay in "Sealed Lips," and Gail Kane in "The Labyrinth," will be seen Margarita Fischer in "The Dragon," which is now completed, and which represents the best work of Director Harry Pollard. This release date will be December 27th.

Julia Dean makes her first appearance in an important picture in the Triumph Film Corporation's Visualization of the well-known play, "The Ransom," which is in the final stages of studio and laboratorial work now and which will reach the program January 3rd.

Molly McIntyre, late star of "Bunty Pulls the Strings," and "Molly McKay," will be seen in S. E. V. Taylor's original story, "Nan Perrine," or "One Night," which Mr. Taylor wrote and which he is producing for Equitable. Miss McIntyre is making her debut in this picture, which will characterize the program January 10th.

Marie Empress, last seen in a Metro play, comes from the Triumph Film Corporation's plant in a stirring, interesting tale, "Behind Closed Doors." Miss Empress will feature the program January 10th, after which will come Muriel Ostriche in "Babette of the Ballyhoo," Frank Sheridan and Lily Cahill in "Caste," Gail Kane in "Her God" and Charles J. Ross in "The Senator."

In addition to the above stars, Marguerite Leslie, Teddy Sampson, Carlyle Blackwell and Clara Whipple will be seen in important productions.

A NEW A. C. F. PRODUCTION.

The wealth of the war-film controlled by The American Correspondent Film Company, Inc., is due to two facts: it has official permission to get German pictures; and it has war correspondents at once daring and indefatigable. "The Battle and Fall of Przemysl," released a few months ago, and "The Battles of a Nation," the success of the Park theater, are so popular that those who saw them will hail the appearance of the latest A. C. F. feature, "The Warring Millions."

"The Warring Millions" has had a run at the Oyimpic Theater in Chicago and police were necessary at each performance to hold back the crowds who came to see it. "The Warring Millions" is a faithful presentation of actual happenings taken on the battlefield by noted correspondents, among whom are Edward Lyell Fox, A. K. Dawson and Jack Everetts.

CONTRACT FOR ASSOCIATED PROGRAM.

To have three exchanges of a competitive program sign up in one day is the honor that was thrust upon the Associated Program on Saturday, December 4th. Fred Murphy has signed up for two exchanges, Buffalo, N. Y., and Boston, Mass., and H. A. Lande, of Pittsburgh, has signed up for his territory.

"THE LITTLE PURITAN" (M-IN-A).

"The Little Puritan," the M-in-A release of December 23, is said to be a high-class comedy possessing considerably more of a plot than the average one-reel comedy. It deals with the rivalry between two New York theatrical managers and how one of them finally gets the better of the other in a most unique and comic way.

"Smiling" Bill Parsons, who has played the lead in several laughable M-in-A releases, takes the part of Hubert, a theatrical manager, who is baffled by his rival with the invaluable aid of Corinne, a dancer. The part of Corinne is taken by Constance Talmadge, who has also appeared to advantage in many M-in-A releases in the past.

PATHE TO RELEASE "LIFE OF OUR SAVIOUR."

Pathe will release on the Gold Rooster program for Christmas week the famous seven-part "Life of Our Saviour" in Pathe color. This very costly production has probably attracted as much or more notice than any photoplay ever produced. Years were spent in its making and thousands of people employed in the cast. The principal parts were played by the leading celebrities of the Parisian stage, and the bewildering number of historically correct costumes had to be specially made. The subject lends itself particularly well to color and the glowing splendor of many of the scenes are almost beyond description. It is difficult in a play of this character to give a thoroughly harmonious and reverent interpretation, but the success with which it has been done in "The Life of Our Saviour" is proven by the universal praise which has been given it by the clergy and educators everywhere.

THE EQUITY MOTION PICTURE CO.

The Equity Motion Picture Co., Inc., of New York, that has been filming comedies featuring Billy B. Van, the comedian, and the Public Service Film Co., of New York, that has been handling and exhibiting moving pictures, have combined forces with a capitalzation of one million dollars, with Billy B. Van as president, Joseph Leblang, vice-president, Alexander L. Jones, treasurer, and Morris Cohen, secretary and counsel. The administrative offices of the company are located in the Strand Theatre Building. The new Equity Motion Picture Co. have built a studio at Ridgefield Park, New Jersey, where they will commence picture making on or about the first of the year.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD IN "THE TRAGIC CIRCLE."

The thousands of admirers of Harold Lockwood, one of the leading photoplay actors of the day, will be delighted to learn that he is to appear in a number of two-reel subjects to be released at intervals by the American Film Company, Inc. The first of the two-reel Lockwood pictures will be "The Tragic Circle," which will be released December 27th. A particularly strong cast will appear in "The Tragic Circle." In addition to Harold Lockwood, Miss May Allison, William Stowell and Ashton Dearholt have prominent roles. The picture was produced by Thomas Ricketts, who has directed a number of notable recent successes, including "Damaged Goods," "The Secretary of Frivolous Affairs," "The House of Scandals" and "The Buzzard's Shadow."

CHANGES IN V-L-S-E FORCES.

Announcement is made that C. E. Shurtleff, formerly of the Atlanta office of the Big Four, has been transferred to Detroit, to take charge of the sub-branch office in that city, which is under the supervision of Sydney E. Abel, manager of the Cleveland office.

Another addition to the Big Four's constantly increasing sales organizations is that of Allan J. Bachrach, who will be attached to the Washington sub-branch office, and will work in North Carolina and Virginia. Mr. Bachrach was a former exhibitor, who made quite a name for himself by reason of advanced methods while manager of the Washington house of a Brylawski chain of theaters.

Mr. Bachrach entered the sales field of the industry when he became affiliated with the World Film office in Washington, under Leon J. Bamberger, who was then its manager. Mr. Bamberger is now sales promotion manager of the V-L-S-E, so that Mr. Bachrach will again come under the notice of the man who first introduced him to the marketing side of moving pictures.

"NO GREATER LOVE" (Selig-V-L-S-E).

"No Greater Love," a life drama of today, being the study of a woman's heart, will be released as a Selig Red Seal play in five soul-stirring acts through V-L-S-E, on January 10th. The play was written by the famous author, William Le Queux, and features Miss Regina Badet, the wonderful French emotional actress, in the role of Sadunah, the dancer. "No Greater Love" is a drama of intensity throughout, revealing the wonderful power of mother love. Husband, fame, life itself are all surrendered in one glorious sacrifice for an only child. Sadunah, the dancer, has a beautiful daughter whom she wishes to defend from the perils of the world and see comfortably settled. Pursuing her sole ambition, she marries a rich financier and when he gets into serious straits compels him to commit crime. But she, too, is ready to sacrifice and, the call coming, Sadunah, at whose feet the artistic world has paid homage, proves the Biblical adage of no greater love. Miss Badet has many opportunities for convincing emotional work; the scenic backgrounds both Interiors and exteriors are beautiful in the extreme. Miss Badet is supported by an all-star cast of players.

"TWO MEN OF SANDY BAR" (Universal).

Although he has been with the Universal Pacific Coast studios eight months and in that time has appeared in the leading roles of half a score feature productions, with every production he appears on the screen in an entirely different character. He has played cattleman, clergyman, professor, woodsman, ward heeler, trapper and others. Now comés one of the most picturesque roles of them all, that of John Oakhurst, in Bret Harte's play, "Two Men of Sandy Bar."

The character is that of an American of the early days of California. An interesting feature of Bosworth's make-up in this production is the pair of spurs which he wears. They are more than forty years old and were at one time the property of one of the oldest of the early Spanish families. They are of the old-fashioned Mexican type, silver mounted, with the silver tambores dangling from them and ringing with every movement of the foot.

"STINGAREE" MEETS WITH PRAISE.

Almost since the day of the initial release of the "Stingaree" series letters and telegrams of congratulation have been coming into the Kalem Company, mainly from exhibitors, though not a few were also from picture fans. One of the first letters to be received was the following communication from Ira Aronson, manager of the Cameraphone theater, Pittsburgh, Pa. It read: "Allow me to congratulate you on the first episode of 'Stingaree.' I played it Friday, the 26th, in our theater to about seven thousand people, and can truthfully say that 70 per cent. of my audience went out praising it. I am quite sure that you will meet with great success in this series, as the acting, the staging and the scenery are superb. I might add that our house is known for Kalem productions."

PAT ROONEY WITH UNIVERSAL.

Pat Rooney, of the well-known vaudeville team of Rooney and Bent, which has traveled and delighted vaudeville audiences the world over, has at last invaded motion pictures. His "maiden" appearance was made at Universal City, where he took the leading part in "I'll Get Her Yet," an original one-reel comedy written and produced by Roy Clements. It is one of those comedies in which Mr. Rooney can be seen to the best of advantage, and he has made the most of the opportunities offered him in this little comedy. Marion Bent, Pat's partner in the vaudeville team, plays the role of Marion in the picture.

Scene from "I'll Get Her Yet" (Universal).

SMILEY BUSY ON SECOND OCEAN FILM.

Joseph W. Smiley, chief director for the new Ocean Film, who has just completed "Life Without Soul," five reels, in seventeen days, based upon Mrs. Shelley's classic, "Frankenstein," which will be an early 1916 release, is now engaged in forming his company for his second Ocean picture, "The Fortunate Youth," Mr. Smiley's own scenario from the novel of the same name by W. J. Locke, the celebrated English author, who wrote "The Morals of Marcus," "The Derelict" and many other best sellers. He has engaged Lilie Leslie as the leading woman, Wilmuth Merkyl for the title role, William Cohill, John H. Smiley, Charles Graham and Sue Balfour. As usual, Martin Faust assists Smiley.

CONGRESS TO SEE "THE BATTLE CRY OF PEACE."

At the instigation of Mrs. Storey, president of the Daughters of the American Revolution, the members of the Senate and the House of Representatives witnessed a private showing in Washington on December 17th of V-L-S-E's famous message on preparedness, "The Battle Cry of Peace."

Mrs. Storey sought to secure the consent of the President to attend this performance, and was told that, while Mr. Wilson feels that the picture is performing a wonderful work, he would have to forego the pleasure of viewing it because of demands which would be made upon him to see other film productions. That "The Battle Cry of Peace" should have a marked influence on the action of Congress in handling President Wilson's recommendations for greater defenses, is forecasted by the remarkable reception which the picture is receiving throughout the country.

PIONEER HAS "THE BURGLAR AND THE LADY."

Announcement is made by the Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, 130 West 46th street, New York City, that they have secured the New York State rights to "The Burglar and the Lady." This is an enthralling drama in five stirring reels, adapted from the play of the same name, and featuring James J. Corbett and the favorite stage beauty, Miss Claire Whitney.

Though the picture will be released on December 28th, advance bookings are already coming in at a fast rate. The Loew's Theatrical Enterprise has secured the first booking at the New York theater, Broadway and 44th street, on December 28th, and the Pioneer will cheerfully issue invitations to all exhibitors who are desirous to witness this exhibition.

CHURCHES BOOK "MANGER TO CROSS."

The fact that church and school authorities read the trade publications seems to be borne out by Kalem's experience since the original announcement that this year the holiday feature, "From the Manger to the Cross," could be booked direct from that company. A number of inquiries have been received from church and school authorities, though the only announcements yet carried have been in the trade publications. It might be said in passing that from the surprising number of bookings already made by exhibitors on this feature "From the Manger to the Cross" will continue to hold its record as the perennial holiday attraction.

NOTES OF THE TRADE

THE scenario of the Triumph-Equitable five-reeler, "The Warning," featuring Henry Kolker as the "good fellow" whose vices become monsters to drag him down, and whose fearful and dramatic experiences here and in the hereafter serve as a "warning" indeed to himself and the spectator, was written by Eve Unsell. The picture affords unusual entertainment, both as a good drama and as presenting weird and splendid spectacles of illusion and trick photography. Mr. Kolker rises to superb heights and does perhaps the best work of his career. Eve Unsell is the author of many other feature adaptations, among which are "The Man From Mexico," "Wildflower," "The Dawn of a To-morrow" and "The Ransom," an original dramatic feature for Julia Dean, now in course of production under Mr. Edmund Lawrence, who also directed "The Warning."

Eve Unsell.

The Manhattan Slide and Film company has opened a branch studio in the Advance building, 1514 Prospect avenue, Cleveland, Ohio. Western business will be handled from Cleveland.

Under the direction of Otis Turner, J. Warren Kerrigan has begun work in the stellar role of a film version of Louis Joseph Vance's novel, "The Pool of Flame," scenario for which was arranged by F. McGrew Willis. Bertram Grassby plays the role of Count Chambry with Lois Wilson in the character of Princess Beatrix. The story will be complete in five reels.

The last hundred feet of "The Rack," the World Film release in which Alice Brady is to star, have been taken. It will be shown the first week in January.

But a few scenes remain to be photographed at Universal City in the Smalleys' production of the five reel story by Rufus Steele, "Hop." The story deals with the smuggling of opium into this country and the leading roles in it are taken by the Smalleys themselves with Marie Walcamp, Juan de la Cruz, C. Norman Hammond and Eddie Polo supporting.

Mary Anderson, who recently joined the Vitagraph company at Santa Monica, Cal., has finished work on a one-part comedy entitled, "He Got Himself a Wife." It was written by Edwin Ray Coffin and produced under the direction of George Stanley. Included in the cast with Miss Anderson are Webster Campbell and Aileen Allen.

Carter De Haven is still at work on a five reel feature, "The Wrong Door." De Haven and his wife, Flora Parker De Haven, play the leading roles.

Frank Thompson, son and heir of the great Denman Thompson, whose immortal "The Old Homestead" is being adapted by the Famous Players, was an interested visitor at the company's studio while some of the scenes from the play were being enacted. Mr. Thompson, who appeared in the original play with his father, was particularly impressed by the work of Frank Losee, who is giving the beloved character of Josh Whitcomb its silent impersonation. "I have known and admired Losee's work for many years, but in this role, I believe he surpasses anything he has ever done," said Mr. Thompson.

With "What Followed" completed, the William Worthington company this week began production at Universal City of the three reel story, "Scales of Justice," featuring Herbert Rawlinson. Agnes Vernon plays opposite Rawlinson in this offering.

James Oliver Curwood is the author of the five-part melodramatic Blue Ribbon Feature now being produced for the Vitagraph by William Humphrey. Mr. Humphrey has selected such prominent Vitagraph Players as Harry Morey, Carolyn Birch, Leo Delaney, Rose Tapley and Templer Saxe to enact the leading roles.

Lawrence Carey has been engaged by the Nola Film company, whose output is handled by the Associated Film Sales corporation, to play heavies. Mr. Carey worked in the Selig studios in Chicago under the direction of William Boggs playing character and leads in 1910 and 1911. He also played under Director Frank Howard of the same company. Mr. Carey's former connections before joining the picture business were with E. H. Sothern in repertoire. He played characters with the Edna May Spooner Stock company at the Lyric theater, New Orleans, La., in 1910, and also played with the Baldwin-Melville Stock company in Buffalo and New Orleans.

Helene Rosson contributes a wonderful bit of character acting in "The Pitch of Chance," a two reel American "Mustang" drama to be released December 24.

Pauline Frederick is delighted at the prospect of changing from the Egyptian atmosphere of "Bella Donna" for the regular, calm and collected American atmosphere of "Lydia Gilmore," which will be the next photoplay in which the Famous Players star will appear.

"One Against Many" is the title of another Lenora Ainsworth picture which William C. Dowlan is this week putting on at Universal City. The story will be completed in three reels and in it Dowlan plays opposite Gloria Fonda.

Julia Swayne Gordon, Robert Whitworth, Arline Pretty, Arthur Cozine, and Leo Delaney will be featured in Ouida Bergere's three-part dramatic Broadway Star Feature, "Wasted Lives," which was produced for the Vitagraph by Director Theodore Marston.

Thomas Sanschi, Selig star, has laid aside his producing for the present in order to devote his entire attention to playing the leading role in a sea feature soon to be completed by Director Colin Campbell. His first scene required him to run about 150 feet along a rolling deck, to engage twelve sailors in a rough and tumble fight, then to receive a knock-out blow from a belaying pin and be thrown over the ship's side forty feet to the water below.

Raymond Schrock, who has been editor of scenarios for the Imp-Universal forces, has written 112 scripts in the last two years. He will become a director when the Universal gets into the new studios.

Confreres Honor Farrell

Boston Exchange Managers Show Appreciation of General Film Manager Edward J. Farrell, Recently Promoted to Important Job, by Calling at His Office Before His Departure and Making Him a Handsome Present.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, Boston Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BOSTON, MASS.—Prior to his departure to assume his new duties as the Southern district manager for the General Film Company, Edward J. Farrell was pleasantly surprised by the managers of the different New England exchanges.

They visited him at the offices of the New England branch of the General Film Company at No. 218 Commercial street, Boston, presented him with a purse of gold and wished him the best of success in his new venture.

The visiting party included Fred B. Murphy, proprietor of the United Film Service of New England; Manager Frank H. Vine of the World Film Corporation; Manager Samuel Moscow of the Boston office of the United Film Service; Assistant Manager Frank Grady of the V-L-S-E; Manager George Balsdon of the V-L-S-E; Charles Frazier of the United Booking Offices; Thomas Sprye of the American Feature Film Company; Winfield Bradley of the Triangle Film Company, and J. Lourie of the Beacon theater.

The presentation speech was made by Fred B. Murphy, who sincerely voiced the sentiments of all those present that the departure of Mr. Farrell from New England was deeply regretted by everyone, both the exhibitors and exchangemen. As Mr. Murphy expressed himself, "What New England loses, the South gains." There was not a dry eye in the party during the presentation, so deep is the regret of Mr. Farrell's departure. Both the visitors and office employees could not help displaying their emotions. Mr. Farrell responded with a few words, but was too overcome to talk at any length.

Samuel Hasse, who also left with Mr. Farrell for Dallas, Texas, was presented with a pigskin traveling bag by the exchangemen.

Mr. Farrell was the idol of every exhibitor in the New England territory. His genial nature made him many friends. He is succeeded as manager of the New England exchange by Lawrence J. Hacking, who has been his assistant for the past year and a half. Mr. Hacking has been connected with the local General Film office for six years.

GWENDOLYN PATES IN BOSTON.

Manager Pattee of the Grand Opera house, Boston, is now using United Film Service in conjunction with the Grew-Pates Stock company. Gwendolyn Pates, the former Pathe star, is the leading lady with the stock company.

FRED B. MURPHY ENTERTAINS.

A number of New York guests were entertained by Fred B. Murphy of the New England United Film Service on the day following the ball of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts. The party included Miss Rose Duggan of the New York Evening Mail; Doc and Mrs. Willat (Mae Rock), Mrs. Fred Singhi, Adam Kessel of the Triangle Film Corporation, Harry A. Palmer, comptroller of exchanges for the General Film Co., and Edward Klein, son of the late Charles Klein, the playwright, who lost his life on the Lusitania, and Miss Christine Mayo, who was second in the Boston American's popularity contest.

PRETTIEST GIRL AT THE BALL.

Miss Sophie Sadowski, the Dorchester girl, who was declared the prettiest girl in attendance at the Movie ball, left during the past week for the Thanhouser studios at New Rochelle, N. Y., to begin work as a picture actress. The girl will adopt the nom-de-cinema of Doris Grey and it has been stated that her first appearance will be made in a three-reel feature entitled, "What Doris Grey Did," a story of her adventure in winning this contest.

Miss Sadowski is eighteen years of age and was chosen from about one hundred contestants by a board of judges composed of Miss Florence La Badie of the Thanhouser Company; Miss Salita Salano of the Boston Traveller; Charles Sutherland of the Boston Herald, and Frederick Johns of the Boston American.

On the trip to the New Rochelle studios she was accompanied by Edwin Thanhouser, president of the Thanhouser Film Company; Leon J. Rubinstein, publicity director, and Alfred H. Moses, Jr., chief photographer and technical expert. The result of this contest gained considerable publicity for the Thanhouser company in New England and reflects great credit on the efficiency of Mr. Rubinstein. The young lady's picture was published in every Boston paper and a number of the New England dailies printed special stories. It has been pronounced one of the biggest film publicity stunts ever pulled off in New England.

On the evening of her departure, Mr. Thanhouser gave a dinner in her honor at the Copley Plaza hotel. This was attended by President and Mrs. Ernest H. Horstmann, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Grant, R. W. Drown; H. Hirsch of the New England Mutual office; Miss Sadowski and her mother and brother; George Creney; Miss Lillian Russo; Frank Lavelle, of the Boston Globe; Bert Ford, of the Boston American; George Prince of the Boston Journal; Edward Hale and William Hardy of the Boston Post; Leon J. Rubinstein and Alfred H. Moses.

In the afternoon, Miss Sadowski was introduced to the audience at the Scollay Square Olympia, the most beautiful and largest moving picture theater in Boston.

KILLS DORCHESTER PROJECT.

The combination civic forum, community meeting place and moving picture theater of Joe Mitchelle Chapple, the Boston author, has been refused a license by Mayor James M. Curley, of Boston, as the result of the protestations of many Dorchester residents at a hearing during the past week. Eldridge Anderson, attorney for Mr. Chapple, submitted a petition with a thousand signatures favoring the $50,000 structure, which he intended to erect.

The proposed building was to have been located on Dorchester avenue. Chapple planned to use it three evenings a week and never during the afternoon when school was in session. He had planned to allow the community to use it for local gatherings, amateur entertainments and in various other ways to make the community more intimate and acquainted. The picture program was to be of a quality to make a mother happy through her knowledge that her child would be safer here than at any other entertainment.

HARRY F. CAMPBELL PROMOTED

Manager Harry F. Cambell, of the New England office of the Fox Film, has been appointed district manager for the New England and Canadian territory of the company. He will assume his new duties at once. Mr. Campbell has been the manager of the local Fox office for the past fourteen months and during that time has placed Fox features in almost every theater in the New England territory.

WINTER FILMS IN MAINE.

Many Companies Expected in the Pine Tree State to Get Snow Scenes.

From John P. Flanagan, Maine Correspondent, Moving Picture World.

BANGOR, ME.—Several of the large motion picture producing companies are planning a pilgrimage to Maine, it is reported, with a view to securing snow and woods scenes, such as Maine affords in abundant measure. The performers will arrive in Portland just as soon as possible after the announcement that there has been a good fall of snow in the state. Parts of the pictures have already been enacted and need but the Winter scenery to complete them. The companies will go directly to the woods and will remain there until all of the many scenes have been completed. It is expected that the experience will be a novel one, particularly for the moving picture stars who have never been away from the electrically lighted highway. The experience will also prove an interesting one to the woodsmen, many of whom are now in the forests.

DUSTIN COMES HOME TO HUNT.

Dustin Farnum, the noted Paramount star, recently made a trip of 3,000 miles from California to his native state of Maine just to enjoy the hunting. He was born in Bucksport, in this state, and says that there is no hunting like that to be found here.

Technicolor Motion Picture Corp.

Portland, Me.—The Technicolor Motion Picture corporation has been organized in Portland to manufacture and deal in moving picture machines, appliances and supplies. The capital stock is authorized at $150,000, with a par value of $1, of which nothing is paid in. E. P. Thompson of Arlington, Mass., is president; H. P. Sweetser, Portland, clerk; E. C. Randall, Boston, treasurer; directors, R. S. Almeder and E. C. Ramsdell of Boston; P. E. Coyle and C. A. Hight of Brookline; E. P. Thompson, Arlington, Mass.; E. T. Sheehan and H. P. Sweetser of Portland.

MAGISTRATE WARNS TROY, N. Y., MANAGERS.

Sixteen Owners Called and Warned That Letting in Children Under Sixteen Without Guardians Was Jail Offense.

By E. O. Weinberg, Troy Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

TROY, N. Y.—Managers of Troy moving picture theaters who permit children under sixteen years old to enter their theaters unaccompanied by parents or guardians will be sent to jail, Police Magistrate James F. Byron has announced.

The magistrate had the owners of sixteen theaters before him on complaint of Nathaniel J. Walker of the Mohawk and Hudson Humane society. He told them he had been receiving complaints for the last six months but that no specific complaint had been made until Mr. Walker acted. Mr. Walker's complaint came when it was reported to him that a girl, twelve years old, had been assaulted in a theater.

"We start out on an even basis today," Judge Byron said. "Past performances do not count. If any one of you is convicted before me from now on he goes to jail and gets the limit sentence provided by law. In the past I have been easy with you, but I won't be any more."

He warned the theater owners that strict watch will be maintained upon their places and that the owners will be held liable if ticket choppers permit children under sixteen years to enter the theaters without parents or guardians.

PARAMOUNT ROAD MAN DIES.

Mr. Davidson, traveling salesman for W. L. Sherry Feature Film, handling Paramount in New York state, was taken seriously ill while in Amsterdam and later died in the hospital. Mr. Davidson was working this territory only a short while for the above concern but during that time he made many friends, who will mourn his loss. It is reported that Mr. Davidson was smashing all records on business turned in to his exchange for the number of days he was working before being taken to the hospital.

CHOSEN MIDSTATE ITEMS.

"The Battle Cry of Peace" is booked for a return engagement of 6 days at Proctor's Griswold (Troy). This feature did a record breaking business when first show in this house and hundreds were turned away.

Mr. J. Saperstein has purchased the Star theater, South Troy, from H. Ryan.

The Beman Park theater is now under the management of H. Hall of Novelty theater, Troy.

The Glen theater managed by W. Rogers has been closed but it is soon to be reopened under different management.

IN NEW JERSEY.

New Houses—Personals—Features.

The Park theater, James J. Lyons' new house at Morristown, will be opened to the public in the first part of December. The work of construction is rapidly drawing to a close.

Weekly moving picture shows will hereafter be given every Friday evening at St. Stephen's Parish House, Millburn. "The Money Master" was the three parts feature last week.

The annual exhibit of the famous Wallace Hunting pictures was held last Wednesday at the Rialto Opera House, Plainfield, N. J.

"Honesty is the best policy." This maxim is again demonstrated in the case of Leopold Golden, of 11 Clayton street, an usher in the Strand theater, Newark. About a month ago, the usher picked up a bag of jewels valued at $600 which were last by Mrs. John West, of Cranford, N. J., the wife of a well-known broker, with offices in New York. Besides receiving a substantial reward, Golden has been offered a position with the brokerage concern at a remunerative salary.

Fighting Blue Laws

Jersey City Moving Picture Interests Association Begins Fight Against Obsolete Regulations on Sabbath Observance—Insist on the Laws Being Equally and Completely Enforced—Hale Many to Court.

By Jacob J. Kalter, Newark Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

JERSEY CITY, N. J.—The Moving Picture Interests' Association, through its counsel, Frederick C. Henn, conducted a vigorous campaign Sunday against those, whom they alleged, were guilty of breaking the almost obsolete "New Jersey blue laws."

To show the law's absurdities they have taken steps to summon to court a dry goods merchant for selling goods on Sunday, a constable for throwing dice for cigars, 10 conductors and motormen for operating trolley cars, 200 storekeepers for opening their places of business on Sunday and even a chauffeur for operating an automobile. The proprietors of the moving picture theaters are of the opinion that the city authorities showed discrimination when they ordered the closing of their establishments.

Moving picture men, however, are quite hopeful now that State Senator Charles M. Eagan has come out for a more liberal Sunday. Senator Eagan announced that he would introduce a bill in the next session of the legislature legalizing Sunday picture shows. Although encouraged, the Jersey City film men will not discontinue their vigorous campaign until they have succeeded in their efforts.

ADDITIONS TO MUTUAL STAFF.

Frank L. Doyle, a well-known moving picture man of Hudson county, has joined the Mutual exchange, in Newark, as roadman covering the northeastern section of New Jersey. Mr. Doyle was formerly manager of the Columbia theater, Jersey City, and of the Majestic and Hippodrome, Bayonne.

Another addition to the Mutual road force is Louis Lyons, formerly manager of the Lodi theater, Lodi, N. J., and later connected with the Pathe exchange.

Ned Contrell, formerly with the United Film company, is also a new man employed by the Mutual forces. The new quarters of the Mutual, at 25 Branford place, have been fitted up with all the latest equipment essential to the running of a modern film exchange. Lynn S. Card is the resident manager in charge.

SINGER'S NEW EXCHANGE.

Leo Singer, formerly manager of the Special Feature Film, which represented Pathe in New Jersey, has organized the Royal Feature Film company, at 288 Market street. Mr. Singer will book Griffith's productions and the films of the Life Photo Film corporation. The new quarters have been thoroughly renovated.

NEW PLAYHOUSE AT RAMSEY.

Vincent Trainor is erecting a moving picture theater at Ramsey, N. J. The house will accommodate 400. The structure is now in course of construction, and will soon be opened to the public.

SUIT OVER NAME.

The Paramount Pictures corporation, of New York, has applied to the Court of Chancery at Trenton for an injunction restraining the Chelsea Securities and Investment Company and Siegfried Leschziner from using the name Paramount as a title for the moving picture theater at Broad and Hill streets, Newark.

The film corporation contends that insomuch as Paramount pictures have been discontinued since October 2, the term Paramount theater is a misnomer. When the representative of the Moving Picture World called at Mr. Leschziner's office, he was told by the exhibitor's secretary that Mr. Leschziner felt justified in retaining the name Paramount, as the name of the theater has nothing to do with the name of the producing company. The outcome of the case is awaited with interest by Jersey exhibitors, as it will set a precedent for the future.

NEW PERFECTION EXCHANGE.

The Perfection Motion Picture and Entertainment company has been organized with offices in the Strand theater building. Homer D. Smith, formerly with the Supreme Features, is the manager of the new exchange, while Henry Herdegen will manage the office. The newly-formed company will book special features exclusively.

CITY THEATER OPENED.

The new City theater, at Seventh and Orange streets, Newark, was opened Wednesday evening, December 8, under auspicious circumstances. The house, which seats 1,600, is completely equipped in every particular. Edward W. McDonough, the owner of the new house, will act as manager. Triangle and Keystone pictures together with the latest feature films will furnish entertainment to the patrons. The house is one of the largest in the state devoted exclusively to motion pictures.

NEW HOUSE IN JERSEY CITY.

The large new building now in course of construction at Ocean and Clairmont avenues, Jersey City, will, at its completion, be occupied as a moving picture theater. The new amusement place is owned by John F. Mooney and William Higgins, both of Jersey City.

JOHN ALLEN MAKES CHANGE.

John Allen, who managed the Broadway theater, Bayonne, has left that place, and will assume like duties at the New Empire theater, Bloomfield.

PARK THEATER DEDICATED.

The new Park theater, owned by former Assemblyman James J. Lyons, was opened to the public last Tuesday evening. The structure is designed in accordance with the Italian Renaissance, and Hyman Rosenohn, of Newark, drew the plans for the artistic amusement place. The seating capacity of the house is about 1,400.

LOEW'S BIG BENEFIT.

For the benefit of the National Polish Alliance, the sum of $240 was realized last Sunday. Rumor was current about Newark that the so-called benefit performances were "fake," and that the proceeds went to the managers. When asked about this, Eugene Meyers, resident manager of Loew's theater, made the following statement to the World correspondent: "It is absurd to make such irrational statements. There is absolutely no foundation for the circulation of such reports."

Palace Shows Triangle Plays.

The U. S. Palace theater, 504 Main street, Orange, will show Triangle plays twice a week. The prices will remain the same as at other performances.

Andover's New Picture House.

Leslie L. Van Syckle is making arrangements to start a moving picture place in Centennial Hall, Andover. It is expected that the house will be ready for occupancy about January 1.

Facing Censorship

Exchangemen's Association, Newly Formed in the Capital, Holds Meeting to Discuss Censors—Philadelphia Man's Tale Gives Shivers—Organization Advocated to Combat the Movement.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—At a meeting of the National Exchangemen's Association, held in the offices of the Pathe exchange, where the members were last week the guests of its manager, Herbert M. Osborn, a delightful evening was spent listening to the beautiful prospects offered by censorship as observed by Mr. Hebrew, manager of the Philadelphia office of the V-L-S-E. The remarks of Mr. Hebrew sounded like sections of a fairy tale, none of those present having previously realized just what censorship means, although some of the difficulties of the Pennsylvania exhibitors and exchange men had become known here. His talk, however, led the members to pledge their aid and assistance to any of the exhibitors in this territory who may face similar difficulties.

J. Howard Bennett, Maryland vice-president of the National League, who was also present at the meeting, told of the efforts being made by the exhibitors of Baltimore to get together on a strong footing so as to be enabled to squarely face some of the troubles which now beset them. Mr. Bennett told of the efforts being made there to bring about state censorship of motion pictures. Here again the exchange managers pledged their co-operation to aid the exhibitors.

It has been intimated that the entire censorship agitation in Baltimore has emanated from one source—a man who is at present an exhibitor in that city. It is generally believed that if this be true, and there is little doubt but that it is, the efforts of this exhibitor are not founded upon a desire to conserve the public morals, but perhaps more from a desire for personal gain. It is decidedly deplorable that there should be such a break in the ranks at this time.

Mr. Hebrew, in commenting upon the good work already accomplished by this new organization, urged that its membership be extended to take in all of those exhibitors of the territory whose desire it is to secure a betterment of conditions in the motion picture business, that a strong front may be had in facing its many problems. This suggestion was well received and further discussion will be had in the matter at a forthcoming meeting.

CENSORS IN GREENSBORO, N. C.

GREENSBORO, N. C.—Prof. W. C. A. Hammel, of the Normal College faculty; Dr. J. L. Mann, superintendent of the city schools, and Prof. T. R. Foust, county superintendent of education, have been appointed as an investigating committee by the city authorities of Greensboro, N. C., to visit the local theaters and to report to the city commissioners if any films or vaudeville performances are being given of a type that will tend to corrupt the public morals. These special officers are to serve without remuneration and they will in no wise be "censors." They will merely visit the various exhibitions of films, dramatics, etc., and report to the city authorities. A number of complaints have been filed by respected citizens that the performances in question savor of vulgarity; that they do not constitute musical comedies, but that they are an exposition of "form" with musical and comedy parts merely as an excuse for the display of figures in tights and stockings.

In explaining the stand taken by the city commissioners, Mayor Murphy stated that the performances given at the three theaters giving daily performances, particularly the one presenting the musical comedies and at present the principal subject of the controversy, should be censored very severely, and that every line or gesture that might be construed as being suggestive should be eliminated, as a large number of women and children attend the performances and the latter are very susceptible to suggestion.

AN INTERESTING CONTEST.

Great interest is being shown in the Ashville, N. C., Galax and Princess theaters' profit-sharing contest which started on Nov. 24 and will continue for twenty-five days. This is in reality a voting contest. Contestants are allowed to sell orders on the two theaters. What seems to interest all of those entering into this contest is the fact that they cannot possibly lose, for while the capital prize is a Maxwell touring car valued at $750, three prizes of $40, three of $20 and three more of $10, those who fail to obtain one of these will be given a present amounting to 10 per cent. of the value of the orders that they may have sold during the life of the contest. To make it more interesting the management of the theaters have decided to offer no free votes as a bonus, a scheme usually adopted to swell the number of votes and keeping the excitement at a high pitch, and each week a less number of votes are to be given to the contestants for their personal work so that those who entered early will be hard to beat. Votes are given at the rate of one for each 10-cent admission ticket. This assures purchasers of not only seeing the show at the regular price of admission, but also of helping a friend. The commutation tickets are good at either house and a special number of votes will be given to each contestant making a sale of these. It is these votes that will decrease in number as the contest waxes warm.

The manner in which this contest is being operated brings it outside the pale of a lottery, which would be subject to the censorship of the post-office department. The giving of the 10-per cent. on each sale of a commutation ticket places it on a commercial plane, it is believed, rather than making it a so-called gift enterprise on which the law frowns.

CITY SETS LIMIT TO ADMISSION PRICE.

West Point, Georgia, Says Exhibitor Must Not Ask More Than Ten Cents.

By A. N. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WEST POINT, GA.—Perhaps one of the most unique incidents of municipal regulation of moving picture interests is that which has been brought to light by W. C. Brandon, Atlanta branch manager of the V-L-S-E, at West Point, Ga.

The city government of that community has fixed by statute the maximum admission which an exhibitor of motion pictures may charge. This maximum is ten cents, and in the event that the exhibitor insists he cannot show a picture for that price, and he can prove to the city authorities that it has such exceptional merit as to warrant him charging more, he is required to pay the city a sum of $50 for the privilege.

It is said the ordinance was introduced because up to within a short time ago there had never been any competition in the city, and the sole exhibitor in the place abused his position by charging the public twenty-five cents for inferior productions.

John and Gus Evans Give Big Benefit Show.

Atlanta, Ga.—All of last Monday's profits of the Vaudette theater were turned over to the Christmas fund for the Atlanta Child's Home. The Vaudette opened its doors at 10:30 a. m.—eight performances being given between then and 10:30 p. m. The ninety lady patrons of the home, ten from each of the nine circles in charge, began last week selling tickets of admission, and great crowds filled the theater all day. With the object of making as much money as possible for the Child's Home, John and Gus Evans, proprietors of the Vaudette, placed on Monday's program, the very best Triangles obtainable—"Double Trouble" and "A Janitor's Wife's Temptation."

"Nation" Film Breaks Record.

"The Birth of a Nation" is playing this week at the Atlanta theater, matinee and evening. The advance sale of admission has broken all records of the Atlanta theater, and capacity business is assured all week.

The Common Towel and Drinking Cup

District of Columbia Commission Forbids Same Cup and Towel for Everybody After February 1, 1916—Will Affect Theaters.

THE attention of the exhibitors and theater managers of Washington is being invited to the new regulations recently adopted by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia governing the common use of drinking cups and towels which are to go into effect on Feb. 1, 1916.

In many of the places of amusement, in addition to the cases containing sanitary drinking mugs for which a charge of one cent each is made, the mugs or cups being contained in a slot machine, there is provided a glass or mug for common use. This latter will be prohibited by the regulation, which provides that "No person shall provide or expose any cup, mug, drinking glass or similar article for use by the public generally in any place under his control, or allow any cup, mug, drinking glass or similar article to be provided, exposed or used there, unless such cup, mug, drinking glass or other article has been thoroughly sterilized since last used."

The regulation prohibiting the common use of towels provides that "No person shall provide or expose any towel or similar article for use by the public generally in any place under his control, or allow any towel or similar article to be provided, exposed or used there, unless such towel has been thoroughly cleansed since last used."

Section 2 of each of these regulations provides that "Any person who violates any of the provisions of this regulation shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $25."

LEO GARNER, NEW MANAGER.

Leo Garner, who has been traveling through Virginia and North Carolina for Sidney B. Lust, owner of the Washington United Film Service, has been recalled to assume the management of the local office. He is to be succeeded on the road by George Powers, a former employee of the company. During his several weeks on the road on this trip Mr. Garner has made a good record.

Refuse Proceeds of Sunday Picture Shows.

Rome, Ga.—The Woman's Club of Rome and the local branch of the Salvation Army have refused to accept the proceeds from Sunday motion pictures to be applied to their Christmas fund. They had been named as beneficiaries of a proposed empty stocking fund to be raised by this means when the city commission granted local theaters permission to operate on Sundays. The result of the refusal and the apparent public sentiment against Sunday motion pictures caused the exhibits scheduled for yesterday to be called off.

Sunday Charity Show at Grand.

An enthusiastic group of Atlanta children have organized to alleviate the sufferings of war victims, and gave a moving picture entertainment at the Grand theater Sunday afternoon from 2 to 10 p. m. The pictures shown were "Faithful Unto Death," a four reel drama of the Franco-Prussian war; "Joan of Arc" and a Pathe war special showing actual scenes of the conflict, and also "War Stricken Louvain," an eight reel picture. The entertainment was well patronized.

Tebo Quinerly Visits.

Tebo Quinerly, manager of the Majestic theater in Greenville, S. C., was an Atlanta visitor during the week.

Private Showing of "Peace" Film.

W. C. Brandon, manager of the Atlanta office of the V-L-S-E, gave a private showing of the "Battle Cry of Peace" in the assembly room of the Chamber of Commerce Tuesday to a selected crowd. From reports it is to be one of the really great pictures of the day, and is to be shown next week in Atlanta.

Empty Stocking Fund.

All the theaters in Atlanta will from time to time give benefit performances for the "Empty Stocking Fund," the receipts to go toward seeing that the poor children of Atlanta have a real Christmas time this year.

M. S. MASTBAUM BUYS THEATER. IN PHILADELPHIA.

M. Stanley Mastbaum, well-known moving picture notable in Philadelphia, has recently taken over the Tulpehocken theater from H. M. Reis. This theater is one of the most elegant in the city and has a seating capacity of 900 persons. Hitherto the house has been a failure, but it is expected that under the leadership of Mr. Mastbaum new life will be installed into the theater and that it will begin to play to normal houses.

WILL MANAGE NEW FILM CORP.

C. Lynch, formerly assistant manager of the Electric Theater Supply company, has taken over the management of the New Film Corporation, with headquarters at 1335 Vine street. Mr. Lynch will engage in putting out releases of the World Film Corporation and the Equitable Film company.

Chosen News Items of Interest.

The theater at 5123-25 Germantown avenue has been sold by the Manheim Amusement company to John Courdoff for a nominal consideration, subject to a mortgage of $14,729.33. The property occupies a lot 50 by 201 feet, together with a lot in the rear 15 feet 2 inches by 56 feet, and is assessed at $25,000.

The Frolic theater, 52d street and Wyalusing avenue, has been leased by several Pittsburgh exhibitors, who report accomplishing a favorable volume of business to date. This theater was idle for some time and the new managers are to be complimented on their creditable showing.

Court Reviews Pictures

Philadelphia Court of Common Pleas Decides That Film Companies Have the Right to Demand Review of Pictures by Courts as Appeal from the Decisions of the Censor Board—Case One That Has Excited Interest.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—The fact that leading film companies are refusing to take the decision of the State Board of Censors as being final was again demonstrated when an exhibition of a disputed film was given in Common Pleas Court No. 2. Counsel for the Franklin Film company requested that the court view the picture, "Virtue," part of which had been eliminated by the censors, and then give a decision in the case. Attorney General Brown, acting for the Board of Censors, contended that their decision was final and that the court had no power to interfere with said decision unless it was proven that they had made gross abuse of their power in such cases.

Judge Barrett decided that he should witness an exhibition of the photoplay in question and overruled the objections of Attorney General Brown, at the same time inviting Judge-elect Wessel to a seat on the bench.

As the exhibition proceeded it was discovered that the theme of the play lay in life in a girls' seminary and much of the above-mentioned life, including athletic events, was laid bare upon the screen. Judge Barrett remarked that he thought a little too much of a cross country run in which the contestants were clothed in one-piece running suits was shown. Attorney Krauss, acting on behalf of the film company, stated that this was done in order to show a real seminary contest. In answer Judge Barrett declared that he had never been through a seminary, but that he doubted if the public would be benefited by such an exhibition.

After the picture was shown counsel repaired to the office of Attorney General Brown, where an agreement on the scenes to be eliminated was reached without the aid of the court. Several scenes were withdrawn from the film, but the moving picture interests are well pleased with the outcome of the case and are more determined than ever to contest any discriminations shown by the Board of Censors.

BIG TRENTON DEAL.

TRENTON, N. J.—A deal was recently closed which will make moving picture history in the amusement field in Doylestown, Pa. Messrs. Bowlby & Powers, proprietors of the Princess theater, have purchased large holdings in the Strand Theater company, of Trenton, Lambertville and Doylestown, and will assume active management of the Strand theater in the near future.

The Princess theater has been closed and every franchise held by the Princess has been transferred to the Strand. Elmer Atkinson, the present manager of the Strand, has been transferred to the new Strand theater, now under course of construction in Trenton, N. J. While there are other moving picture theaters in Doylestown, the Princess and the Strand represent the highest class houses and now that the two have been combined a most satisfactory patronage should be the result.

SETTLEMENT WITH UNION.

TRENTON, N. J.—At a meeting held in the offices of the Trenton Exhibitors' Supply company, on East Hanover street, moving picture exhibitors and machine operators reached a friendly settlement of the differences which have existed between them during the past several weeks, and on account of which the operators recently went on a strike.

The meeting was attended by a number of managers, operators and unionists, including C. Howard Severs, organizer of the American Federation of Labor; Messrs. Hildinger, Blaustein, Levy and Robinson, exhibitors, and Clark D. Vaughn, Harvey Manners, J. Norris Dakch, Frank Krueger, William Sison and Thomas Wheatley, of the union.

The settlement concerns those theaters which did not sign the contract drawn up between the operators and exhibitors, the terms of which were mentioned in last week's MOVING PICTURE WORLD, including the Star, Garden, Princess, Park, Wilbur, Palace, Centre Street, Majestic, Crescent and Royal theaters. A most satisfactory agreement has been reached and the dissatisfied operators have already returned to their posts.

EXHIBITOR MULHERN UPHELD.

Court Says Inspectors Must Ask for Censor Certificate.

PHILADELPHIA. — Judge Sulzberger rendered a new interpretation of the laws concerning moving pictures when he remitted a fine of $25 and costs imposed upon James Mulhern, manager of the Fifty-second Street theater, for interfering with Frank P. Brennan, an inspector of the State Board of Censors.

On Oct. 23 past Mr. Mulhern refused to allow Brennan to enter the moving picture booth to inspect the "approval seals" on the films being projected upon the screen. There is an order of the fire marshal that only licensed operators are allowed in the booth while the machine is in operation.

Judge Sulzberger brought to light a clause in the act providing for a certificate of censorship, but this seemed to have been lost sight of by all of the attorneys in the case. The law provides that it is the certificate issued by the board which must be shown to the inspector and not so much the approval seal. The inspector had not demanded to see this certificate and Judge Sulzberger held that he could not unrestrictedly enter the machine booth of a theater for the inspection of films, but must call for the written certificate of censorship issued to the producer of the film.

H. SCHWALBE SECURES LOCAL TRIANGLE RIGHTS.

Quarter of a Million Said to Have Been Paid—How Pictures are Shown.

H. Schwalbe, of the Electric Theater Supply company, has contracted for one year for the exclusive right for the showing of productions of the Triangle Film Corporation in Philadelphia. The contract involved the sum of one-quarter of a million dollars, a large first payment having been made with the balance being payable monthly. Mr. Schwalbe has already closed many contracts with local exhibitors proving the advantage to be secured by the one-day booking system over the former method embracing three or four days.

The first run has been removed from the Chestnut Strect opera house, where it proved to be more or less of a failure, to the Arcadia theater, Philadelphia's newest and most beautiful photoplay theater. One instance of the freedom allowed by the Schwalbe system can be seen in the fact that the management of the Somerset theater has thrown over the old three-day plan and is now booking for one-day only under Mr. Schwalbe. Exhibitors throughout the city are remarking on the favorable results obtained from the use of Triangle films and several large houses are about to adopt the system already employed at the Great Northern and Belmont theaters.

Won't Try Bullock

Justice of Peace Schwartz in Cleveland, Ohio, Refuses to Act Further in Celebrated Case of State Censors Against Defiant Picture Exhibitor Who Criticised Them on Screen—Bullock Still Defiant.

By J. D. Raridan, Ohio Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CLEVELAND, O.—Justice of the Peace Schwartz has refused to act further in the effort of the Ohio Board of Motion Picture Censors to make Samuel Bullock, Lorain avenue theater proprietor, suffer for his defiance of their mandates. Trial of the charge of having violated the censorship law by displaying slides criticising censorship as it exists in Ohio resulted in a disagreement of the jury before Justice Schwartz. Now the censors want Schwartz to revive the case and hale Bullock before him.

Justice Schwartz recently announced that the case was ended as far as he is concerned and that if Bullock is tried again, it will be before some other magistrate.

Bullock is still after the official goat of the censors. One of the members of the board is a woman.

ARREST ON SUNDAY CHARGE.

Victim Circulating a Petition Against the Unpopular Law.

East Cleveland, O.—Arnold Goodman, proprietor of the new Windermere theater, Euclid and Lake Front avenues, East Cleveland, arrested last Sunday for violating the East Cleveland ordinance forbidding Sunday amusements for profit, is backing a petition fight against the regulation.

Goodman is circulating petitions in East Cleveland, demanding that the council of that city repeal the ordinance. It is predicted that the regulation will either be repealed or will become a dead letter with the advent of a new administration January 1. Public sentiment is declared to be overwhelmingly against the enforcement of the measure.

Goodman's theater, called the Windermere, has been open a week. It seats 1,000 and is declared to be one of the best equipped motion picture houses in Ohio.

PATRONS WILL DECIDE POLICY.

Adolph Mahrer, owner of the Milo theater, which opened December 4, will let his patrons decide his policy. The new theater with 1,000 seats will draw from a big residence section around East 100th street and Miles avenue. It is in the center of a fast growing section of Cleveland.

"I expect to give the public the best there is to be had in the film business," Mahrer says. "The house is to be first class in every particular at all times, but of course the demands of its patrons will be consulted in some matters."

SAVOY OPENS.

The Savoy, opened at East 103rd street and St. Clair avenue last Saturday, has been drawing big crowds all the week. Herman Garfield is proprietor of the new house which has 900 seats.

GETS TRIANGLE FRANCHISE.

The Cleveland franchise for Triangle plays has been granted to Emmanuel Mandelbaum and Triangle films will be seen in many Cleveland photoplay houses in 1916. H. J. Bayley, until recently manager of the Alhambra theater, is booking Triangle films for Mr. Mandelbaum.

First run on the Triangle has been secured by the Metropolitan theater. The contract with this house stipulates that Triangle plays shall not be shown in any other Cleveland theater within thirty days of their exhibition at the Metropolitan. Two downtown playhouses have been negotiating for second run of the pictures.

LOUISVILLE NEWS LETTER.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Colonel Al. Boulier Dies.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—The first week in December saw the passing of Col. Al. Boulier, 74 years old, one of the pioneer theatrical men of the district. Colonel Boulier for many years was manager of the old Masonic Temple theater, at Fourth and Jefferson streets, and was later manager of the new Gayety, which was conducted at various times as a burlesque and moving picture theater. During his many years as a theatrical manager he made hundreds of friends among the theatrical stars and companies visiting Louisville, and was a close friend to the late Col. John T. Macauley, who died less than a month ago. Colonel Boulier was one of the three surviving charter members of the local lodge of Elks, which was founded in 1877.

Dorsey Oriental Pictures Sold.

Probably one of the greatest film bargains ever purchased in Louisville consisted of twelve reels of film which were sold at the Courthouse door last week to satisfy an attachment against the films by a local concern which supplied machines and equipment while the pictures were shown at the Jefferson County Armory a few weeks ago. These twelve reels represented the Dorsey oriental pictures.

Ambitious New Film Company.

At Paris, Ky., Mrs. Laura Estill Francis, of Escondida, in the same county, announces that she has been chosen vice-president of the World Peace Film company, of Washington, D. C., a concern capitalized at $100,000. This concern proposes to secure a lease on a tract of land in the Blue Grass district of Kentucky with the intention of producing a serial film of the Bible in thirty-five installments. It is understood that the Cuningham farm on which Mrs. Francis resides, near Escondida, has been selected as a basis for operations, and that a small army of principals and supernumeraries will be brought to that point.

Good Advertising Stunt.

J. Johnson Mussellman, manager of the Star theater, of Louisville, recently employed a unique device in attracting attention from the crowds on Fourth street. A nine-foot figure of Charles Chaplin was placed in the lobby of the theater. One of the well known telephone and megaphone attachments was arranged so that the megaphone was hidden behind the figure, and a man was placed in Mr. Mussellman's office behind a screen. The operator could see the crowd on the street, but could not be seen. He spent his time in "kidding" the crowd, invited the people to come into the theater, and called some people down for jostling. The idea proved a good business getter.

Casino Gets First Run Associated.

Judge W. A. Kinney, of the Orpheum and Casino theaters, Louisville, has closed a contract whereby the new Associated program will be shown in the Casino, of Louisville, as first run. This service consists largely of western comedies and society dramas.

Edward Purnett Makes Headway.

Edward Purnett, of the Green Dragon theater, Shelbyville, Ky., was recently in Louisville, where he stated that he was now making nice headway with the new theater.

Louis Baum Visits.

Louis Baum, of the General Film, was a visitor in the city during the first week in December and discussed the new Unit program with a number of the local exhibitors.

Edward Clay Union Business Agent.

Announcement has been made to the effect that Edward Clay, who for five years was business agent for the local operators' union, will resume that position on January 1. Mr. Clay resigned a few weeks ago and Robert Hewlett has been holding down the job.

Torch Overflows and Burns Director.

Roy W. Conant, general manager of the Enterprise Film, suffered a badly burned left hand while taking a commercial picture of 1,000 feet in Madison, Ind., recently. A torch used for taking an interior fire scene overflowed, and the burning oil ran over his hand. The injury was not serious, however. The picture will be shown at the Crystal theater.

Irving Cummings in Louisville.

Irving Cummings, who played Arthur Stanley, the hero in "The Diamond from the Sky," was recently in Louisville where he appeared in person on the stages at the Novelty and Walnut theaters at various performances on Tuesday and Wednesday, December 8 and 9. Mr. Cummings made short talks before appreciative audiences. This is one of the first times that a well known star has appeared in person in the local picture theaters, and the star and the novelty attracted a good deal of attention.

Tickets Reward Best Essay.

Arrangements were made between the New Novelty theater and the Louisville Herald whereby a contest was inaugurated in connection with the showing of the film, "Should a Wife Forgive," at the theater. The Herald advertised that it wanted individual solutions to the problem, "Should a Wife Forgive?" and offered a first prize of 25 tickets to the Novelty, these tickets to be good until used. A second prize of fifteen tickets, six prizes of five tickets, and ten of two tickets were offered. A portion of the proceeds of the engagement were devoted to the Herald's Empty Christmas Stocking Fund.

Triangle Prices Still Lower.

The Walnut Street theater, of Louisville, has again reduced prices on the Triangle program, and from 15, 25 and 50 cents prices have gone to 5, 10 and 15 cents. The lower floor is 10 cents, the mezzanine floor 15 cents, while the balcony or gallery is 5 cents. It is understood that the management of the Walnut theater, which also controls a chain of theaters throughout the city, is making arrangements whereby the Triangle films may be shown at some of the outskirts houses.

William Tapp Back for Holiday.

William Tapp, manager of the Knickerbocker theater, of Eighteenth and Market streets, Louisville, recently returned from Galesburg, Ill., where he visited his mother whom he had not seen in a period of five years.

L. J. Dittmar in New York.

L. J. Dittmar, manager of the Majestic Amusement company, of Louisville, and president of the Kentucky Branch No. 7, Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America, recently left Louisville for a ten-day trip to New York, it being understood that he will close some big pending business matters while in the East.

New Theater in Sardis, Kentucky.

J. M. Wheatley, Jr., of Sardis, Ky., is reported to be making arrangements for the establishment of a new moving picture theater and electric light plant in the city. The electric light plant will furnish current throughout the city and will furnish power and light for the theater. While Sardis has less than 500 people, it has a rich agriculturial district to draw from, and no immediate competition.

Buys New Richmond House.

Charles Triebel, of New Richmond, O., recently purchased for $605 the Pastime theater, of Maysville, Ky., which was sold by the commissioner at the Courthouse door. The sale included the lease, apparatus, furniture and fixtures. The theater has been in the hands of the court for many months. The Knights of Pythias, to whom the building belongs, made an effort to buy the theater in. The new owner of the theater has had previous experience, and will open the house at an early date.

The largest staff of experts in all departments makes the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the one paper in the trade that fully fills the requirements of every reader.

New House at Second and A Streets.

Joseph & Joseph, Louisville architects, have applied to the building department for a permit for the erection of the new moving picture theater at Second and A streets, and it is now certain that the new theater will shortly be in operation. The permit will probably be issued this week and calls for a theater to seat 750 people, to be built at a cost of approximately $15,000 for the building proper, without estimating the cost of heating, lighting or ventilation installations, which will bring the total cost of the house up to about $25,000. An interesting feature of the plans for this theater are that it is the thirty-eighth theater which the architects have built during the past few years, showing that the concern is obtaining a monopoly on this business in Louisville.

Preparedness Film Stirs

In Cincinnati, Manager R. L. Shrader Gives Private Advance Showing of the Big Vitagraph Feature, "The Battle Cry of Peace"—Many Prominent People Present —Stirs Enthusiasm for Preparedness.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CINCINNATI, O.—One of the largest audiences which ever witnessed a private moving picture exhibition in Cincinnati saw an advance presentation of "The Battle Cry of Peace," the big Vitagraph "Blue Ribbon" feature releasd under the V-L-S-E brand, at the Hotel Sinton, on Wednesday afternoon of last week. Manager R. L. Shrader, of the Cincinnati V-L-S-E exchange, issued invitations to several hundred people, selected because of their prominence and their probable interest in the film, and the big auditorium on the ninth floor of the Sinton, which is equipped in such a manner that it can be turned into a complete moving picture theater holding a thousand persons, was well filled.

Besides a number of local and out-of-town exhibitors who were interested, and many of the film exchange men who were Manager Shrader's guests, representatives of the various civic and patriotic societies, of the city government, and the like helped to make up such a gathering as is seldom seen save at an unusually interesting advance exhibition, such as this was. Detachments of sailors and marines, in charge of officers from the local recruiting stations, lent a peculiarly appropriate touch to the exhibition, and Manager Shrader was especially fortunate, moreover, in that the date was that immediately following the publication of President Wilson's message emphasizing the necessity of preparedness "against war," which is the moral of the picture.

The powerful manner in which the pictures drives home this lesson, and its instantaneous response, was evidenced by enthusiastic applause. It has not yet been settled where the picture will be shown in Cincinnati, nor who will have the privilege of the first run, which, it is anticipated, will be for several weeks, and at prices a good deal higher than the ten-cent admission which is the rule in Cincinnati for most features. "The Battle Cry of Peace" has just completed a week's run at the Colonial theater, at Dayton, and there, as elsewhere in the State, met with marked success.

COMBINATION VOTING CONTEST.

A selling campaign conducted by a number of the leading merchants and manufacturers of Cincinnati, in which prizes to the aggregate amount of $8,000 will be given to various organizations and individuals at the end of a voting contest in which votes will be cast represented by purchases of various commodities, is well under way. A number of moving picture houses are participating in the campaign as a means of publicity, each admission ticket being good for votes. Those who have entered the campaign are the Alhambra, the Freeman, the National, the Royal, the Variety, the Fairview, the Norwood, the Imperial and Heuck's.

FIVE-A OPENS ITS STUDIOS.

The new operating quarters of the Five-A studios, in connection with the International Film plant at Dixmyth and Clifton avenues, in Cincinnati, were formally opened on last Saturday afternoon, and many visitors responded to the invitation of Director Rex Weber to look through the plant. It is fully equipped in every way, not only for the finishing of films, but for the rehearsing and production of complete dramas, insofar as indoor work is possible; and this makes practicable more extensive training for the Five-A classes in moving picture acting than has heretofore been possible, as well as giving the best producing facilities in the city.

Anti-Tuberculosis Campaign.

All of the leading houses of Dayton, O., are lending their aid to the Anti-Tuberculosis Society in its educational campaign for the purpose of spreading information as to the sanitary precautions which should be used to avoid contagion. Slides are used by the theaters, for which they make no charge, calling attention to these hygienic matters, and to the necessity of reporting promptly to the health authorities all cases of "the white plague."

Clay Brehm Gets Around.

Manager Clay Brehm, the head of the Cincinnati World Film exchange, has inaugurated a new method of covering his territory and getting in close personal touch with exhibitors and conditions. Last week he made an automobile tour in which he visited the principal towns to which he furnishes World film service, as well as a number of smaller place, and returned delighted with the experience. He was able to make much better time in most cases, he said, as well as being able to go and come without reference to train schedules. Except in severe or inclement weather, he expects to follow this plan frequently in the future.

Some Feature Hits.

A very plain connection between the film dramatization of the novel by E. Phillips Oppenheim, "Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo," and the present European war, gave added interest to the Lasky feature at the Strand the latter half of last week, while Carlyle Blackwell and Theodore Roberts in the principal roles helped in drawing large houses.

"The Cave Man," the Vitagraph production featuring Robert Edeson in his latest film role, was shown for a single day, December 1, at the Alhambra theater, the Fifth-street house securing the film for the one day by reason of an open date.

Governor Willis Guards His Flock

Governor of Ohio Forbids His Party of Prize Corn Raisers to See "The Birth of a Nation" While in Philadelphia.

COMMENT upon the recent incident in Philadelphia, in which "The Birth of a Nation," barred by the Ohio censors, and the Ohio "corn boys" figured, has been widespread and caustic. Gov. Willis of Ohio, accompanying the big party of prize corn-raisers, put an end to the plan of having them see the film, which was on exhibition in Philadelphia at the time the party reached the city, on the ground that the Ohio censors had decided that it should not be shown in Ohio, and that, therefore, it was not proper for Ohioans to see it anywhere.

Five hundred seats had been reserved for the party, and it is reported that a considerable number of the party saw the picture, in spite of the governor's veto, and his attempt to give a sort of extra-territorial effect to the edict of the censors. The ground on which the picture was refused the privilege of exhibition in Ohio, as reported at the time, was that it tended to stir up race prejudice; and the applicability of this ground with reference to a view of the picture by a party of Ohio people outside of Ohio is hardly as clear as might be desired. However, most of the youngsters in the party had to bow to the governor's ukase, and saw a vaudeville performance instead of the picture; and it takes a governor to say that, judging from the average vaudeville show, this was more uplifting, or less demoralizing, than "The Birth of a Nation."

SABBATH LAW IN CHILLICOTHE.

Chillicothe, O., is having its own little private war over the question of the opening of moving picture houses on Sunday, which has been fought out in other of the smaller Ohio cities and towns more or less unsatisfactorily. Clarence Myers, owner of the Majestic theater in that city, has offered himself as the martyr to the cause, in order to test out the legality of the order of the city authorities to close up, and was arrested following his action in keeping the Majestic open on two Sundays in succession. He demanded a jury trial on the question, to which he is entitled, but the trial is awaiting the decision of how the matter shall be handled, under some ancient city ordinance. It is understood that sentiment in Chillicothe is about equally divided on the question.

Fight Cloth Sign Rule

Injunction Secured in Michigan Against Fire Marshal's Enforcement of the Rule Against Cloth Signs—Many Detroit Signs Are Still Up, in Spite of the Order—Fire Chiefs for the Rule.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DETROIT, MICH.—It may be that after all moving picture theaters will not be compelled to remove cloth signs from in front of their amusement places, despite the fact that the crusade against their use is being continued by the state fire marshal's department and the fire chiefs in various cities. A Benton Harbor business man protests against the enforcement of the ruling and is willing to go to the mat with the state department. He has secured an injunction against the state fire marshal from enforcing the ruling until such time as the case can be tried in the Berrien County Circuit Court.

According to Sam Robinson, assistant fire marshal, Detroit is the worst offender on the cloth sign proposition. Three hundred were found some weeks ago in that city and orders issued to have them down by December 1st. Many are still up, however. "This is the first year we have been able to go after cloth signs," said Robinson. "The law formerly barred them, but did not place any penalty. The 1915 legislature added this, and now we are trying our best to rid the state of them. The fire chiefs of the various cities are taking an interest in the work, as they are really responsible for the law. They say that in addition to being a menace and a fire hazard in themselves, the signs obscure the view of the building and where they cover the entire building, as they do in many cases, a fire may burn for several hours before it is noted on the outside."

WILL MANAGE NEW STRATFORD.

E. V. McGrath, who has been manager of the Maxine theater, Mack and Baldwin avenues, Detroit, since it opened more than a year ago, has resigned to assume the direct management of the new Stratford theater, Dix and Ferdinand avenues, which is now in course of construction and which will be completed the latter part of January.

Mr. McGrath came to Detroit from Cincinnati and has spent a lifetime in the amusement business. Until the Stratford is ready he will assist in supervising the construction, buying the equipment and seeing that the equipment is properly installed. It will be the policy of Mr. McGrath to give the patrons of the Stratford big features only, and to quote his own words, "No feature will be too big for the Stratford. We will play second run wherever we can get it."

The Stratford will seat about 1,200 people. It is 60 by 139 feet in size, steel frame, reinforced concrete floors and roof. The exterior is of terra cotta and brick, trimmed with terra cotta in recessed panels. The entrance doors and box office will be of mahogany, the base being of marble. A marquise will project over the sidewalk covering the entire entrance, which will be ornamented with concealed lights.

Ample space for poster advertising is provided by stationary frames in mahogany set in flush panels on both street fronts. The cost of the building and equipment is more than $75,000. The main floor seats 950 persons with 36 in the proscenium boxes and 115 on the mezzanine floor.

Convenient rest rooms are provided on both sides of the foyer. The ladies' room will have ample space to accommodate baby carriages. In the prospectus which the company has issue, it is estimated that the weekly receipts will average $3,360 and that the weekly expenses will be around $500. These figures are based on full capacity. At two-thirds capacity the receipts would be $2,240; at one-half capacity the weekly receipts would be $1,680 and at one-third capacity the weekly receipts would be $1,120. Even at one-third capacity, on the basis of a capitalization of $75,000 the stockholders would receive 45 per cent. on their investment. Fred A. Schneider is president, and William H. Steffes is secretary.

NEW POLICY AT ATHENAEUM.

Jackson, Mich.—Dates of all shows which were billed to appear at the Athenaeum, Jackson, Mich., between now and January 1st have been cancelled and that playhouse, the largest in the city, will be remodeled and converted in a photoplay house, to be known as The Majestic. H. J. Porter and George Howson, former managers, will sever their relations and the new lessees will be William F. Phillips, Wirt S. McLaren and Charles Ulrickson, who will comprise the Majestic company. No expense is to be spared in making the theater one of the finest in Michigan and to this end at least $20,000 will be spent in making improvements.

The management of the Majestic will be in the hands of Mr. McLaren, present manager of the Colonial theater, located on the east side. This will also come under the direct supervision of the Majestic Company. Mr. Phillips is a business man of Niles, Mich., while Mr. Ulrickson was instrumental in promoting the Colonial theater. The improvements include the installation of a large pipe organ, new stage, new lobby and new equipment. There will also be a new front. The projection booth will be moved into the rear aisle of the parquet. The music will be furnished by an orchestra, in addition to the pipe organ. Efforts are now being made to secure the exclusive first rights of Triangle pictures. Prices at the Majestic will be 10 and 15 cents, with a few at 25.

ART BLANKMEYER VISITS US.

Art Blankmeyer, proprietor of the Grand Circus theater, 301 Woodward avenue, called at the World office this week prior to his leaving for New York. He has appointed Fred La Vound as house manager and Harry Raber, assistant manager.

Many in Detroit Want Local Censorship

Several of the City Newspapers Co-operate with Vigilance Committee to Organize Board to Watch Theatrical Amusements.

DETROIT, MICH.—Co-operation of several of the newspapers of Detroit in support of the vigilance committee's program for cleaning up the theaters of the city was pledged at a meeting of newspaper representatives and member of the committee Wednesday afternoon, Dec. 8, at the Detroit Board of Commerce. The program includes plans for the organization of an efficient board of censorship of wide scope to watch first performances at all theaters and to pass on films of all the motion picture houses. No provisions for a censorship board were made in the city's budget for 1915, but the committee hopes to bring pressure to bear to secure an appropriation for next year. It is not proposed to take authority from the police department, but to secure action by the department through public sentiment.

As the writer intimated sometime ago, some of the publicity seekers of Detroit are doing everything in their power to bring about the censorship of moving picture films. The motion picture exhibitors of Michigan, who value their enterprises, are making a big mistake by sitting still and not getting together so as to be prepared when this great subject comes to an issue. Quite a number of leading Detroit exhibitors fully agree with what John H. Kunsky said—to have a city or state law passed eliminating such film that is not approved by the National Board of Censorship. In other words, to assure the public and public officials that the exhibitors, as a class, do not favor showing of objectionable film and that they are willing to abide by the judgment of the National Board, which certainly comprises intellectual men and women of unbiased judgments.

STARTS EQUIPMENT COMPANY.

Ray Branch, formerly assistant manager of the Detroit Universal Film Co., and who for a few months past has been representative for the Detroit Kriterion Film Co., has resigned to engage in business for himself. He has organized a company to be known as the Enterprise Theater Equipment Co., with offices at 409-410 Peter Smith building, Detroit. Mr. Branch has already secured the state agency for the Motiograph machine and has a number of other agencies pending.

As the name implies, the company will handle every thing in the way of theater equipment. Mr. Branch says he is going into the business on a big scale and that he will give Michigan exhibitors service such as they have never had before. He is a former electrician and operator himself, and with his experience in the exchange departments, has a pretty complete knowledge of what a theater should have in the way of equipment. He will have an emergency department which will be able to take care of troubles on very short notice; there will be an inspection department, the purpose of which will be to inspect theater equipment regularly; there will also be a repair department. Ray has many good friends in Detroit and Michigan and the news of his new venture will surely meet with general approval. The World wishes him every success.

NEW MANAGER OF THE MAXINE.

Frank C. Glick has been appointed manager of the Maxine theater to succeed E. V. McGrath. Mr. Glick was formerly assistant manager and prior to coming to Detroit was connected with the Stair & Havlin circuit of theaters.

DUPLEX THEATER OPENS.

The Duplex theater, Woodward avenue and the Grand Boulevard, Detroit, which opened December 15, will show first run Pathe Gold Rooster films. Earl N. Hennessy is manager of this theater. He was formerly with the Fine Arts.

LEASES CRYSTAL AT STURGIS.

R. J. Crosbie is now the sole lessee of the Crystal theater at Sturgis, Mich. He came to Sturgis in 1910 and started motion pictures in a church building. Then he took hold of the Crystal and put it on a paying basis, afterwards selling to Messrs. Landis and Yeagia, which was later taken over by Wait Bros. Mr. Crosbie has again taken over the lease. He started Dec. 6.

ILLINOIS NEWS LETTER.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Illinois Charters.

THE Arthur Lowy Company, Chicago, $2,500 capital, to conduct a theater business. The incorporators are John F. O'Connell, Alfred Livingston and John E. Crahen.

Secretary of State Stevenson at Springfield has issued charters as follows: The International Film Syndicate of Chicago, stock at $350,000, incorporators, George S. Pines, Richard R. Klein, Edward R. Newman; and the Lombard Amusement Company of Lombard, which was incorporated by Edward F. Bradley, Henry C. Schumacher and William Hammerschmedt, and which has $8,000 capital stock.

Some Chosen Items of Interest.

A fire-bug with a particular grudge against moving picture shows in general is blamed for a blaze that swept the business district of Coal City, Ill. The flames were discovered in the night in the Park theater, owned by Giacomo & Donna, which was destroyed with a loss of $5,000.

Joachin Wilson, proprietor of the Star theater, at Clinton, Ill., rooms over the theater. An excited man rushed into the show and yelled: "Jesse Wilson's house is half burned down." Confused by the name and thinking the blaze was above, the crowd left hurriedly, but no one was hurt.

Mayor Woodruff, of Peoria, Ill., when approached upon the question of a Sunday "lid" for saloons, intimated such a policy might also mean the closing of the moving picture theaters. A shut-down is not likely.

The pink dramatic section of the Sunday State Journal at Springfield, Ill., carried four extra pages, two of which were used by Manager W. W. Watts, of the Gaiety theater, to mark the introduction of Triangle service. Only half was advertising—the rest was bright Triangle feature news.

Schnepp & Lyon claim the largest mirror screen in Illinois for their new Castle theater at Bloomington. It is 13x17 and weighs two tons.

Changes and Business Notes in Illinois.

George Norwood Gollus succeeds Ellsworth Bros. as manager of the Rich theater, in Maywood. He will use Triangle service. The new manager operates other houses in Chicago and Austin.

Guy Barrett has purchased a half interest in the opera house at Villa Grove from Louis Van Rheeden.

Tedens Bros. have purchased the moving picture theater at Lockport from Kelly & Nelson.

Citizens of Milford are converting a building there into a moving picture theater.

J. C. Miller, proprietor of the Princess theater, at Woodstock, may reopen the other moving picture house on Main street in that city.

Ralph W. Crocker, formerly cashier of the Elgin Courier, has assumed the management of the Star theater, in Elgin, which he recently purchased.

The Plaza theater, at Eighteenth avenue and Seventh street, in Moline, opened with the feature "Doc."

The lease on the Majestic theater, at Kankakee, has been transferred from G. K. Brown to James Cradon and Anthony Nichols, of Chicago Heights.

Charles Atherton has started a moving picture show in the opera house at Lafayette.

The Theater Belvoir opened November 24 at Champaign. Pictures and theatrical attractions will alternate.

F. A. and T. Robinson, of Birmingham, Ala., have leased the Cozy theater at Shelbyville and re-opened it as the Tutweiler theater.

Manager Higgins has been remodeling the Higgins opera house at Cuba and fitting it for use as a moving picture theater.

Citizens of Kilbourne have organized a stock company to operate the A-Muse-U, a moving picture theater.

The Belasco Theater Company of Quincy has increased its capital stock from $1,200 to $10,200.

R. E. Layton of Kankakee has purchased the Grand theater at Mattoon. Ben Uran of Kankakee will be manager.

J. C. Wilson & Sons, who operate a moving picture theater at Astoria, have purchased the Gem theater at Macomb from L. L. Butterfield & Son and will conduct both houses.

C. E. Ensminger of Bolivia has purchased the Joy theater in Pana from S. R. Calvin.

E. Hamilton of Cicero and M. H. Bates of Riverside are managing the new Paragon theater which has been opened in Curtiss street in Downers Grove.

Fred Bach and Swen Ostewig have opened a moving picture show in the Opera House at Lee.

Irving Shuman plans to open his new opera house at Sullivan about January 1.

The Apollo theater has been opened in the city hall at Knoxville. Thanksgiving Day it gave a benefit for a farmer's family which had lost all in a fire.

H. B. Mayers has leased the Barley building in Mt. Sterling and will open a moving picture theater.

Oscar Ulrich, operator, and Miss Lilian Kremer, pianist, have purchased the Crescent theater at Alton from J. H. Work.

Marcus West will erect a moving picture theater, 40x123 feet, at Leltoy.

H. S. Toops, of Clayton, is operating a moving picture show at Baylis.

Manager Brownie Linton is adding 24 feet to the length of the Olympia theater at Tuscola.

The Strand theater, formerly the Grand opera house, in Aurora, opens December 12 with a Triangle program.

John B. Mayes is now manager of the Elite theater on Scherry street, in Galesburg, succeeding Harry W. Edmonson, resigned.

La Grille & Middleton have sold the Grand Photoplay theater at Sterling to George Greenough and I. A. Flynn, of Peoria. The theater will be enlarged to double its capacity.

Scores Lurid Posters

Percival Chubb, President of the Drama League of America, Says Violent Posters Do More Harm to the Picture Business Than Sensational Films.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.—It is the sensational poster that is injuring the moving picture industry, and not the films themselves, according to Percival Chubb, president of the Drama League of America.

"I think it is a violent offense to employ the popular advertising that is used by the moving picture show managers," he said to the Association of Commerce at Grand Rapids, Mich. "Great boards are covered with flaring placards which call attention to the extreme moment of the play—a man murdering another, for instance. The most morally injurious moment of the film is held where it is constantly in the eye. That is the great harm. The picture itself, from which the placard is drawn, shifts by in a moment and is obscured, but the placard creates a single impression that is lasting. This feature of the moving picture show should be done away with."

Among other things he said: "Everything is becoming a matter of pictures and print and the moving picture shows are merely the culmination of this tendency. We are speaking less and reading more. The moving picture should pursue one course, and the spoken drama another.

"There is no reason why films should be cencored any more than any spoken plays. I don't believe there is any more morally objectionable features in the moving pictures than in the spoken drama and if one is to be censored, the other should be.

"Everyone wants the moving picture, the 'quick-lunch' drama. Few care for the spoken drama, because there is not speed enough to it."

FILMS WIN AT THE FULLER.

Kalamazoo, Mich.—The Fuller theater at Kalamazoo which has been "filling in" with moving pictures has revised its policy and will become a moving picture house, but now and then will use a theatrical attraction. George Spaeth, for twelve years treasurer of the Majestic theater in Grand Rapids and later treasurer of the Fuller, has been made manager. The house was closed for two weeks to adapt the interior to the new photoplay policy.

Michigan W. C. T. U. Boosts Films.

The State Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Michigan, through its official publications, is boosting moving pictures, declaring that the theaters keep men out of the saloons.

Orders Their Weekly Bath.

Bay City, Mich.—A resolution requiring that all theaters be scrubbed at least once a week was passed by the Bay City Board of Health. Complaints had been received of unsanitary conditions but no theater was named.

Michigan Changes, Etc.

C. H. McLaurin has sold the Princess theater at Manistique, Mich., to Edward A. Garden and Lawrence Boudoin. The former has led the orchestra for two years.

A syndicate will operate the Knickerbocker theater at Holland, Mich.

A new moving picture and vaudeville theater will be erected in Adrian, Mich. Fred A. Acker, banker; George Ballenberger, market owner; Vern Hornley, fence manufacturer, and A. J. and J. J. Walper are interested in the project.

The Lyric theater at Fremont, Mich., owned by Pratt & Terry, was gutted by fire with a loss of $25,000. It used pictures and vaudeville.

J. W. Edminster of Hastings, Mich., has purchased the moving picture theater at Curtis, Mich., from Manager Fitzer.

Michigan Brevities.

When "Inspiration" was shown at the Idlehour theater in Grand Rapids, Mich., especial invitations were extended to the art classes of the high school.

The Gem theater at Hartford, Mich., has started "The Broken Coin." Manager John Conners of this house has a date line for his house run beneath the Chaplin cartoons supplied a local paper by a syndicate.

The Eagle theater at Olivet, Mich., has added Saturday matinees.

The Majestic Gardens at Grand Rapids, Mich., has taken on the Triangle service.

The Orpheum theater at Benton Harbor, Mich., had the naval reserves in full dress uniform as its guest to see "Neal of the Navy."

Father Henry J. Maus of St. Andrews Catholic church in Saginaw, Mich., has installed a moving picture machine in the church auditorium.

Whitcomb & Hafey have been increasing the capacity of their house at Lakeview, Mich., to 250.

INDIANA NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

The Lyceum to Reopen.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—The Lyceum theater of this city is being redecorated. The Strand Theater company of Chicago is to take possession early in January and operate it as a high class photoplay house. It has been dark for several weeks, pending the outcome of a suit in Federal court in New York, filed by Dickson and Talbott against Anderson & Zeigler, who formerly operated the house.

E. C. Divine, president of the company; E. M. Tracy, secretary, and Ward Johnson, musical director, were in Indianapolis this week making arrangements for the opening of the house. They say four shows will be given daily and the prices will be 10, 15 and 25 in the afternoon and 10, 15, 25 and 35 at night.

Get $40,000 for New Invention.

Evansville, Ind.—Clifford T. Curry, former city judge of Evansville, and Smith Wiltshire, owner of the Annex hotel, Evansville, have sold the patent on an electric controller invented by Michael Burns of Evansville for $40,000. The controller is for use on moving picture machines and it is declared will reduce the user's expense from sixty-five to seventy per cent. Several Evansville houses are using the controller. It is understood a factory for making them is to be built in Indianapolis.

Features in Indianapolis.

One of the most important announcements in the Indianapolis motion picture industry is the one that Edward Sourbier of the Keystone theater has signed a contract with Triangle. This means that all the leading programs come here. The Colonial and the Regent are running Metro, Fox, the V-L-S-E and the Pathe Gold Rooster, and the Isis and Alhambra are running Universal, Paramount and World pictures.

The Keystone will show a five reel photoplay, a two reel Keystone comedy, with music by a six piece orchestra playing scores provided by the Triangle company. Continuous shows will be given. The first will start at 10:30. One complete Keystone comedy will be run every day at noon in order that patrons may see one complete picture in the noon hour. The Keystone seats but 600 people but is on Movie Row and is one of the most prosperous of the small theaters of the city.

Theater at Madison, Ind., Reopens.

Howager's theater, the Little Grand, Madison, Ind., has been remodeled throughout, and was opened December 8. The house is fireproof throughout, with the operating booth lined with sheet metal and asbestos. Two motion picture machines of late design will give continuous service. The house seats 800.

Want to See the "Nation" Film.

The newspapers at Evansville, Ind., are taking up the fight for "The Birth of a Nation," declaring that the film should not be prevented from being shown. The Evansville newswriter says, "For Mayor Bosse to throw one obstacle in the way of permitting citizens of Evansville to see this work of art would be a deplorable blunder."

Got Too Much Heat.

As a result of an overheated furnace, Manager James Chandler of the Palace theater, Peru, Ind., will have to replace his screen, buy a new piano, new seats at the front of the theater, redecorate the walls and revarnish some of the seats nearby.

Manager H. H. Hornbeck of the Majestic, Monticello, Ind., is giving an orchestra night once a week. On these nights is a special musical program.

J. W. Cotter has resigned the management of the Kriterion exchange at 3217 Locust street, and says he will rest before he becomes affiliated with any other concern.

DENVER NEWS LETTER.

By Muriel Lee, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

"Peace" Picture at Fancy Prices.

DENVER, COLO.—"The Battle Cry of Peace" is on in Denver now, and is playing to packed houses at two dollar prices for the best seats. The picture is being shown at the Paris theater, and is being put on in splendid manner. The interior is artistically decorated with American flags, and an orchestra of 18 pieces has been added to the Paris great Wurlitzer Unit Orchestra.

It will be well seen that the picture is being heartily endorsed by Denver people when it is known that a special permit has been secured from Washington to take one of the latest models of field pieces and place it before the Paris. Several of the National Guardsmen were stationed there to answer questions and to give information or verify statements made in the picture. So strong an appeal is the picture making, that every day there are recruits being added.

Harry Lustig Goes to Metro.

Harry Lustig, for three years in the Mutual Exchange office in Denver, has just resigned the managership of it, to take charge of the Metro exchange in Los Angeles. Mr. Lustig leaves Denver Wednesday.

There is no exchange man in Denver who is better known, or more popular than Harry Lustig. He is popular alike with his competitors and with his clients. Before his affiliation with Mutual, Mr. Lustig was in the feature business for himself. When he first went with Mutual he entered in the capacity of assistant manager. A year and a half ago he took over the management, and his exchange has been one of the busiest in town.

Aitken Visits Denver.

H. E. Aitken, president of the Triangle Film Cn., was in Denver for a short time Wednesday, to look over the situation here and to meet a few old friends. He was met at the train by Harry Lustig, manager of the Mutual exchange, and by Wm. T. Binford, traveling man for Metro, who was for many years in Mutual employ. The three men had lunch together, after which they visited the leading picture houses.

John Drum on Vacation.

John Drum, who has been traveling for World out of Denver, and who is a nephew of Webb Drum, and Harry Drum, both connected with World, has gone to Chicago for a vacation. Mr. Drum has made an unusual record since he has been traveling, but his health gave way, and he was forced to take a vacation. He will undoubtedly return in the next few weeks.

G. A. Smith Likes Denver.

G. A. Smith, in charge of Pathe serials, was in town a few days ago, completing arrangements for the Pathe serial to be shown here. Mr. Smith was much impressed with the greatness of the moving picture business in Denver, and considered it one of the strongest moving picture towns in the U. S.

Charles Guilmore Goes to Mexico.

Charles R. Guilmore, manager of the World Film Exchange, has gone on a short business trip down into Mexico. Mr. Morris, one of his traveling men, has taken charge of the office in his absence.

Denver Dancer Seen in Picture.

Of peculiar interest comes the news that Miss Hazel Wallack, well known Denver danseuce, appeared at the Isis theater Friday and Saturday, the 10th and 11th. Miss Wallack's first appearance at the Isis theater was in person, when she danced at the opening of the house.

FUNERAL OF EDNA ROLAND.

NEENAH, WIS.—The funeral of Mrs. Ellis, known in the photoplay world as Edna Roland, was held at Neenah. Mrs. Ellis and her husband were members of the Pike's Peak Photoplay Company at Colorado Springs, Colo. Mrs. Ellis was on her way to the plant to see a private exhibition of a five-reel production in which she recently appeared, and fell dead.

N. J. Blumberg Opens New House.

The Downer theater at Downer avenue and Belleview place, in Milwaukee, Wis., opened December 3. N. J. Blumberg, formerly with Paramount Pictures, is manager of the house, which is controlled by Oscar Brachman. It seats 1,200, has a pipe organ and an orchestra led by Elwyn Owen.

New Policy at the Toy.

The Toy theater in Milwaukee, Wis., has a new price of ten cents and a new policy which includes the booking of the Metro service.

Malicious Rumor Killed.

Somebody in Chippewa Falls, Wis., started one of those damaging rumors that the balcony of the Victor theater was unsafe. The city engineer after a test declared when filled it had only a third of the load it would stand.

Wisconsin Changes.

The Frellson Amusement Company has leased the Unique theater on Main street, in Waukesha, for two years to the Unique Theater Company. It will be managed by Charles C. Frellson. Although the new manager is a brother of George Frellson of the former lessees, there is no connection between the two companies.

Ted Lewis has purchased a half interest in the Pastime theater at Delavan.

Wisconsin Brevities.

The Colonial theater at Waukesha reserved the entire house when "Damaged Goods" was shown at 50 cents down.

The Orpheum at Lancaster gave a whole week with the exception of Tuesday night as a benefit for the Cemetery association.

Films of Mooseheart, the home for Moose children, was shown at the Idea in Fond du Lac under the aupices of the lodge.

"Judge Not" was shown for two days at the New Lyric in Marinette for the benefit of St. Paul's church.

The Idle Hour at Menasha had a special matinee of "Damon and Pythias" for school children.

Lyric Changes Holders

Minneapolis' Leading House Now Leased by A. G. Bainbridge, Jack Elliott and Harry Sherman—Goes Back to Popular Prices for Triangle Film—Interesting Career of "Buzz" Bainbridge.

By Grace E. Polk, Minneapolis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—The past week has brought changes of importance in the line-up of the downtown picture houses. Under the new ownership of A. G. Bainbridge, Jr., Jack Elliott and Harry A. Sherman, the Lyric goes back to popular prices, 10, 15 and 25 cents, but will continue to show Triangle programs.

L. V. Calvert, manager of the New Garrick, has been quick to avail himself of the Paramount service thus left open and has the exclusive contract for Paramount including the News Weekly and the Travelogue, which have been showing in other houses.

The sale of the Lyric by Saxe Brothers to local men is another step in the long history of this show house. The Lyric was the first high-class picture house in the city, but it had had a long and varied career before films were thought of. More than a score of years ago it was then known as the Lyceum, and was the center for lectures and intellectual activities of the city and for visiting companies of high order, Booth and Barrett being among the first to play there. It has housed nearly every stock company that has ever come to Minneapolis. It was at the old Lyceum that the early, pretentious and flickering travelogues were put on. In 1911 it cast its lot permanently with picture houses.

"Buzz" Bainbridge.

The career of the genial "Buzz" Bainbridge, who now becomes half owner in the Lyric contract, is almost as indicative of changes in the theatrical world as is the history of the old playhouse. The live young chap with the graying hair, familiar to nearly every theater goer of Minneapolis, confesses that if he should die tomorrow, he would have had "all the fun there was in it," and there is little that a theatrical manager can do that "Buzz" has not done. He started at eighteen as a "second man." A second man, he describes briefly, as a bill poster, and like the door-handle polisher in Pinafore, he posted the bill so carefulee that the next year he was manager of the companee.

Bainbridge ascribes his sudden rise to ill luck and drink, but both belonged to the other fellow. The first two months out as second man, the manager fell sick (just as in the theatrical fairy tales) and no other being immediately available, "Buzz" stepped into managerial shoes. Then came summer with a circus, then another year of managership, and then the drink. That is, the general manager from New York went on a "grand toot," and young "Buzz," still in his 'teens, stepped into the job of general manager for Carpenter, with some 20 shows on his hands, shows of the old style, melodramas described as "howling," and filling the description.

Makes Stock Company in Week.

Onc day, out of a job down in Chicago, he met Lou Scott. Mr. Scott told him the Metropolitan in St. Paul was dark for six weeks, and the same day Bainbridge was booked to put on a stock company there those same six weeks. He hadn't any stock company; he never had had, but a little thing like that never mattered to him. Inside of a week he had a company headed by Willard Mack (whom he dug out of obscurity) and Maude Leone. The company played the six weeks, then went to Duluth for a year and half, and just when "Buzz" was thinking more seriously than he cared to of breaking up the company there, a phone call from the Scotts brought him to Minneapolis. He put on stock at the Metropolitan for a time, and then got the two Shubert theaters in St. Paul and Minneapolis under way. From June 1910, when the Shubert, in Minneapolis, opened he was manager until a year ago, when he took his own lease on the house.

Bainbridge comes very near now, literally, to "having the only show in town." At the Shubert he is running "The Birth of a Nation," permitted to run after a long fight, which the courts decided against him and which was put up for final action to a censor board of 80. At the Metropolitan Bainbridge has his stock company, and now he is half owner in the Lyric, one of the three biggest downtown houses.

Bainbridge had a chance to go into the pictures ten or twelve years ago when they first started. He didn't take up with the chance, but he never forgot what E. H. McCoy, head of the National Printing Company in Chicago, who offered him the chance, said to him: "The Metropolitan Trust Company of New York City is the biggest corporation in America and they got it at a nickel."

"Buzz" has had plenty of downs in his career as theatrical manager—what manager has not? But he keeps right on smiling. "Only," his friends say, "you can tell the difference, because when things aren't going right, he wrinkles up his nose when he smiles."

Church to Compete With Sabbath Shows

Minister to Give the Best Picture on Sunday Nights in Order to Get Young People Away from Unregenerate Shows.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

MADISON, WIS.—"We deliberately want to compete with the moving picture houses of the city in attractiveness," is a statement attributed to Rev. George E. Hunt, D. D., pastor of Christ Presbyterian Church in Madison.

Dr. Hunt has installed a machine in his church. After praising moving pictures for young people, he said: "The church plant located in the heart of the city can be made an effective instrument for reaching the multitude of young people with higher ideals of life and inculcating religious truths and practices if they can be induced to attend.

"They go to the picture shows Sunday nights in multitudes. They see there cutthroats and pluguglies and silly farces and meaningless tricks and a few worthy lessons. The photoplay producers are steadily improving the quality of the film lesson, and today there are hundreds of noble themes of life well acted before the moving picture camera and inculcating inspiring ideals of conduct and life. And there are many Bible themes already produced and many more will be produced, for there is no literature in the world so dramatic and powerful and so well known and genuinely interesting as the Bible."

UNION STARTS SCHOOL.

The moving picture operators' union at Milwaukee has established a school for members at Room 214, Alhambra building, on Grand avenue. All members of the union will study new devices of interest and value to the operating room. As fast as new appliances appear on the market, makers will be invited to send demonstrators.

The object is to increase the efficiency of the men. Incidentally, it is reported, practically every member of the Milwaukee local has a job.

CENSOR BOARD ORGANIZES.

Minneapolis' new board of censorship, which opened operations by deciding that "The Birth of a Nation" was entitled to a showing in this city, after numerous efforts had been made to prevent it and a supreme court decision had been secured upholding the power of the mayor to stop it, has formally organized with Karl De Laittre as chairman.

TWO NEW THEATRES.

Two new moving picture theaters are being built in Minneapolis. A theater to seat 1,200 persons on one floor is to be erected at once at 1021 East Franklin avenue by C. E. Marr at a cost of $40,000.

E. J. Phelps is building a new theater at 733-37 East Lake street. It will be of brick, tile and reinforced concrete and will cost $27,000.

"Good Fellows" All

Every Kansas City Exhibitor Is Now in the Great Christmas Organization and All Are Boosting the Movement to Bring Some Joy at the Yuletide to Children Who Would Be Forgotten Otherwise.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—A lot of "kids" in this city who would see Christmas only as a day of sorrow, some shivering in rags, some without sufficient food, and all without a visit from the white-whiskered Santa Claus, are going to be made happy this year. And the motion picture exhibitors of Kansas City will be able to set that down as a part of the year's good work. For every exhibitor here is going to be a "Good Fellow" and his show house will be one of the charity's biggest boosters.

The "Good Fellow" movement is an annual attempt of anonymous Kansas Citians to furnish the needy and poverty-stricken with good cheer on Christmas Day. It became an institution along about 1908 and every year thereafter its motor cars, its scouts, its kind-hearted members have carried toys to children, presents to boys and girls and food and clothing to the older persons who otherwise would be without.

Last year ten thousand families were aided and more than that number of children were given toys, candy and fruit.

Everything the "Good Fellows" do is anonymous. The organization has a chief. Not a dozen persons in the city know his name. Last year he had five thousand helpers. Their names were unknown and the only credit they got was the satisfaction and knowledge of having done good on the Christmas Day.

Well, one of the five thousand is a manufacturer of slides here. (It wouldn't be "Good Fellowship" to give his name). He has made, gratuitously, a hundred slides for projection use, calling upon whoever reads to become a "Good Fellow," taking care of a family, donating goods, candy, oranges or money to the cause.

After he made the slides he went around to every picture show in the city and persuaded the exhibitors to throw the appeal on their screens once in the course of every show. They appeared for the first time last week and will continue until the big Christmas giving is over.

And of course the Chief Good Fellow—the man whom nobody knows, but everybody reveres—has ordered that every exhibitor in the city be inscribed as a "Good Fellow."

"PEACE" FILM IN MIDDLE WEST.

Repeated demands for information from Middle Western exhibitors concerning the Vitagraph special, "The Battle Cry of Peace," has elicited the announcement from E. R. Pearson, V-L-S-E representative in Kansas City, that the big feature would open simultaneously in the Willis Wood theater, Kansas City, and Boyd's theater, Omaha, Christmas week. Boyd's theater, managed by W. J. Boyd, formerly was a "legit" house, but will start an exclusive motion picture policy, it is understood, with the Vitagraph picture.

Mr. Pearson has induced the Willis Wood to raise its admission fee to a scale of 25, 50, 75 and $1 for this attraction, the first time prices have gone above 20 cents in the Kansas City house. Boyd's theater, it is expected, will charge the same.

Several weeks ago when Hudson Maxim, the inventor, was in Kansas City to address the annual meeting of the Commercial Club on war preparedness, Mr. Pearson met him and induced him to write a monograph on peace that will be read both in Kansas City and Omaha in the course of the picture. Newspapers in both cities already have shown the necessity for defense and Mr. Pearson expects they will join in boosting the Vitagraph special. Plans now are being made for extensive advertising for its appearance.

DODGE CITY'S NEW THEATER.

Dodge City, Kas., hasn't the largest population of the cities in that state. It's far below several others, but after Dec. 15 it will have a motion picture house that will be exceeded in size and lavishness by only one or two in Kansas. The new house that will open then is the Beeson theater, built at a cost of $50,000 by Merrett L. Beeson, a son of Chalk Beeson, the wealthy cattleman and former plainsman, who was one of the best known pioneer Kansans. The Beeson theater will be devoted largely to features, according to information in the hands of Kansas City exchange men.

A KANSAS SCHOOL CIRCUIT.

A picture circuit of the five big state schools of Kansas is to be established, with a program one night a week at each. Educational pictures are to predominate, but there is to be a varied assortment, including comedies. The state manual training normal has projecting equipment now, and the other schools are to be supplied at once, according to the present plan. A committee composed of officers of the five schools will handle the engagement of films and the booking.

A FORTUNATE THEATER.

The Barrymore theater, at Thirty-ninth and Summit streets, has been enjoying a rapidly increasing business—as is indicated in the announcement of early improvements to be made in the house. Another indication of the growth and the popularity of the house, is that it has secured the first suburban releases of Triangle films; it is already the first suburban on Fox releases on the South Side, the second on Paramount in the city, on the latter showing three weeks after the Royal. It gets Triangles two weeks after the Willis Wood. One of the special services of the Barrymore is its picturizing of the community, especially the children. The company has its own machine and men, and develops the pictures on the place. The screen shows the children of the neighborhoods of the South Side, much to the delight of the small spectators. The theater is operated by R. and C. H. Green.

J. W. Wendel Opens New House.

J. W. Wendel, owner of picture houses at both Holton and Junction City, Kansas, has opened a new house at Clay Center, in the same state.

New Theater for Topeka.

A new motion picture theater will be erected in the business district of Topeka, Kas. A permit for the building was issued last week by the city fire marshal to Abraham Jacobson for the erection of a $10,000 stone and brick structure at 506-8 Kansas avenue. It will be completed about March 1.

New V-L-S-E Lobby Display Boards.

E. R. Pearson, V-L-S-E representative in Kansas City, has a new lobby display board that is being used widely by exhibitors. They do away entirely with the use of lithographed sheets in frame and provide a handsome lobby setting. The boards are made here, of beaver board almost a fourth of an inch thick, and the edges are secured by riveting a fiber mat around the whole. Brass corners, also riveted, prevent broken corners.

The boards are about the size of a one-sheet and are painted a solid color. Then either a sketch made by local artists or pictures of the players are placed on the board. A set for each film contains five boards. Mr. Pearson rents them to exhibitors for $1 for the time the film runs. The manufacture of a single set costs about $23.

The "Star" Starts Film Page.

The Kansas City Star is the last local paper to yield to the moving picture demands of the public, and establish a weekly moving picture page. It has for two weeks now devoted part of an inside page on Thursdays to the industry, using extracts from articles on moving picture productions and stars, chiefly concerning new productions and releases. The page has the advantage of a double column picture of a star or of a scene on each occasion.

Mrs. C. W. Harden Recovering.

Mrs. C. W. Harden, wife of the manager of the Fox Film Corporation at Kansas City, underwent an operation at the Wesley Hospital recently, and the friends of both will be glad to learn that she is recuperating finely.

P. J. Hall Back.

P. J. Hall recently returned from a trip to Chicago; he represents in Kansas City the Central Film Co., of the lake town.

Fred L. Scott New Apollo Manager.

Joseph L. Stiebel, who has been markedly successful in the management of the Apollo theater at 3227 Troost avenue, and Charles H. Rechner have sold their interests in the theater and the property to James W. Oldham, president of the Wellington Mines Co. Mr. Oldham will, it is said, enlarge the house, and make many improvements. Fred L. Scott, formerly owner of the Bancroft theater in Kansas City, will be the manager of the Apollo. Mr. Stiebel had been manager of the Apollo for four years; and he will now take a vacation, probably entering the business later again, in Kansas City.

New Slide Company Manager.

Floyd Deardorff has taken the management of the Best Slide Co. at Kansas City, and reports a good business. Mr. Deardorff has had large experience in this line, having been for years with the Kansas City Slide Co. One of his first acts after taking charge, was to begin the publication of "The Best Booster," a monthly house journal which displays slides, and includes helps for the exhibitor. There are many quaint sayings attributed to "Old Man Best," who is made a character.

Missouri Business Changes.

Joe T. Murray has sold his interest in the Broadmour theater, Kansas City, Mo., to his partner, Mr. Donnici, and it is said will soon open at a new location.

D. A. Baker is remodeling his airdome at Lamar, Mo., and will have it ready before Christmas, making it adaptable for use in the winter as well as summer.

O. C. Switzer has sold his theater at Cowgill, Mo., to F. A. Smith, of Eldora, Iowa.

Mrs. L. L. Cole is now in charge of the Princess theater at Joplin, Mo.

Kansas Business Changes.

The Orpheum theater, at Pittsburg, Kan., built 20 years ago at a cost of $40,000, and sold recently for $20,000, was burned November 24.

F. G. Yates is building a moving picture theater at Augusta, Kan., to cost about $8,000.

F. C. York at Salina, Kan., is building a theater to cost $7,500.

The Lotus theater building at Arkansas City, Kan., has been sold to the Home National Bank.

DALLAS NEWS LETTER.

By S. A. M. Harrison, Dallas Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Nine Houses in San Antonio Consolidation.

The United Film's Dallas office is installing a Rex film renovater, which means good films.

F. P. Leiber Joins World Film.

F. P. Leiber, formerly manager of the Wigwam theater at Muskogee, Okla., and an old-timer in the business, has joined the exchange force as road man for the World Film Dallas office.

S. G. Sladden Back from New York.

S. G, Sladden, of the Fox office in Dallas, has just returned from Beacon, N. Y., being called there by the death of his mother. Mr. Sladden leaves here the first of the year, being at present engaged in the installation of W. M. Byrd in the Dallas office. After that time Mr. Sladden will be general manager of the De Luxe distribution offices. He is at present very much enthused over the magnificent De Luxe picture featuring Annette Kellerman, now being made by the De Luxe studios in the West Indies.

Business Good in Central Texas.

W. L. Lowe, of the Alliance Film Company, has returned from a business trip in Central Texas. He says the Christmas spirit is beginning to manifest itself and business is good.

Spokane Women's Clubs Insist on Good Music

Mrs. Heath Takes Lead in Crusade to Make all Picture Houses Give Normal Musical Interpretation to Picture Scenes.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Members of the City Federation of Women's Clubs, of Spokane, Wash., have practically pledged their support to a campaign against what they term inappropriate music being played at some moving picture shows.

The matter was first taken up with the film censorship committee by Mrs. E. C. Heath in a letter and reports are that the censorship committee is also considering advocating a committee to censor Spokane picture houses. They will also oppose offensive window display advertising.

It is the aim of Mrs. Heath, according to her own statement, to make appropriate moving picture music universal, instead of only in the higher class moving picture houses.

In the discussion it developed that hereafter when the moving picture show piano or organ players executes "Sparklets" or some of the later popular song hits, at a time when the villain, on the screen, is about to plunge a stiletto into the back of the golden-haired heroine, or pumps out the Lohengrin wedding march as the unfaithful husband flirts with the ballet dancer, he or she may have to account to the City Federation of Women's Organizations.

E. H. GOLDSTEIN IN SPOKANE.

E. H. Goldstein, assistant to the general manager of Universal exchanges, from New York City, spent a few days in the city in conference with G. A. Hager, local manager. He discussed exchange matters, the local business and the business of the territory while here. Previous to this he visited exchanges at Denver, Salt Lake and Butte, and will go from here to Seattle and Portland.

THE WEEK'S PROGRAMS.

Exceptional programs were presented to moving picture patrons in Spokane by Spokane exhibitors for the week ended Saturday, December 4. The second week of the Triangle picture at the Liberty theater continued to draw large audiences, the Clemmer presented Mary Pickford in "Madame Butterfly," and the third series of the J. Rufus Wallingford pictures, and the Class A presented Dorothy Gish in "Bred in the Bone." Each of the above run three and four days respectively.

Other programs which drew well in local picture houses were: Charles Chaplin, in a two-part Essanay comedy, at the Hippodrome, "The Woman"; Margarita Fisher in "The Girl from His Town" at the Lyric theater; Betty Nansen in "A Celebrated Scandal," at the Majestic; "Queen of the Counterfeiters" at the Best, and "The Measure of Leon Dubray," with Hobart Henley and Lucila Maxim in the leading roles, at the Rex theater. Manager B. W. Copeland of the Rex theater says that all the Broadway Features are drawing good.

Jesse J. Crawford, organist at the Clemmer, played a special musical program during the engagement of Mary Pickford in "Madame Butterfly."

GAVE THEMSELVES A BENEFIT.

Another episode was enacted at the Empress theater, which has been running a moving picture and vaudeville bill combined, the vaudeville portion being largely made up of local talent. The receipts did not suffice to pay the salaries of the employes, actors and actresses, and as a result the employes and talent took charge of the theater for several days and last Sunday Manager W. J. Drummond of the Mutual exchange donated the film service to aid the employes so they could have the money to eat on.

A. R. PATTON TO TRAVEL FOR MUTUAL OUT OF SPOKANE.

A. R. Patton, for some time booking clerk in the Mutual exchange, Spokane, under W. J. Drummond, has just been appointed traveling representative for this territory for the Mutual.

He has been engaged in the moving picture business in one way or another for the past three years and has been with the Mutual for the past nine months. Previous to this he was manager of the Lyric theater, Spokane.

Mr. Patton is being succeeded by J. F. Churchill as booking clerk.

Manager Ekre Visits San Francisco.

George J. Ekre, local manager of the General Film exchange, is in San Francisco, Cal., attending the convention of the Western Branch Managers' Association of the General Film Co.

Liberty Announces a Griffith Film.

Manager Ralph Ruffner of the Liberty theater announces that William S. Hart will be presented in Griffith's "The Disciple" for a full week, December 8 to 14, inclusive.

The Mission theater at Chency, Wash., was purchased by Glenwood Emory at a price said to be about $1,000. Mr. Emory is remodeling the place and putting in a new front at a cost of about $400. He has now signed for the Mutual service through the Spokane office.

Interesting Policy at an Iowa Family Theater

Asks 10 Cents Admission for One Whole Family, Any Size—Unattended Children Have to Pay 25 Cents.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

DAVENPORT, IOWA.—Admission to a Davenport moving picture show is ten cents a family—no matter how many members. Single admissions for grown-ups is five cents and children unaccompanied are twenty-five cents. This is at Friendly House, in Davenport, where shows each Sunday will be designed for the family.

Friendly House has been placed in the circuit of the Iowa State College and Iowa State Teachers' College Film Service, which supplied educational films through the engineering extension department at the state university at Ames.

The high price for single children is because youngsters alone have a special show for Saturday at one cent admission.

PROJECTORS FOR SCHOOLS.

The Victor Animatograph Company of Davenport, Ia., is reported to have secured a contract to supply 1,100 projectors for use in the schools of that state. A. F. Victor of Davenport is the inventor.

RAGTIME WITH "CARMEN."

The Casino theater at Davenport, Ia., thought it best to have a few "rags" to accompany the Fox "Carmen." It gave notice as follows: "Our organist is not going to play the entire score of the opera. He played it yesterday at rehearsal—but we believe in tuneful, catchy music, so we have eliminated those wonderful or 'horrible' examples of classical music and substituted excerpts from other operas and even injected a few 'rags,' so a good time is in store for everybody."

Hurt by Falling Screen.

Harry D. Breene and Floyd Porch were injured when the screen in the Garden theater at Iowa City became loosened, fell and struck them.

Meets Patrons' Wishes.

Manager Samish of the Temple Grand theater at Creston, Ia., has decided to discontinue Sunday vaudeville in deference to the opponents of Sunday shows who are otherwise friendly and are patrons.

Leland Schmuck and George McPherson of Davenport, Ia., have opened a moving picture show in the opera house at DeWitt.

The theater at Mineola, Ia., owned by L. W. Bichel and Joseph Deitcher, was destroyed by fire. Loss, $10,000. Insurance, $3,500.

The Exposition Closes

World's Greatest Show Passes into History—Extensive Use of Moving Pictures One of Its Distinguishing Features—California Exhibitors Feel That It Cost Them a Prosperous Summer—Some Did Very Well.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SAN FRANCISCO.—The Panama-Pacific International Exposition, which has attracted the attention of the world to San Francisco during the past year, has passed into history and will long be remembered for its completeness, its beauty, its success as an attraction and its success from a financial standpoint. The figures showing the attendance during the closing day have not been compiled but the total for the Exposition since the opening is well above the eighteen and a half million mark. The Exposition was erected without government aid and at its commencement owed over $1,000,000. This sum has been repaid and a surplus of as much more is now on hand.

One of the distinguishing features of the Exposition has been the extensive use of moving pictures. More than fifty theaters were fitted up in the various palaces and here films have been displayed free of charge. In the California building alone 130,000 feet of film were shown, while other states had from 10,000 to 75,000 feet, Pennsylvania ranking next to California in quantity. Moving pictures were shown in thirty buildings on the grounds and more than 750,000 feet of film were available for use.

Most of the exhibitors throughout California are of the opinion that the Exposition has worked a real hardship upon them in that it has attracted so many of their regular patrons. This is especially true in the suburban cities and in the territory reached by a few hours' ride of San Francisco. Local exhibitors in the residence districts have made a similar complaint, but as a rule the downtown houses have done a good business. One leading Market street house has made a gain of thirty per cent. for the year to date, as compared with last year, and others report substantial gains. The phenomenal run of "The Clansman," which extended over a period of thirty weeks, was due largely to the presence of so many visitors.

Railroad officials announce that more than five hundred thousand persons from points east of the Rocky Mountains visited San Francisco this year, with one hundred and fifty thousand from Coast States outside of California. This great influx of visitors offset in a large measure the attractions of the Exposition and the houses featuring big productions have fared well. Now that it is all over exhibitors express the opinion that business will be better than it ever has been before, feeling that people have become accustomed to seek amusement rgularly and to pay good prices for it and that the price of admission to moving picture houses will seem small.

TRIANGLE FILM IS RELEASING FROM SAN FRANCISCO.

Local Exchange Doing Business—Oakland and Sacramento Houses Booked.

After several postponements the Triangle Film corporation is making regular releases out of its San Francisco branch, although the service has not been placed here in a downtown house. The Liberty theater at Sacramento, Cal., conducted by Charles W. Goddard, opened a few days ago with Triangle productions at 20 cents, in place of the customary admission price of 10 cents, and has played to capacity, changing twice a week. Full page announcements were run in the daily papers calling attention to the fact that Trinagle films were being offered. In Oakland the first run has been taken by Pantages theater and a double page announcement was used to call this fact to the attention of theatergoers in the East Bay city. Harry E. Aitken, president of the company, visited Manager C. Mell Simmons last week and has since left for New York by way of Denver.

SUPPLY BUSINESS PICKS UP.

The equipment business, which has been quiet for several months, has picked up materially of late and is again normal. Many exhibitors have delayed placing orders for machines and equipment until the close of the Exposition, hoping to secure second-hand apparatus at low prices. So great a measure of success has been attained by exhibitors at the Exposition from an advertising standpoint that most of them have decided to retain their outfits for further use and it does not seem that more than a dozen machines will be disposed of here. Now that this is apparent many orders for new equipment are being placed with local supply houses.

EXCHANGE OPEN ALL NIGHT.

In order to be prepared for all contingencies the San Francisco office of the William Fox Film is now being kept open both day and night, an innovation in local feature exchanges. The shipping department has grown to such proportions of late that it has been found necessary to place this in charge of a manager and Frank Blaine has been selected to fill the position.

NAT A. MAGNER FILM.

The Nat A. Magner Film has been incorporated with a capital stock of $50,000 by Nat A. Magner, J. W. Davis, Charles Stillwell, F. J. Borel and F. A. Magner. The concern succeeds Nat A. Magner, Inc., the change having been found advisable on account of the death of a former partner of Mr. Magner before all of the details of the former company has been completed. This concern has taken over the California, Arizona and Nevada rights to "Tillie's Punctured Romance," formerly controlled by Bert Levey.

PROMINENT EXHIBITOR VISITS.

George W. Grant, well known in New York and London, was in San Francisco with his wife to visit the Exposition just before its close and after a tour of California plans to go to Cuba for the winter. He is now managing director of the Biograph Theaters, Ltd., London, Eng.

San Francisco News Briefs.

The V-Odeon, on Market street, San Francisco, has decided to show large feature productions and will present offerings from the Paramount program.

Max Dill, of the Kolb & Dill Film company, arrived in San Francisco from the south this week and is arranging to show the first production, declared to be a fifteen reel comedy.

The Market Street theater of this city is making extensive improvements in its operating room, having added two Powers Cameragraphs No. 6B.

The Liberty on Haight street is also preparing for the winter season and has added a new Simplex to its operating room equipment.

G. A. Metcalfe has just made an interesting sale of a machine for use in Alaska. It will be sent to Seattle and from there by boat to the Far North. After it reaches Seward it will be transported by dog team and sled over the ice for 150 miles. This supply man has received word that he ranks third in the sale of Powers machines among the dealers of the United States for the past year.

W. D. Nelligan, of Yerrington, Nev., was a recent visitor here and purchased a Simplex projection machine for his theater there.

Ralph Earle, for a long time with the Pathe News at San Francisco, is now making pictures for the Paramount News Service.

J. W. Allen, assistant manager at the local office of the Progressive Motion Picture company, has returned from a trip of investigation through the Sacramento valley.

William H. Hicks, manager of the Seattle branch of the General Film company, arrived here during the last week of the Exposition to make a short stay.

A new theater with a seating capacity of 2,000 persons is to be erected at Seventeenth street and San Pablo avenue, Oakland, Cal., by Vance & Holton. The estimated cost is placed at $100,000.

NEW CROWN THEATER SOON AT POCATELLO, IDAHO.

By H. W. Pickering, Sale Lake Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Crown theater, Pocatello, Ida., is nearing completion and will be opened in the near future as one of the finest and best equipped photoplay houses in the west. Fred G. Caldwell and his associates in the Idaho Loan & Investment Company are the builders. The Crown Amusement Company—B. F. Williamson, president, and Emma C. Crow, secretary and treasurer—will operate the theater. The house will seat 1,000, will be fireproof and handomely decorated.

SWANSON CIRCUIT NEWS.

E. C. Schmidt, publicity director for the American, Rex and Liberty theaters, has put across a publicity scoop this week in the appearance of the first issue of the Swanson Circuit News, devoted to the interests of the Swanson chain of theaters, headed by the three big Salt Lake houses. The S. C. News is something rather new in the way of house organs, in that it is full 7-column newspaper size, with typical "daily" makeup and has four pages filled with stories of special and general interest to the public and the trade. The paper will be issued weekly and distributed free.

R. W. Bertelson Staging Big V-L-S-E. Campaign.

R. W. Bertelson is new manager for the V-L-S-E offices in Salt Lake and is staging a whirlwind campaign with whirlwind success. He was visited recently for several days by A. W. Goff, manager of the coast division of the V-L-S-E, with headquarters in San Francisco.

The list of Salt Lake newspapers which have started a motion picture page of weekly appearance was completed last Sunday with the entrance of The Tribune into the field. George C. Cowing is editor of the Tribune's photoplay page.

PORTLAND THEATER CHANGES.

Paul Noble to Manage the National.

Again there has been a stir-up on film row and old faces are seen in new positions. Paul G. Noble, the popular young man who guided Metro's destiny in Portland successfully for some time, has taken over the management of the National theater, Vice C. F. Regan, resigned. About the first thing Mr. Noble did after taking his seat in the National's office was to draw copy for newspaper advertisements which have elicited favorable comments from all who saw the ads in print, including Mrs. Colwell, of the censor board, and incidentally crowding the National to see Metro's "Greater Love No Man Hath."

Grombacher Made Managing Director.

G. A. Grombacher, of the firm of Grombacher & Bailey, who formerly distributed Metro in the Pacific Northwest, has been elected managing director of the National theater.

Kirkpatrick Heads Metro Branch.

A. S. Kirtpatrick has taken charge of the Portland branch office of Metro and C. J. Kerr, special representative and supervisor of Northwest offices, was in Portland getting Mr. Kirkpatrick installed. Mr. Kirkpatrick resigned his position as road man and efficiency expert with the Portland office of the Mutual to accept his new position with Metro. He is a man of ideas and one of his innovations in the Metro office is a "campaign map" of the territory served out of Portland which is set with colored headed pins representing business already controlled and that yet to be gotten. The first check signed by Mr. Kirkpatrick in his new position was in payment of a year's subscription to the Moving Picture World to be forwarded to the new office at 72 Broadway.

Before severing his connection with the Mutual Film, Mr. Kirktpatrick made a trip through eastern Oregon and Washington, returning a few days before joining the Metro forces. Part of his trip was made by stage into territory seldom visited by traveling film men.

J. R. Harrington Mutual Road Man.

Replacing Mr. Kirkpatrick as road man for the Mutual, J. R. Harrington will come from Seattle, where he holds a similar position and will cover both the Portland and Seattle territory for the Mutual.

J. C. Stille Goes to the Arcade.

J. C. Stille, who has been serving as house manager at the People's, has been transferred to the Arcade theater, La Grande, Ore., another of the People's Amusement company's houses.

Ban on Fake Ads.

Censors to Ask Co-operation of Portland, Oregon, Ad Club to Bar Improper Advertising of Pictures—Capitalizing the Board's Condemnation of Pictures Arouses Ire—Censors Report.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

PORTLAND, ORE.—A discussion lasting nearly an hour, on the subject of "fake advertising," was the principal event of the monthly meeting of the Portland, Ore., censor board held December 2 The discussion was occasioned by an advertisement appearing in the Portland papers stating that a picture condemned by the board was showing at a local theater. This advertisement; said Mrs. E. B. Colwell, secretary of the board, did not state the truth, the fact about the matter being that while the picture had been twice condemned, it had been allowed to show upon a third viewing after extensive eliminations had been made and the picture as shown on the screen was an approved picture and not one that had been condemned as the advertisement indicated. Mrs. Colwell stated that the matter would be laid before the Ad Club if advertisers persisted in making improper use of the fact that a picture had at one time met with official disapproval.

Censors' Report.

The report of the censor board showed 334 subjects, consisting of 767 reels, were viewed during the month of November, of which two subjects, comprising 5 reels, were condemned and that 29 eliminations were ordered. The board found six eliminations ordered by the National Board had not been made when the films reached Portland. Three pictures referred by viewers to the board were passed, the viewers' opinion of the picture not being sustained. The viewing committee for the month consisted of 42 people.

The spreading of censorship gospel goes merrily on. On November 28, Mrs. Colwell delivered an address on censorship to the young women of the bible class at the Westminster Presbyterian church.

NEW FEATURE SERVICE.

Sol Baum, formerly manager of the People's, and Orton E. Goodwin, formerly manager of the National theater, have acquired the state rights to Griffith's "Avenging Conscience" in this territory. This picture was exhibited at the Heilig in Portland recently. Messrs. Baum and Goodwin are bargaining for other features and Film Row may soon be graced with another exchange.

SEATTLE ROTHAPFEL BANQUET

Many exhibitors in and near Seattle attended the dinner given at the Lincoln Hotel November 8 in honor of S. L. Rothapfel. Among those present were the following: Aubrey Levy, attorney for Eugene Levy Amusement enterprise; Edward J. Fisher, Theatrical Bookings, Seattle; Eugene Mike Fisher, 621 Lumber Exchange building, Seattle: Joseph A. St. Peter, Rose theater, Everett, Wash.; F. S. Fountain, manager Progressive M. P. Co.; C. S. Jensen, Alhambra theater, Seattle; William Southern, Grand theater, Bellingham; Paul E. Judkins, Victor theater, Seattle; Bart Bertelson, Clemmer theater, Seattle; George H. Storck, Madison theater, Seattle; Ray Crombacher, American theater, Seattle; C. J. Kerr, Metro Pictures corporation, Seattle, Portland, Butte; Ben Ketcham, Mission theater, Seattle; L. J. Schlaifer, Universal Film, Seattle; R. C. Montgomery, Big "4," 415 Olive street; J. Brown, Coliseum, 722 First avenue, Seattle; Tom North, manager V-L-S-E, Seattle branch; J. von Herberg, Liberty theater, Seattle; Arthur Bastherm, 206 First avenue south, Coliseum theater, Seattle; F. V. Fisher, secretary Greater Theaters Co., Seattle; G. F. Fullerton, Jensen & Von Herberg, advertisers; John Rantz, Osran Amusement Co., Bremerton, Wash.; E. Bishop, World Film; H. T. Moore, Colonial theater, Tacoma, Wash.; H. P. Davidson, World Film; W. W. Kastner, Majestic theater, Ballard; J. L. Woody, Mutual Film; E. N. Smith, Colonial theater; H. G. Rosenbaum, Triangle Film, Seattle; E. Manche, Palace theater, Tacoma; W. A. Mead, Triangle Film, Seattle; J. V. Lynn, Everett, Wash.; C. E. McKee, Orpheum, Everett, Wash.; E. C. Williamson, Melbourne theater; E. R. Redlich, Fox Film; W. W. Lad, president Moving Picture Operators' Union, Seattle; A. Singebaum, Camera Correspondent Gaumont Co., Mutual World; J. E. Ferguson, Wenatchee theater, Wenatchee, Wash.; L. O. Lukan, Post-Intelligencer, Seattle; George M. Tell, Grand Opera House; Dan Donnellan, editor "Pals," V-L-S-E; Joseph Gottstein, Coliseum theater, Seattle; Eugene Levy, Grand Opera House, Seattle; James Q. Clemmer, Clemmer theater, 1414 Second avenue; J. L. Gottstein, Coliseum; Duncan G. Inverarity, ex-showman and publicity, Tilikums of Elttaes; C. C. Cook, World Film and the I. T. theater, Medford; H. S. Hoke, Bungalow theater, Seattle, Wash.; George W. Ring, Society theater; Ed. Watson, V-L-S-E; G. A. Reed, branch manager Mutual Film.

Portland Sabbath Reform Campaign

Sunday Closing Law of Bluest Dye Wanted by Some—Seventh Day Adventists Oppose Sunday Closing Law; Favor a One-Rest-Day Ordinance.

THE Sunday closing campaign in Oregon, the promoters of which are seeking a Sunday closing law of the bluest dye, and which has been conducted in the Portland churches for the past two months, has reached a point where it is considered a little serious by the Portland exhibitors. Individual houses have taken it upon themselves to show appropriate slides condemning the proposed legislation.

The ramifications of the situation are many. Dr. G. L. Tufts proposes a weekly rest day, not naming any particular day in the week and he says his proposed bill has met with considerable interest in Ashland, Roseburg, Eugene and Salem. Other, Portland ministers propose a straight Sunday closing law which the Seventh Day Adventists are strenuously combatting. A mass meeting on the subject was held at Ye Liberty theater, Salem, Ore., on Dec. 2 and other meetings will follow in the Portland theaters.

Protest in Montreal

Moving Picture Protective Association Begins Fight Against Excessive and Unjustly Distributed Taxation—Dramatic Houses, Exempt from the Heavier Tax, Are Showing Occasional Features.

By W. M. Gladish, Toronto Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ADVICES from Montreal, Quebec, contain the information that representatives of the local Moving Picture Protective Association had raised a protest to the city against the unjust and excessive taxation of the Montreal moving picture theaters. The matter had come to a head, it was suggested, through the growing tendency of the dramatic houses to give moving picture performances rather than the regular stage offerings. The dramatic theaters only paid an annual fee of $500 and they were putting on moving picture shows with frequent regularity, thus cutting into the film field, while the real picture houses were compelled to pay tremendous taxes. This was considered unjust.

Picture theater managers must pay a fee of 85 cents per seat to the city and 20 cents per seat to the Provincial government, and the "legitimate" houses are not taxed according to seating capacity in addition to their regular annual license. The film exhibitors must, as well, pay a license of no less than $800 before they can go into business. This license fee had been, originally, only $50 but the amount had been raised to the high figure when the managers of the "legitimate" theaters had raised the cry that the moving pictures were providing too much competition. A decided change in the show situation had come, however, and the picture exhibitors now had occasion to kick because film features were replacing dramas and comedies to a considerable degree and no steps had been taken to impose the high moving picture taxes on the legitimate houses.

A request was made to have the picture theaters taxed according to the valuation of the houses and the assessed rental.

FOX COMPANY IN CANADA.

Toronto, Ont.—The latest film company to obtain a Canadian organization in order to look after the rapidly growing moving picture business in the country to the north of the 49th latitudinal line is the Fox, which has secured a federal charter for the Fox Film Company, Limited, with offices at 12 Queen street east, Toronto. The Canadian general manager is Mr. Harry S. Campbell, formerly of the New England branch at Boston, and another Canadian officer is Mr. Ben Abrams of New York. Mr. Mitchell Granby of Fox's branch exchange at Boston has been appointed the manager of the Province of Ontario. A Montreal office has also been opened and it is in charge of Mr. C. St. John Brennon.

The Fox corporation makes the fourth big film organization to be established in Canada this fall, including the Metro, World, Paramount and Fox companies and the eyes of the Canadian people are being opened by the rapid development of the field and the definite organization of Canadian companies by the various producers.

FILMS SHOW CANADA'S GLORY.

Lieutenant Dwyer, Sergeant Fred Wells and Corporal White, late of Canada's foreign service army, invaded Toronto with their six reels of official Canadian war pictures on Monday, December 6th, for a four days' run in Massey Hall and fairly large crowds patronized the performances which were held twice daily. The pictures, which were very good from a photographic standpoint as well as from a popular viewpoint, showed the Canadian soldier in training, at play, crossing the ocean, reviewed in England by King George and going to the front. Views were also taken of the various Canadian military hospitals where "Jack Canuck" was seen recovering from wounds. Close-up pictures of a number of high British officers and nobility were also obtained by Lieutenant Dwyer, formerly of Victoria, British Columbia.

The performance also includes picture talks by Sergeant Wells, who lost an arm in the present war and who was returned by the Germans in an exchange of prisoners, and Corporal White, a resident of Calgary, who won the Distinguished Conduct Medal at Ypres.

The pictures are to be kept as a record of Canada's part in the war and the present set is to be increased from time to time until peace is declared and the soldiers return. Special exhibitions are to be given in all the large cities of the Dominion.

CHANGES AT THE UNIVERSAL.

A number of changes in the organization of the Canadian Universal, with head offices in Toronto, have been announced. The officers at the Montreal branch now include Mr. S. B. Taube, who was with the Universal exchange at Vancouver for five years, and Mr. T. O. Byerle. One of the two roadmen for the Universal in Ontario is Mr. Gerold Ruck, until recently with the Mutual Film company. Mr. Davidson of the Universal branch at Calgary has come to Toronto to assume charge of the accounting department at the head office.

The Universal company is taking an active interest in recruiting and military work by the supplying of numerous films free of charge to be shown at meetings and camps. The pictures at the big recruiting rallies in the Hippodrome, Toronto, each Sunday, are furnished by the Universal while the nightly moving picture show in the canteen of the military camp at Toronto is provided through the kindness of Universal officials.

LITTLE MARY WEEK.

During the entire week of December 6, the Carlton theater, Toronto, had nothing but Mary Pickford pictures as nightly features. These included "Fanchon the Cricket," "Caprice," "Cinderella," "Hearts Adrift" and "Esmeralda." It was called a Mary Pickford Review Week in honor of the famous film actress who is said to be a native of Toronto.

PROMISE NO OVERCROWDING.

When the Moving Picture Protective Association of Toronto, through its attorney, Mr. Louis Heyd, K. C., gave an undertaking that the various theaters of Toronto would not be overcrowded in violation of the law, Judge Morson remitted fines of $20 each against three exhibitors, Hyman King, 1092 Queen street west, who owns two houses; Moses Aziz, 326 Pape avenue, and Samuel Lester, 1098 Bloor street west. The convictions were allowed to stand and if the offences are repeated, in the opinion of the police, the fines will be again exacted in addition to further penalties.

IN VANCOUVER.

Notes on Patriotic Shows.

During the showing of war scenes in an Eclair Weekly recently at the Orpheum in Vancouver, Manager J. W. Pilling arranged to have patriotic choruses rendered on a large talking machine which was installed in an upper box. Much applause and comment resulted when the "Marsellaise" and "Soldiers of the King" were sung.

At the time of a recent showing of important war pictures, the Dominion theater in Victoria, B. C., had as guests of the management five hundred soldiers now in training at Willows Camp, near the city.

Pantages theater in Winnipeg recently featured a "Recruiting Campaign Week," during which the three-reel war picture, "Defenders of the Empire," was shown, and a singing act was given by Miss Bertha Gardner, who has recently been relieved from nursing service in French and British field hospitals.

The National Amusement company through E. H. Benson, manager of the Columbia theater in Vancouver, has announced that it will distribute each week through a local newspaper one hundred passes to the Columbia, to be given only to soldiers. These passes are to be distributed by the paper without any "strings" whatever, and may be had by army men on application.

A Stirring Performance.

On a recent Sunday evening, just on the eve of the "Birth of a Nation" premier in Winnipeg, a recruiting meeting was held at the Walker theater, in which the "Nation" film was to be shown. The audience had been worked up to a condition of intense patriotic emotion. Descriptive selections were played by the Military Band of the 90th Battalion; bodies of officers and private soldiers had marched across the stage; the skirling of bagpipes was soon faintly heard, gradually growing plainer, until suddenly the pipe band of the 79th Battalion marched out on the stage.

The immense audience was consequently in a receptive mood when Rev. W. J. Hindley, of the Central Congregational Church, delivered an impassioned speech on "The Birth of a Nation," giving a vivid and realistic description of one's feelings while viewing the magnificent production. The spectator, said Mrs. Hindley, grips his chair, bites his teeth into his lips and tongue, and marvels at the immensity of it all. This speech was followed by an appeal for recruits, and Mayor Waugh also spoke on the same subject.

"The Birth of a Nation" opened its two weeks' engagement the following day, at prices ranging from 25 cents to $1.50, and is reported to be doing a good business. The picture opens at the Empire, at Edmonton, Sask., Dec. 6.

Chosen Items of Interest.

The Strand in Vancouver has just installed an orchestra.

Several hundred people gathered at the Earl Grey School in Winnipeg on a recent evening, to see a series of educational moving pictures, including the whaling and pottery industries, North Sea trawlers, ostrich farming, and other subjects. The same reels were used the following night at the Isaac Brock School. It is planned to give similar exhibitions throughout the winter.

The Ladies' Auxiliary of the Royal Columbian Hospital took over the Royal theater in New Westminster, B. C., for one day recently, and augmented the regular picture show with musical selections by local artists. Quite a sum was raised for the hospital.

J. M. Maxwell, in charge of the photoplay department of the Vancouver Daily Province, is running each week a letter from some prominent star, addressed to the moving picture fans of the city. Mary Pickford and Robert Warwick have already been heard from, with other favorites to follow. This novel stunt has created a great deal of favorable comment.

"Via Wireless," the Pathe Gold Rooster Play, recently brought an unusually successful week to the Globe in Vancouver. Manager Creighton hired a wireless outfit, with an operator, to work in the spacious lobby, and kept a crowd in front of the house watching the sparks fly. So well did the picture draw that the engagement was extended from three days to a full week.

HECTOR QUAGLIOTTI.

Hector Quagliotti, although a comparative newcomer in the ranks of British Columbia moving picture exhibitors, has firmly established himself through the Colonial theater as one of the most successful managers of Vancouver.

In Turin, Italy, where he was for many years known as an oarsman and swimmer, Mr. Quagliotti received an extensive musical education, and after returning to this country filled many long engagements on the Pacific Coast with his own company of musicians, under the name of "Romano's Orchestra." He also conducted the Italian Conservatory of Music in Seattle, and later became associated with his brother, who operates several moving picture theaters in Victoria. Two years ago he purchased at auction the lease and entire equipment of the Colonial. This house, opened as the Kinemacolor theater by a local syndicate, showed the colored pictures for six months and then changed to black-and-white programs, but in a little over a year had lost its promoters the sum of $92,000.

Hector Quagliotti.

Acting against the judgment of practically everyone who knew the facts, Mr. Quagliotti took over the house, and by a strict adherence to a policy of having nothing but the best in every department, made a success from the start. Paramount pictures were at first shown, but later a change was made to Universal service, which has been continued ever since, with a Broadway Universal Feature the first half of each week, and various shorter subjects the latter half.

Mr. Quagliotti recently did the exhibitors of the province a notable service in the matter of censorship, and is largely responsible for the partial return to sanity in the administration of the local office. When "The Spoilers" was rejected, acting with the holders of the Canadian rights, he succeeded in having the picture reviewed and passed by the Attorney-General of British Columbia, and subsequently did the biggest week's business ever done with a feature in Western Canada. This victory constituted a strong opening wedge in the censorship fight, and has already brought very favorable changes.

It is Mr. Quagliotti's proud boast that the Colonial is the only house in Vancouver which has never used a second-run picture.

Board to Prejudge Films?

British Columbia Exhibitors Were Congratulating Themselves on Getting a Square Censorship Deal Through the Promised Appeal Board—Narrow-Minded Reformers Now Trying to Carry the New Board.

By E. C. Thomas, Vancouver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—With the censorship question greatly relieved, and with fewer pictures being rejected than at any time since the installation of a film censor in the province, British Columbia exhibitors, who have been asking the government for an appeal board to review rejections, are now threatened with a board that would place them more than ever under the control of the reform element.

It may be recalled that at a meeting of the Social Service Council in Vancouver during the agitation over the rejection of "The Spoilers," this subject was condemned without having been seen; moving picture manufacturers, the National Board of Censorship, this paper, the Vancouver newspapers—all were condemned. Only the censor escaped, and he was remembered with a unanimous vote of confidence.

The representative of the Moving Picture World has been informed that local exhibitors have been approached by Mrs. Perry, who has long been prominent in local reform work, and who spoke at the meeting, though not on the subject of censorship. Mrs. Perry, it is stated, at first was firmly opposed to an appeal board, and voiced a fear that it might be possible for interested parties to bribe the members. After some discussion, the report states, Mrs. Perry suggested herself as a member of the board, and has since been in favor of the establishment of such a body. Rev. Father O'Boyle, who presided at the meeting of the Social Service Council, has also been put forward for membership.

The exhibitors are thus confronted with a clear-cut situation: There is no guarantee of how long the present era of comparative sanity in censorship is going to last; the lines may be tightened again without a moment's notice.

Two Out of Three Surely Prejudiced.

The exhibitors have been asking for an appeal board of three members; now, with two of these members recruited from the Social Service Council, a reform organization which has shown itself to be prejudiced against moving pictures as an institution, and which has gone on record as willing to support the censor in practically any action, without investigation as to the merits of the case, it is not difficult to see that such an appeal board would not only be of no benefit to the exhibitors, but would increase the burden under which they are already laboring. The honesty of purpose of the present candidates assuredly is not questioned, but it may as well be understood that the moving picture men of the province are not prepared to have films regulated by theological standards.

It is now up to the exhibitors to concern themselves with the personnel of the board, if one is to be appointed, instead of waiting until the appointments are made. After the body is duly constituted, it would probably require a long, hard fight to bring about any changes in membership. As it was stated to the writer that these positions are to carry a salary, candidates will probably not be lacking.

Broy and Whitehead in Bad.

Our broad-minded censor was so provoked at the passing of "The Spoilers" that he has been real peevish ever since. In fact, he refuses to speak to George Broy and Sam Whitehead, and when he passes them on the street simply gives them a "nawsty" look. Broy and Whitehead have about decided to jump off a dock.

PLACES FOR BRAVE VETERANS.

The following letter has been sent to Sir Richard McBride, Premier of British Columbia:

"Hon. Sir Richard McBride.

"Dear Sir: We understand that there will likely be a good many soldiers returning from the front for whom employment must be found, if possible. We, therefore, take the liberty to advise you that we own and operate a number of vaudeville and motion picture theaters in the province, and it may be possible for us to place some of these men where they can be of service to our company, and at the same time enable them to earn a living. Application can be made to any of the following places: Columbia, Globe, Maple Leaf, Princess and Bijou theaters, Vancouver; Nanaimo Opera House and Bijou theater, Nanaimo; Columbia and Bijou theaters, Victoria; and Empire theater, North Vancouver. We would like to be able to do our part in taking care of our brave soldiers, many of whom will be seeking employment immediately on their return. We have the honor to remain,

"NATIONAL AMUSEMENT CO.

Jules Levine Goes to Calgary.

Manager James E. Finch of the Universal exchange in Vancouver reports that Jules Levine, his booker, will leave next week for the Universal branch in Calgary.

New Incorporations.

Michael Ert, Limited, capitalized at $60,000, has been incorporated at Winnipeg, to deal in motor boats, automobiles and moving picture machines. The incorporators are Michael Ert, Anna L. Ert, Harry Parsons, Walter Neischer and Beatrice McQuarrie.

The Trail Star Theater Company, Limited, was incorporated in British Columbia last week, with a capitalization of $10,400. Principal place of business is at Trail, B. C.

The Standard Feature Film reports big bookings on "The Melting Pot" and they have added "Guarding Old Glory," "Battles of a Nation" and other pictures to their list of features.

Supreme Court of Alberta Calls Voting Contest Lottery

Edmonton Theater Loses Its Appeal and Discontinues Contest for a Motor Car—Winner Must Now Guess Number of Shot in a Jar.

EDMONTON, ALBERTA.—The appellate division of the Supreme Court of Alberta has dismissed the appeal of the Hudson's Bay company of Edmonton against the judgment of Hon. Mr. Justice Simmons, who held that the automobile contest being conducted by the company constituted a violation of the statute prohibiting lotteries and kindred games of chance. The decision of the court is unanimous, the judgment being handed down by the chief justice.

The Hudson's Bay company has consequently abandoned the contest as planned, and has substituted a guessing contest, in which contestants are required to guess the number of shot contained in a large glass bottle. The automobile remains as first prize, and various other prizes have been added.

It now remains to be seen what action, if any, will be taken against moving picture theaters conducting "country stores," luck seat nights, numbered program contests, and other schemes of a similar nature. With these trade-getters prohibited, and all theaters on an equal basis, the result would probably be more profit for exhibitors, and better shows for patrons.

SETTLE LABOR TROUBLES.

Regina, Saskatchewan.—At a recent meeting of the Regina Trades and Labor Council the Regina theater, at the request of the Stage Employes' Union and the Musicians' Union, was placed on the fair list. Trouble which arose between the theater and the unions has now been adjusted, and the Regina joins the Rex and the Rose as a union house. The Roseland and Majestic are still non-union.

It was stated at the meeting that some Regina theaters are allowing young children, unaccompanied, to visit the shows at night. The delegate representing the Theatrical Employes' Union charged that certain irregularities exist in the licensing of moving picture operators, but could not point to any specific case. The council promised to look into the matter, but indicated that in future no action will be taken unless charges are presented in a definite, concise form.

BIOGRAPH.

THE FAILURE (Dec. 20—Biograph—Reissue No. 29).—The cast: The Clerk (Wilfred Lucas); His Fiancee (Lily Cahill); His Employer (Donald Crisp); The Woman (Dorothy Bernard); Her Lover (Edwin August).

Discharged for drinking, the clerk is spurned by his fiancee, and thereafter goes steadily down hill. He becomes a habitue of a dancehall, where he earns a few pennies and drinks by singing. An outcast woman, who frequents the dancehalls, becomes interested in him and urges him to fight for self-control. "There's always a chance for a man," she insists; but for her, discarded by the lover to whom she gave all, there is no chance. The man makes an attempt to regain the lost ground, but fails. Again the woman spurs him to another trial.

His chance comes when his uncle in the country offers him a farm, on condition that he marry and settle down. When he cannot accept because he has no money to buy new clothes or a railroad ticket, the woman sells her jewels and offers him the proceeds. He refuses her aid, and she resorts to subterfuge. When the money is offered to him "for friendship's sake" by the owner of the hall, he accepts, and hurries to the home of his former fiancee, in the hope that she will become his wife and accompany him to the farm. But she has another sweetheart. Back to the dancehall goes the failure, and after much pleading the woman, who loves him but fears to mar his future, consents to be his wife. In their new home they find happiness.

PACKER JIM'S GUARDIANSHIP (Two Parts—Dec. 21).—The cast: Packer Jim (Ivan Christy); the Child (Zoe Bech); Indian Chief (W. C. Robinson); Claim Jumper (Robert Nolan).

Bill Pape, a prospector, recently widowed, lives with his motherless little girl in the hills, far from the nearest camp. He falls ill, and bids the child go for the doctor. She catches up her father's horse, contrives to mount him, and sets off toward Fourflush. On the way she is observed by a band of marauding Indians, who pursue her. The Indian chief sweeps her off her horse and sets her in front of him at full gallop; for he, in his turn, is being pursued by an avenger. The newcomer is a frontiersman known as Packer Jim by reason of his trade—packing supplies into camp with the aid of his educated burro, Mike.

Packer Jim, seeing the Indians give chase to the child, has followed at top speed, shooting as he comes. The Indian chief falls from his horse, but the child clings to the mane. The remaining Indians are dispersed, and Packer Jim takes the child home. Her father, dying, gives her into Jim's care, and entrusts to the frontiersman the records of his claim in the hills. Jim places the child in a convent and returns to Fourflush, where he is confronted by the leader of a trio of claim jumpers. These gentry have staked Bill Pape's claim, and now they warn Jim to keep off. He defies them and hastens to the recorder's office, where he learns that possession is nine points of the law. The claim jumpers have already set out toward the claim, but he hurries after them by short cuts.

To remove all evidence of Pape's possession they set fire to his cabin. Packer Jim shoots one of them as he is about to post the claim notice, then downs another, and is himself wounded by the third. Nevertheless he gets the drop on the claim jumper and drives him off. Then he staggers to his horse and somehow gets back to Fourflush. Soon he receives desertion and takes up a faster life than ever. He is a good dresser and gives the impression of being of good family. One day in front of between automobiles and Cairns saves her. notification that Pape's title to the claim is clear, and sends for the little girl to be his solace while he recovers from his wounds.

THE TIDES OF RETRIBUTION (Three Parts—Dec. 22).—The cast: Jim Carpenter (Jack Mulhall); Nellie (Vera Sisson); Tom Larkin (G. Raymond Nye); Virginia (Gretchen Hartman); Her Father (Edward Cecil); Her Mother (Kate Bruce).

Seeking employment, Tom Larkin comes to the little town where Jim Carpenter, an inventive machinist, lives with his pretty wife, Nellie. Larkin is a good draftsman, and Carpenter engages him to work on the plans for an engine he is building. Realizing that Carpenter has invented a marvelous engine, Larkin schemes to ruin the model and steal the plans. On the day of the test he tampers with the model, there is an explosion, and Carpenter's wife is blinded. In the excitement Larkin gets away with the plans and, assuming the name of Fenner, goes to an obscure village to perfect the invention. Here he meets Virginia Shirley, daughter of a stern old man, and breaks her heart. Thrown on her own resources, she makes use of her natural talents and in time becomes famous as a music hall artist under the name of Madame Laverne.

The outbreak of the war causes her to leave Paris and sail for America. Larkin, also, whom the stolen invention has made wealthy, takes the same boat, occupying the stateroom de luxe. Carpenter has long since taken Nellie abroad in the hope of having her sight restored. This failing, they have eked out a wretched existence until now, when the American consulate sends them home. Virginia pities the blind wife and takes her out of the steerage to her own luxurious stateroom. She has recognized Larkin, and has noted his start of surprise on sight of Carpenter.

Learning from Carpenter how Larkin stole his invention, she determines to wreak a double vengeance upon her betrayer, who does not recognize in this mature woman the little country girl he wooed. She allures him, plies him with wine, gets into his staterom, finds Carpenter's original plans, then brings the two face to face. There is a fight, ended by the captain of the vessels, who takes command of the situation and forces Larkin to sign a confession. Only when Virginia signs her name as witness does Larkin recognize her.

LUBIN.

OTTO'S CABARET (Dec. 20—Unit Program).—The cast: Otto Schmidt (D. L. Don); Clancy, the cop (Freddie Douglas); Mr. Buyer (James Cassady); Agent (John Delson).

Otto Schmidt has sunk his wealth in the purchase of a restaurant where flies are plentiful, but for some reason or other the patrons with hunger fail to approach. Otto is on the verge of a "high dive into the briny" when Clancy, the congenial cop, whispers that the installation of a cabaret is the only possible means for Otto to "put it over" and draw trade.

Being without money and still in sympathy with the ideas of Clancy, Otto decides to take his tip and be "the cabaret" himself. The influx of patronage and money is phenomenal, and then along comes a stranger who wants to buy the place. Otto says, "No," but the stranger, being an unkind little chap forces the sale. He forgot "the cabaret," however, and try as he would he couldn't get another attraction like Otto.

Wise Mr. Buyer realizes his position and decides to dispose of the "famous beanery." Otto, hearing of his intention and with just a small portion of the money Mr. Buyer coughed over for the place originally, he buys the place back. With the same old repertoire, the same old soup and the same old service—Otto being chef, waiter, piano strangler and the operatic attraction (between the soup and the coffee), he again reaps a harvest of greenbacks.

HEARTACHES (4 Parts—Dec. 20—Unit Program).—The cast: Kate Merry (June Daye); Mrs. Merry (Jessie Terry); Will Cairns (Francis Joyner); Marion Nelson (Helen Greene); Philip Nelson (Arthur Forbes); Mrs. Nelson (Eleanor Barry).

Kate Merry, the daughter of a washerwoman, married Will Cairns, a worthless fellow. Soon she realized his bestial character, leaves him and goes to work in a department store, where she becomes acquainted with Marion Nelson, a wealthy patron and who takes Kate into her home.

Meanwhile Kate's husband get a divorce for a theatre Marion Nelson is caught in a jamb From this instant a friendship springs up between the two. Marion, not penetrating the real character of the man, falls in love with him. One day she takes him shopping with her and Kate sees them by chance.

Marion has a brother who develops a fondness for Kate. Unknown to Marion, Cairn saw Kate the day they were shopping and, to protect himself, tells Marion's brother that Kate shouldn't be allowed in the house; that she is no good. Marion is confronted by Kate and is told that Cairns is a worthless and degenerate man. Kate is not believed, Marion contributing some other motive to her action. Their friendship is broken. At last Kate decides to show up Cairn's true character. She writes a note to Cairns that she is willing to go with him. She then persuades Marion to come to her house and secrete herself. Cairns comes; he is drunk, and, enticed a little by Kate, shows his true character. Philip, who has stood the separation from Kate as long as he could, has decided to locate her and make up. He comes in just at the wrong time and sees Kate struggling against Cairns. He denounces Kate and rushes out. Kate then sends Cairns away. Marion, heartbroken over his revelation, comes out of her hiding place and takes Kate home with her. Later Philip is made to see the truth of the situation by Marion and all points toward happiness.

BEYOND ALL IS LOVE (Three Parts—Dec. 23).—The cast: Will Hardy (Francis Joyner); Virginia Wells (Helen Greene); Edna Murray (Carrie Reynolds); John Kerry (Peter Lang); Hardy's father (Walter Law); Hardy's mother (Eleanor Barry).

Prologue.—Stuyvesant Hardy, a wealthy man, comes home to his wife and young son. He greets them happily, goes upstairs to his room and takes a drug which transforms him from a gentleman to a bestial and mean brute. He goes from the house and seeks out the roughest of companions in men and women. His wife, who is frail, dies during her husband's four-day debauch. Coming home, he finds his motherless son. It is this shock which braces Stuyvesant Hardy and saves him thereafter from the drug.

The Story—Will Hardy, the grandson of Stuyvesant Hardy, is sent to college where, doing athletic sports, his leg is broken. The doctor leaves medicine for him. Instructions are that he is to take one dose in case of severe pain. But Hardy suffers so that he takes another dose, and the next day bribes the porter to have the box refilled. In this way the youth contracts the drug habit. He is a brilliant fellow and graduates a valedictorian from college, with his secret affliction. He goes into his father's law office, the father having escaped the hereditary taint.

The drug habit has him in its clutches, and he is compelled to live a Jekyll and Hyde existence. He has the inherited craving for low life and bestial living whenever under the narcotic. When the sale of drugs is put under the jurisdiction of the State he has a hard time. About this time his father takes a case against John Kerry, a crooked ward heeler. On one his debaucheries Will meets Edna Murray, who is a tool of John Kerry. She gets drugs for Will, and he, in his morbid condition, becomes enamored of her, not remembering bis sweetheart, Virginia Wells, whom he loves deeply while in his moral senses.

It is the object of Kerry to get Will so tied up with Edna that he can hold it over the head of the prosecuting attorney when the time comes. Virginia, who is interested in mission work, has a fleeting glance of the dope victim in company with the Murray woman, but does not realize it is Will. The face affects her strangely, and when she sees her sweetheart again, who has supposedly been away on a trip, she tells him of this strange resemblance. The trial of Kerry draws near. Virginia that day, returning from the mission, wanders to where she saw the man resembling Will. She runs to him, in the company of the Murray woman and Kerry. She realizes it is her sweetheart and follows them to a den belonging to Kerry. Virginia rushes back to Will's father, who receives a note written by Will, at Kerry's command, stating that he will be harmed unless the case against Kerry is called off. Virginia tells where Will is hidden. The father phones detectives, and together they go to Will's rescue. They take him home, and when the drug wears off Will realizes, as his grandfather realized, what the drug had brought him to, and now Virginia's love had triumphed. He takes Virginia into his arms and then falls to her feet in humility and gratitude.

NO SMOKING (Dec. 25).—The cast: Wilkins (Billie Reeves); Finley, his friend (Arthur Matthews); Mrs. Wilkens (Carrie Reynolds); Aunt Julia (Jessie Terry); Janitor (Charles Griffiths).

Wilkens is a "hear" at smoking, pipe, cigarette, cigar or anything to an old hoot can't get by him. His good old Aunt Julia has a hundle of coin, but hates smoke and all who use tohacco in any form. Wilkins needs $10,000 to set himself up in business, and decides Aunt Julia will have to he the goat for the loan. He invites the "old girl" to come to his home for a visit, and then remembers her dislike for "the weed." Accordingly he decides to humor her and har tohacco from his home during her stay. He admits to her how he, to, hates smoking, all the while hattling with himself to keep from unconsciously "lighting up."

Aunt Julia, with her "Sherlock eye," finds a stray bundle of ashes lying about, and to her questions Wilkens explains that it is naught but tooth powder, which, of course, Julia insists upon trying. Then his meerschaum pipe, which he values more than life, slips into sight in some way, and it is hlamed upon the janitor, who gladly walks off with the prize. After dinner Wilken, with his usual hahit, carelessly inserts a cigarette in his face, and is forced to swallow it when Aunt Julia turns about and sees him, explaining it was a lady finger.

Finley, a non-smoking friend of Wilkens, happens in with a choice hox of cigars, for which he has no use and which he gives to Wilkens. Ananias is made to look like a piker by the explanations which are offered as to the contents of the bundle. Then, with Finley, he sneaks away to the "den" to enjoy a short smoke. Aunt Julia, passing the door, sees the stream of smoke coming from the keyhole and enters. Wilkens palms off the cigar on Finley, and, getting the idea, Finley, to save his friend, begins to smoke, hut heing of a lady's heart he soon nearly passes away in his sacrifice. Finally, unahle to stand it longer, Wilkens lights up, just as Aunt Julia comes to the room to arrange for the loan. He is cornered and, with no place to hide the weed, puts it in his pocket, where it rests uncomfortably against the skin amid Wilkens' contortions. With the hursting of the trousers pocket into flames Aunt Julia discovers the deception and leaves with her bank roll undisturhed, and with Wilkens still in a quandry as to who will fall for the $10,000 loan.

Riley, a laborer, works in the new subway. He falls heir to a lot of money, a fact which bores Riley to death, hut pleases his socially amhitious wife and daughter. They make him move into a swell neighhorhood and suhject him to a lot of social tortures that drive Riley crazy. He finally realizes that it is the money that is causing his unhappiness, and at once begins to plan to lose it. But everything that Riley touches, instead of diminishing his bank account, increases it and he is in despair.

Finally he reads in the paper that Harry Thaw's trial cost a million dollars for lawyers' fees, and Riley has an inspiration. He decides to become a nut, get himself committed to Matteawan and hire the hest legal talent to liherate him—for Riley argues that when the lawyers finish there won't be enough money left to buy a shave.

Riley gets into the fool factory, but finds it so uncomfortable there that he wants to get out again, but cannot. Through his lawyers he gets another examination, but when he tells the judge that his reason for geting in there, in the first place, was "that he preferred to he poor rather than rich," the judge decides that any man who would rather be poor than rich is surely nutty, and Riley is sent back to durance vile.

Ezra Hickman, of Kankakee, is a political aspirant. At a reception in Washington with his wife and daughter Amy he meets the Ambassador of Selim Bey, the ruler of a small European kingdom, Vergania. The Ambassador, seeking an American girl for his ruler, paints a glowing picture of Vergania to Hickman's wife, with the result that she persuades her husband to accept the American Consulate at Vergania. Amy, the daughter, is enamored of Lieutenant Brice of the U. S. Navy, and reluctantly she agrees to leave him and go with her family.

Arriving at the Selim's palace, Amy becomes immediately the favorite of tne Selim, and he plans to win her.

Hanoum, the former favorite of His Highness, hecomes angered and attempts to kill Amy at the festivities given in honor of the Hickmans. The Selim presses his advances and, learning his intent, Mr. Hickman and Amy become disgusted and resolve to leave, but hey are seized and imprisoned in the castle tower. In the interim the ship to which Lieutenant Brice is attached steams into Verganla Harbor. He hastens to find Amy, but learns that the Hickmans havc mysteriously disappeared. At a dinner tendered the naval officers hy Selim Bey he discovers a lorgnette helonging to Mrs. Hickman and accuses the Selim. He is convinced of his error and leaves for the ship.

Hauoum, the former favorite, decides to inform Brice, and making her escape, swims to his ship. Brice returns with an armed force and succeeds in rescuing Amy. Selim Bey is made to salute the American flag and make retribution for the actions he has pursued.

THE CONVICT KING (Three Parts—Dec. 30).—The cast: Jared Austin (Melvin Mayo); Ben Gray (Jay Morely); Robert Orme (George Routh); George Austin's son (L. C. Shumway); Pearl De Lyle (Adda Gleason).

Jared Austin and Ben Gray are contractors who use convict lahor. A bill is introduced in the legislature to abolish the system, and Gray assures Austin he will speak against the bill when it comes up. Austin's son, George, is infatuated with Pearl De Lyle, an actress. She tells him she must have $200. George meets a friend, Larry Graham, who nervously explains that his employer had entrusted him with some money to take to the hank, but he stopped on the way and the hank was closed when he reached there. He had lost some of the money. George asks for what remains, and promises to return the entire amount the next morning. Larry hesitatingly consents. George gives Pearl the $200 and huys wine for her. He reaches home intoxicated, and Austin hitterly attacks him.

When George awakens he discovers that it is after nine o'clock, and remembers the promise he made to Larry. He wonders where he can get the money now that his father is angry with him. He goes to the office, finds the safe open and steals some of the money. He rushes to Larry too late, for already he is in the custody of the police. He finds that Robert Orme, the bookkeeper, has been accused of the theft. Both Orme and Larry are sentenced to the convict camps, and George seeks to quell his conscience by spending the stolen money in drink.

Austin and Gray need convict lahor and bids in a large numher of convicts, among them Larry and Orme. Austin leaves the city on business on the same train with the convicts going to his camp. There is a wreck in which Orme escapes and Austin's face hruised, almost unrecognizable. He wanders dazedly to the woods, falls unconscious and Orme, finding him, changes clothes with him. The guards come across him, and lead him to the train. Orme takes Austin's place, and is not suspected. At the convict camp, the superintendent laughs at Austin when he declares he is not Orme. For the first time, Austin realizes the cruelty that is practiced in the camps. Larry attempting to escape from the camp is killed hy the guards. The sight profoundly affects Austin.

George seeks Pearl in order to forget his crime. He finds her with another admirer, and his head turned by wine, he shoots her in a jealous rage. He is jailed and makes a full confession of his past deeds. The order is given to release the prisoner, "Orme." Austin arrives at his office the day the hill against the convict lease system is to come up in the legislature. Gray is about to start on his way to speak against the bill. Austin tells him that he would sooner lose every cent than have his son go through the hell he did. Gray becomes furious, and when Austin says that he, too, will address the legislature, Gray locks him up in a closet and goes off alone. At the state capitol, Austin makes a masterful speech for the hill, with the result that it is passed overwhelmingly. Austin begins anew with Orme, who has returned, as a partner, and George, under proper prison condition, is given a chance to reform and become a useful citizen.

A READY MADE MAID (Jan. 1).—The cast: Billie Buttles (Billie Reeves); Algernon Dovey (Arthur Matthews); Mrs. Algernon Dovey (Carrie Reynolds); Major Dix (Peter Lang); Mrs. Dix (Jessie Terry).

Billy, czar, king, emperor and what not of the hobo clan, is stranded high and dry far from the sea of finance. A hundle dropped from a fast speeding laundry wagon fills him with hope as he pounces upon it—hut sadness overawes him when he opens it, for it contains naught but an abundance of women's clothes and lingeree. Then it is that his ever eager eye lights upon a "want ad" in the morning paper, and he decides that with the new found outfit he can he the maid required. Accordingly he is soon arrayed in the feminine garh and applies for the position at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Dovey, a newly married pair. As things will sometimes happen, Billy is hired and begins his duties at once. Despite the fact that he musses up the hric-a-brac a bit, nails the sheets to the bed, sets firc to the waste paper basket with a cigarette but extingulshes it with the parlor aquarium of gold fish, Mrs. Dovey assures her hushand on his return home that she has secured a treasure, however little Mr. Dovey may agree with her.

Billie has become Bridget now, and Mrs. Dovey decides to entertain Major and Mrs. Dix at dinner. Bridget is advised and "she" admits "she" cannot only handle the cooking wonderfully hut horribly as well. The cocktails and wine tempt "Bridget" more than a little, and he spills soup over the Major's shirt front. Many other uncomfortable little pastimes are indulged in hy "Bridget." The Major and his wife leave in a rage and Huhhy Dovey decides he will tie the can on "Bridget" without delay, but in the kitchen he finds "her" sharpening a pair of carving knives and he tip toes away from the irate one.

At midnnght, with the household wrapped in slumher, a burglar sneaks into the house. "Bridget" comes out of slumber long enough to save the "seared to death Dovey and wife" and gives chase to the intruder—upstairs and down to the street and straight to the arms of a waiting policeman who carts them both back to the Dovey mansion. Here it is discovered that "Bridget" is half male attire and half female attire and the secret is out. Mrs. Dovey and friend husband agree that Billy would be the proper caper as the gardener where he is installed at easy lahor; and a real cook is secured that the Dovey's might eat and Billy may have one to whom he can tell the love with which his heart overflows.

VITAGRAPH.

HE GOT HIMSELF A WIFE (Dec. 27).—The cast: Dick (Webster Campbell); Sue (Mary Anderson); Sophia (Aileen Allen).

Dick and Sue, engaged twenty-four hours, have a lovers' quarrel which is certainly the real thing, even to handing hack of the ring. But that evening Dick receives news of a $5,000 joh, provided he is a married man, and at once thinks of Sue, forgetting their quarrel. But Sue has not forgotten it, and when he asks her to marry him and tries to kiss her she slaps his face and runs into the house. Rogers Lytton); Harmony (Belle Bruce); Foreman (Ned Finley); Hennessy (Logan Paul); Maime, Harmony'a friend (Kate Davenport); Secretary (Jack Brawn); Margaret, a wealthy girl (Marlon Henry); Mother (Eulalie Jensen); Hogarty (Thom Mills).

Brought up in idleness, Geoffrey Manning is one of the most self-complacent indlvlduals possible to imagine. His hardworking father often reprimands him for his laziness, but he only laughs, until a young social "uplifter" gives him a verhal jolt that sets Geoffrey to thinking. The result is that, taking only Mathews, the family lawyer, into his confidence, Geoffrey tells his father he is going hunting indefinitely, and disappears from his little world.

In a cheap suit of clothes, and with very little money in his pockets, he sets out determined to make his own living unaided. What a rude awakening he experiences! No training, no experience, he finds himself unable to secure a job—of no use to anyone. Finally he gets work tearing up the street with a rough gang and, although he is strongly built, the work almost kills him. But he is game. Then he gets a job in the big steel mills—the very one owned by his father. Under an assumed name he goes steadily up the ladder of promotion in the huge forge room.

Becoming interested in labor troubles, Manning has become a popular leader among the men, who go to him for counsel in all their troubles. Meanwhile he has met and fallen in love with Harmony Laurie, a pretty music teacher and a girl of sterling character. He rescues the girl from a fire at the mill, nearly losing his life. On his return to work he finds the men on the verge of striking and, as their old leader,

Triangle Plays Make the Steady Patron

If you have fixed charges it is but reasonable to wish fixed returns to set off against these. A profit one week and a loss the next is unsatisfactory. What is needed is to turn the occasional patron into a steady patron. Steady patrons spell profits.

Satisfaction based upon value received—every time—produces steady patrons. The steady, week after week buyer of theatre seats is the source of a balance on the right side of the bank book. You need that balance.

TRIANGLE PLAYS furnish satisfaction. They are based on superior quality. TRIANGLE Quality is beginning to have an exact significance in the motion picture world. It means what "sterling" means to silverware. You can bank on it. Its magic transforms the man or woman who "drop in" into "regulars."

Emerson said that if a man but made a better mousetrap than any other man, the world would crowd its way to him. We believe that TRIANGLE PLAYS are the best motion picture plays that can be produced, and the world is discovering it. Moreover, it is paying cash for the discovery. It is clamoring in the lobbies of theatres where TRIANGLE PLAYS are shown.

On the page to the right is proof of this statement—that TRIANGLE PLAYS bring increased box office returns. The only question that remains is—

DO YOU WANT MORE PROFITS?

Box Office Final Test of Triangle Quality

The man who pays the bill usually suffers no illusion as to the quality of what he buys. He looks at the results with the cold calculating eye of an adding machine—no sentiment whatever. Hence—

When expressions like these come to us we have to print them:

TRIANGLE FILM CORPORATION,
Cincinnati, Ohio.

TRIANGLE PLAYS were enthusiastically received at the opening today. I am as much gratified at the showing of these wonderful masterpieces as were my many patrons today. There was such a rush many people were unable to get in the theatre. I join you as a Triangle Booster and congratulate you on the high class showing made at this initial opening.

H. W. Kress,
Mays Opera House,
Piqua, Ohio.

It is expressions such as these that are being received every day. The number increases in proportion to the number of new theatres opening with TRIANGLE PLAYS.

takes up their grievances in person with his father and "boss." His father, on learning his identity, is overjoyed and makes him superintendent of the mills. Then Geoffrey secures justice for the mill workers. He marries Harmony, allowing her to think him a poor man until the very day he brings her into their beautiful home.

THE PEST VANOOSER (Dec. 29).—The cast: Mr. Bumptious (Albert Roccardi); Mr. Itsky (Harry Fisher); Mary, Apple Woman (Kate Price).

Mr. Bumptious, at his office, is pestered continually with all kinds of book agents, apple women, peddlers, etc., and after bouncing a particularly exasperating bookseller he desperately appeals to his inventor friend, Mr. Itsky, to invent some contrivance to rid himself of the troublesome callers. Itsky is right on the job and sketches out an invention which proves him to be a veritable genius. It is a long board arranged like a table, rigged up with pulleys, ropes and a lever near Bumptious' desk, which raises one end and slides whatever is on the board out of the window.

A book agent is the first victim, and when he carelessly places his hooks on the shelf Bumptious pulls the lever and the hooks slide out the window onto the head of a masher. His antics draw a crowd under the window, and when the apple woman comes in to pester Bumptious he pulls the lever and the basket of apples humps onto the heads of the people below. The same thing happens with a statue peddler. But Mr. Bumptious' cashier brings in the weekly payroll and lays it on the board, then accidentally hits the lever, resulting in a shower of greenbacks outside. Bumptious is wild, but his rich uncle, overwhelmed by his nephew's apparent largesse, rushes in and forces a large check upon him in appreciation. Then everybody's happy.

BY MIGHT OF HIS RIGHT (Dec. 31).—The cast: Henry (Sidney Drew); his wife (Mrs. Sidney Drew); Big Brother (Donald MacBride).

Henry and his little wife are as happy as two turtle doves until the sad day when "Big Brother" arrives with a bunch of suitcases, loud clothes and loud talk, to visit his married sister. Henry's wife is delighted to see Big Brother, but Henry isn't, although he doesn't dare to show it. Big Brother has a great habit of expatiating on his boxing accomplishments at college, and illustrating his discourse by using poor Henry as a punching bag. His wife is filled with admiration and Henry with a desire for revenge. He accordingly visits an old chum, Tony Trexel, a rich society man and boxing faddist, who is about to give a novelty gymnasium party.

Henry bribes a huge "pug" by the name of "Battler," who is to appear in an exhibition bout, to lay down at the proper time. Henry brings boasting Big Brother and wife along to the affair, and when "Battler" challenges anyone in the audience Henry jumps up and begins to put on the gloves. He knocks the fighter down with his trusty "right," and walks straight for Big Brother's chair, with a "you next" expression. That gentleman heats it, leaving Henry to the undisturbed love and admiration of his wife.

PERKIN'S PEP PRODUCER ("Chronicles of Bloom Center"—Dec. 20).—The cast: Constable Plum (Wm. Hutchison), Postmaster Pash (John Lancaster), Chubby Green (Ralph McComas), Johnny West (Sidney Smith), Percival Perkin (Wm. Fitchett), Lucy Perkin (Betty Nathan), Slim Boggs (Orhie Farris), Selina Tubbs (Martha Mattox), Mrs. Plum (Lyllian Brown Leighton).

Bloom Center is peaceful, but in Pleasant Grove, a nearby town, Percival Perkin is peddling Perkin's Pep Producer, a marvelous fluid guaranteed to make one feel like new. He is assisted by his pretty young wife and also Slim Boggs. The Bloom Center Bugle states that Bloom Center needs a trained nurse, and Percival Perkin decides that his wife, Lucy, should supply the demand of a nurse and do the advance advertising for the Producer.

The masculine characters of Bloom Center are at once interested when a beautiful young nurse arrives in their midst. Constable Plum is taken suddenly ill. Then Ira Pash becomes ill. Johnny West is also stricken, and Lucy, the nurse, is called to attend them all.

Slim arrives in the village, is taken really ill and the doctor pronounces the case smallpox, much to the consternation of the Bloom Centerites. In the midst of confusion Percival Perkin arrives with the wonderful "dope." He gives Slim a dose of whisky instead of the Pep Producer, which has beneficial results. The sales are numerous. When Pickle, Pash, West and Plum go behind the barn to drink the stuff, they find it quite different from the sample. It is too late, though, for the Perkins are far down the road toward the next town they will victimize.

HARTNEY MERWIN'S ADVENTURE (Dec. 20).—The cast: Hartney Merwin (Wm. Stowell), Hal Dart (Edwin Wallock), Grace Dart (Marion Warner).

Hartney Merwin believes there is no adventure or romance in present-day life, and places a bet with boon companions that he cannot get away from the conventional. Hal Dart, his chum, plots with his sister, Grace, to give Merwin the adventure he seeks.

Grace meets Merwin, refuses to give him her name and conducts him to a cottage that Merwin's clubmen friends have secured. There he sees a hand of supposed counterfeiters, who are really Dart and other clubmen in disguise. He summons the police and after a battle he rescues Grace and carries her to safety. The clubmen explain matters to the police and then go to their club to nurse the bruises they secured during the fight. En route home, Merwin and Grace visit the club and tell the men that they were married immediately after Merwin "rescued" Grace. The boys win the bet, but Merwin believes that the real joke is on them, because he won a charming wife.

THE SACRED TIGER OF AGRA (Jungle Zoo Picture—Dec. 25).—The cast: Jennie Harris (Vivian Reed), Joseph Harris (Mr. Von Harder), Rajah Hamurii (Edw. J. Piel), Omah (C. C. Holland).

Dr. Harris and his daughter, Jennie, incur the everlasting gratitude of Omah, a native of the jungle. Rajah Hamurii wishes to purchase the doctor's land, but they cannot agree on the price. In the meantime, the Sacred Tiger of Agra, which the Rajah worships, is released from its cage by a vindictive servant.

Dr. Harris dies suddenly and Jennie is left with only Omah to protect her. The Rajah learns of the doctor's death, purchases the land from Jennie and plots to secure her for himself. Omah urges Jennie to flee to the jungle. The two are followed by the Rajah and his men. Omah and Jennie come upon the Sacred Tiger, which is put to sleep with a powerful native drug. The Rajah overtakes Jennie, and is about to take her to his palace, when she thinks of the tiger. She offers to restore it to the Rajah if he will provide a guide to escort her to the settlement. The honor of the Rajah forces him to agree to this; Jennie starts for safety, while the Rajah rejoices over the recovery of the Sacred Tiger.

EDISON.

BLADE O' GRASS (Three Parts—Dec. 24).—The cast: Dorothy Ward (Loenie Flugrath); Dorothy Ward, as a child (Eldean Stewart); Emerson Peabody Winthrop (Pat O'Malley); John Ward (Charles Sutton); Mrs. Ward (Mabel Dwight); Aunt Catherine Van Schuyler (Mrs. Wallace Erskine); Catherine Van Schuyler (Grace Morrisson); David Travers (Guido Colucci); Jerome, a guide (T. Tamamoto); the butler (Joe Bingham).

Deserted by his wife, John Ward gives up his rich home in the city, and takes his baby daughter with him. Retreating into the woods of Maine, he builds a log cabin to house him and the child. Hunting in the forest by day, he spends his evenings teaching the child, and reading to her from books he has brought with him. The years roll on. Dorothy grows up, a child of nature, knowing all its secrets intimately. Emerson Winthrop, a wealthy New Yorker, comes to the Maine woods to camp. In a stream, he sees a vision glide by him in a canoe. Struck by the beauty of the girl, he seeks her acquaintance. She, unaccustomed to the sight of strangers, is frightened and coy, but he wins her confidence. Together they roam the woods, and slowly within her is awakened a strange indescribable feeling. Winthrop knows it also; but to him it is love. Ward, realizing that Dorothy is taken with Winthrop, compels him to return to the city.

Ward is beginning to reflect. A letter from his sister rebukes him for his injustice to Dorothy. "Because you have chosen to shut yourself from the companionship of men, there is no reason why a sweet girl should be deprived of the fullness of life"; so the letter reads. Ward agrees that his sister is right, and sends Dorothy to the city for the "polish" it gives. Dorothy's ways are not the ways of a great city. Accustomed to the freedom of the woods, she cannot live, confronted by the rules and stinted bounds of a great metropolis. She returns home to live once more the free life of the forest. Winthrop, whom she has met in the city and for whom her love has grown, follows her and takes up his camp in the woods again. Fate seems to demand that Winthrop shall follow her in spite of Ward's warning. After a fierce struggle, he saves her from the fiendish attack of a native woodsman, and so Ward is compelled to bow before the mandates of love.

THE MATCHMAKERS (Three Parts—Dec. 31).—The cast: Mamie Lane (Sally Crute); Pa Lane (William Wadsworth); Hugh Hardy (Carlton King); Bertie Van Loon (Paul Bliss); Alice Warren (Margaret Prussing); Aunt Catherine De Launcy (Leonora von Ottinger); Mr. Van Loon (Robert Brower); Mrs. Van Loon (Mrs. Wallace Erskine).

Mamie is the daughter of Pa Lane, postmaster and keeper of the general store in a little mining town. Hugh loves Mamie and Mamie loves Hugh. Therefore, when Hugh wants to go out prospecting for gold Pa Lane grub-stakes him. Hugh promises to divide his gold with Pa Lane—providing, of course, that he strikes gold. In New York the aristocratic Van Loons are broke. Work—horrors, no! Who ever heard of a Van Loon working? Their only hope lies in marrying their son, Bertie, to a girl of wealth. Their friend, Mrs. Catherine De Launcy, agrees to help them. But dear little Bertie is not what his name implies. He loves a girl—a poor girl, it is true, but he loves her.

Then the newspapers announce that Hugh has made a fortune and, true to his word, divided it with Pa Lane. Suddenly Mrs. De Launcy is struck—by a thought. Mamie Lane is her niece. She has it all planned out. Pa Lane gets an invitation from her to visit New York—and to bring Mamie. Like all Western millionaires, he makes the trip. Dissatisfied with Bertie's love affair and fearful of his marriage to the poor girl, Alice, Mrs. Van Loon pays her a visit. In eloquent style she pictures the terrible things that would happen if Alice, poor wretch, were to marry Bertie. Steeped in sorrow, Alice agrees to give him up.

When Mamie gets to the city with Pa Lane, Mrs. De Launcy and the Van Loons have it all fixed for Bertie to marry her. But Mamie sighs and thinks of Hugh, and Bertie sighs and thinks of Alice. Neither of the two can act, and each soon realizes that the other is in love with someone else. Immediately they have a common interest—not to marry each other. Pa Lane learns the truth. He sends for Hugh to come to the city. Also, he makes a few plans of his own without consulting the Van Loons. Mamie marries Hugh; Bertie marries Alice, and when Mr. Van Loon tries to object Pa Lane simply impresses upon him that a .44-caliber gun must be respected. Pa Lane takes the two young couples back home. Bertie gets a good job in Hugh's gold mine, and Pa Lane says that no Van Loon or any other fancy-named aristocrat can make a fool out of him—that is, him and his .44-caliber gun.

KALEM.

THE CARETAKER'S DILEMMA (Dec. 28).—The cast: Jean (Ethel Teare); Roland Way (William Clarke); his wife (Lillian Savage); Bud (Bud Duncan); Mac (Jack McDermott).

About to take a trip out of town, Mr. and Mrs. Way hire Bud and Mac as caretakers. Barely have the Ways left the house than the caretakers settle down to solve the problem of enjoying themselves. The two are discovering the meaning of solid comfort for the first time in their young lives, when Jean, Mrs. Way's cousin, arrives on a visit. Jean has never met Mr. Way and when she sees Mac, the girl throws her arms about him under the belief that he is her relative. This, much to the envy of Bud.

Poor Bud, relegated to the position of general factotum, has a hard time of it, until Jean expresses a desire to go automobiling. Since the two caretakers have possession of the key to the garage, it is an easy matter for them to oblige the fair miss. Bud, promoted to the position of chauffeur, proves himself to be worse at that task than at care-taking. After a wild ride that scares poor Jean and Mac out of at least ten years of life, Bud succeeds in bringing the machine home.

There a worse scare is in store for the caretakers. Filled with a feeling that all is not well, the Ways have suddenly returned. Jean meets Mrs. Way and is introduced to the latter's husband. Her story fills the Ways with rage and they make a dash for the culprits. With one accord, Bud and Mac tumble into the machine and break all records in speeding away!

THE TAKING OF STINGAREE (Episode No. 6 of the "Stingaree" Series—Two Parts—Dec. 29).—The cast: Stingaree (True Boardman); Howie (Paul C. Hurst); Ethel Porter (Marin Sais); Inspector Cairns (Thomas Lingham; Inspector Kilbride (Frank Jonasson); Miss Kilbride (Ollie Kirkby); Trooper Bowen (Edward Clisbee).

An intense rivalry exists between Inspectors Cairns and Kilbride, each being determined to have the honor of capturing Stingaree, the notorious bushranger. The outlaw learns that Ethel, his former sweetheart, is to sing at the station and determines to attend the concert. Trooper Bowen, of the Mounted Police, falls into Stingaree's hands after a duel in which the former is shot in the leg. Exchanging clothes with the man, Stingaree ventures forth and meets Kilbride. Cleverly hoodwinking the inspector, the bushranger takes him prisoner.

Cairns comes upon Stingaree after the outlaw has bound Kilbride to a tree. In the struggle which ensues, Stingaree is knocked unconscious. Cairns then seizes the opportunity to jeer at his helpless rival. Consequently, the man does not see the bushranger, who has revived, creeping up behind him. A few minutes later finds Cairns in a plight similar to Kilbride's. Leaving the men helpless, Stingaree rides to the station, arriving in time to hear Ethel sing. The girl sees the bushranger and her agitation is so great that she breaks down and is unable to continue. Mounting his horse, Stingaree rides to safety.

The following morning Kilbride's men receive a note from Stingaree which informs them of the whereabouts of the two inspectors. While the rescued chiefs pour out their wrath upon each other's head, the bushranger, unseen, watches the proceedings with glee.

THE SPY'S RUSE (Episode No. 10 of "The Ventures of Marguerite"—Dec. 31).—The cast: Marguerite (Marguerite Courtot); Peter Enright (Richard Purdon); Bob Winters (Bradley Barker); Kagler (R. A. Bennett); Wharton (Joseph Sullivan); Jones (Harry Edwards).

Bob's electrical torpedo deflector proves so successful in the tests conducted by the United States officials that the young man is informed of its adoption by the government. Wharton and Jones, employed by a foreign power, are eager to obtain possession of the device which embodies Bob's secret. To this end, the agents bribe Kagler, the inventor's assistant, to deliver this device up to them. Kagler knocks Bob unconscious and steals the invention. At the last moment, however, he determines to dispose of it himself. The man flees, pursued by Wharton and Jones. A shot fired after the fugitive strikes him in the arm. He is on the verge of being captured when chance leads Marguerite to his assistance.

The girl takes Kagler to her home. There the thief tells the heiress of how the foreign agents had attacked Bob and himself in their attempt to steal the invention. Bob appears while Kagler is telling his story. At the sight of the traitor Bob advances to attack him. Kagler escapes by leaping out of the window. Wharton and his accomplice, who have trailed the man to Marguerite's home, see him coming. Again Kagler eludes their grasp. Furious, Jones shoots and slays the man. A moment later, Bob and Marguerite appear upon the scene and hold the agents at bay until the police, attracted by the shooting arrive.

AT THE RISK OF HER LIFE (Episode No. 55 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—Jan. 1).—The cast: The operator at Lone Point (Helen Gibson); Tony, a half-breed Mexican (Frankline Hall); Jim, a cowboy (Robyn Adair).

Tony, a half-breed Mexican is kicked from pillar to post, but he grasps a chance for revenge on society when he peers through the station window and sees Helen, the operator at Lone Point, opening the express company bag containing a valuable shipment to a local rancher. Tony overpowers Helen and makes away with the package.

He runs down the track and comes to a train standing unguarded and climbs aboard. In a second he is tearing away at a great speed. Cowboys, aroused by Helen's cries, come to her rescue and she is released from her bonds. Helen, knowing of a short-cut, jumps on a horse and starts cross-country on a reckless ride. She reaches a stretch of track before the engine bearing the Mexican and climbs aboard a freight train on a parallel track. When the Mexican passes she jumps to the engine, grabs the bag, and leaps to the ground. The engine is going at great speed but it is soon brought to a stop and the Mexican starts on foot for her.

HIS REAL CHARACTER (Two Parts—Dec. 18).—The cast: Richard Livingston (William Clinley); Irene, his daughter (Edythe Sterling); Klint Martin (Sherman Bainbridge); Duncan (Norbert Myles); Klint's Father (Rex Roselli); Mrs. Wells (Lule Warrenton).

Richard Livingston, a wealthy cattle broker, is continually haunted by the fear that he will some day have to pay the penalty of his evil act toward his one-time cattle partner. Years ago he and a man named Martin, who, like himself, had been thrown out of work by a strike, became partners in the cattle business. They prospered and when an alluring offer was made for their holdings they accepted it. The knowledge of being in possession of so much money turned the mind of Livingston, who attacked Martin with a chair while he was asleep, took his share of the profit and left the country. The blow rendered Martin a cripple for life, and his son, Klint, vows to be avenged.

Livingston comes in possession of new cattle holdings which require his personal inspection and, with his motherless daughter, Irene, he starts for the property. Although neither one is known to the other, Klint is the foreman of Livingston's new cattle ranch. Klint, while a good man at heart, has developed a dual personality by reason of his nursing the vengeance to run down the culprit who injured his father. The men under him admire him for his squareness, but fear him when he is under the influence of his obsession. Duncan, a new man on the ranch and a tough character, breaks one of the iron-clad rules of the ranch by drinking during working hours. He is severely reprimanded by Klint, who takes the bottle of liquor away from him. Duncan resents and a fight is the result. Klint downs the malefactor just as Livingston and his daughter arrive. Assuming that the foreman is a brutal person, Irene rebukes him, and the words sink deep into him. A few days later Klint is the unseen witness of a crooked card deal given to Duncan, and he stops the men, who are about to shoot Duncan for having declared it to be a false play. Irene observes the action of Klint, who, in answer to her question why he defended his enemy, tells her that Duncan was playing a straight game. This act on the part of Klint is the means of Irene dropping her indifference to him, and she asks him why he does not try to conquer his brutal nature. It is then that Klint tells her of his decision to run down the man who injured his father.

Irene meets Klint's father one day, and in the course of the conversation she shows him a photograph of her father. Matin at once recognizes his enemy. Klint enters and hears everything. His hatred for Livingston is uncontrolable and he makes all haste for the latter's home. Outside Klint encounters Duncan, who has come for revenge, and as the two are fighting, Irene, who realizes that she must get to her father first in order to warn him, dashes away. Meanwhile Klint subdues Duncan, mounts a horse and is soon on his way to Livingston's home. Bent on revenge, Duncan follows Klint, but, being weakened by liquor, he guides the horse over a cliff, ending in the death of both horse and rider. Irene is successful in reaching her father's home before Klint, but not long enough ahead of him to give her father ample time to get out of sight. Klint overtakes him, but as Livingston is weakened by his obsession he is in no condition to resist Klint and faints in the arms of his enemy. Irene arrives at this time and manages to get Klint to spare her father. Through the mediation of Irene the two enemies are brought together. Between Irene and Klint there develops a mutual attraction, and a week later the four leave for the city and a future which promises to atone for the strife of the past.

WHEN ROGUES FALL OUT (Three Parts—Dec. 25).—The cast: Helen Holmes (Helen Holmes); Her Father (Mr. McDaniels); Frank Hynes (W. R. Weber); Ben White (L. D. Maloney).

Holmes, the president of the S. L. Railway, has been trying very hard to secure a new franchise for his company. Frank Hynes, an acquaintance of Helen, the daughter of Holmes, has been a friendly visitor at the house, but, unknown to Helen and her father, is trying in every way possible to prevent Holmes from obtaining the franchise. Hynes, some time later, learns that Holmes has obtained the franchise and, with the aid of Ben White, a dope fiend, and some of the latter's pals, the papers are stolen that night from Holmes' office.

Hynes is working hand in hand with some of the dissatisfied members of the board, who are trying in every way possible to oust Holmes from the presidency. He takes the papers to them and tells them that he can "railroad" the one man who is likely to squeal about getting the papers. Hynes then phones the police, giving them White's address and telling the police that they can capture him there. White, however, before giving the papers to Hynes had made a photographic copy of them. The police capture White and, through Hynes' testimony he is sent up for ten years. On the way to prison White jumps out of the car window into a boat and is assisted to escape by two of his friends.

Helen leaves for a trip to the beach and while there makes the acquaintance of White. As soon as White is settled in safety he wires Holmes asking what he will give for a copy of the franchise, giving a fictitious address for answer. Hynes learns of this and details detectives to locate White and rearrest him. They trace the message back and find that White is stopping at the same hotel with Helen. Hynes hastens to the beach and, confronting White, tells him that if he does not give him the papers that he will have him rearrested.

By means of a sleeping gas forced into his room White is rendered unconscious, but as he has a presentiment of coming trouble he writes a note telling where the papers can be found and drops it out of the window. Helen's maid, while dusting near the window, sees the note and gives it to her, and Helen, realizing the importance of the information to her father, starts out in a car to take it to him. Hynes learns of her mission and goes in pursuit. Helen, seeing that she is about to be overtaken by Hynes, succeeds in boarding a moving freight train, and, riding that for a short distance, jumps off on top of a street car. Hynes is thrown off the trail and Helen arrives home just as her father is about to be ousted from the presidency. White returns and confides all to Holmes. Hynes is then arrested and during the trial White is given his freedom. As the story ends, White is on the way toward leading a better life with the active assistance of Helen.

THE TERRIBLE TRUTH (Dec. 24).—The cast: Mary Anne (Myrtle Gonzalez); Dave Phelps (Mr. Allen); Tom Sanford (Arthur Shirley); Steve Redding (Val Paul).

Old Dave Phelps and his partner, Tom Sanford, are doing very well with their prospecting. Mary Anne, Phelps' daughter, is accustomed to bring her father's dinner to him every day and it has become Tom's habit to hask in the girl's presence whenever she came around. It was Phelp's fond hope that his daughter and partner would come to an understanding, but Mary Anne thought otherwise and while she was in love, it was with a man named Steve Redding, who was a loafer and hard drinker. Tom asks Mary Anne for her answer, and she tells him to call that night for it. On her way home she meets Steve and tells him, too, to call that night for her decision.

That night Mary Anne writes a note to Tom telling him that while she has always loved him as a brother, she can never come to love him as a husband. While she is writing Steve comes in much the worse for liquor and sees the note. He tries to read it and when Mary Anne refuses to read it to him his jealousy is aroused. In the struggle for the note it is torn and from the portion that Steve gets it appears that Mary Anne had written Tom that she loved him only. He leaves in a jealous rage and goes to the saloon. Tom comes in, but Mary Anne eludes him and follows Steve. She finds him in a saloon, drinking and carousing and caressing the girls of the dance hall. Crushed by the knowledge that Steve is not faithful, she returns home and meets Tom. In a moment of pique, she promises to marry him that night. He joyfully has the ceremony performed and they return to the house.

Steve learns of the wedding and seeks out Mary Anne. She is alone in the cabin when he enters and he calls her to task for marrying Tom. In the excitement Steve notices the torn portion of the note and compares with the portion he has. He realizes how much the girl loved him, and while trying to persuade her to elope with him, Tom enters. Steve is thrown out of the house, vowing vengeance. Tom takes down his pistol and seeks out Steve. Both fire at the same instant and grapple in an effort to kill each other. Mary Anne slowly comes to a realization that her love is for Tom. She hurries to the fighting men and tries to prevent Steve from throwing Tom over a cliff, but in vain. Steve then tries to take her, but she denounces him and tenderly assisting her bruised husband, helps him back to their cottage.

STRONGER THAN DEATH (Two Parts—Dec. 26).—The cast: June Lathrop (Louise Carbasse); Rupert Spaulding (M. K. Wilson); John Henshaw (A. Shirley); Attorney (Lon Chaney).

June Lathrop, an orphan, under the guardianship of Rupert Spaulding, a rejected suitor of her now deceased mother, meets John Henshaw, a young surgeon just home from college. Their attraction is mutual. June learns of the love her guardian bears for her. He tells her how he loved her mother in her youth, but delayed his proposal so long that she at length married Tom Lathrop, June's father. He tells June of her mother's dying wish that he care for her, which request he has so faithfully fulfilled through all the years. He now asks June to allow him to care for her all through life. She is at first inclined to refuse, but realizing his true love for her, she finally consents.

Spaulding does not live long and just before his death he enacts a promise from June that she will never marry again, having her make a written promise to that effect, which is filed with the other legal papers of the estate. Henshaw calls after Spaulding's death and again pleads his love, only to learn of June's promise. Spaulding's spirit hovers about his wife and she becomes a victim of sleepwalking. One night she falls from a balcony while asleep and suffers concussion of the brain. It happens that Henshaw, now a celebrated surgeon, receives the case and he sees that a very delicate and dangerous operation is necessary. While under the influence of the anaesthetic, June's spirit meets that of her dead husband. He tells her that he has witnessed her intense suffering and offers to free her from her promise. In spirit she follows him to the vault where the papers are laid, extracts the copy of June's written promise and it becomes ashes before her eyes. He then bids her an affectionate farewell and says she will never be troubled by him again.

Meanwhile, Henshaw and his assistants have been working feverishly to revive June from the influence of the anaesthetic. They finally bring her to consciousness. She does not know whether it has all been a dream or a spiritual reality. She orders her lawyers to bring the package of documents to her and upon opening it the lawyer and all present are dumbfounded to find the topmost slip which formerly bore the promise in the handwriting of June is indeed ashes. June now realizes that her dream has been a reality and that she is now free to marry the man she loves.

FROM BEANERY TO MILLIONS (Two parts—Dec. 22).—The cast: The waitress (Alice Howell); the father (Dick Smith).

When Alice's father dies, he wills her to a cafe owner, to whom he is indebted and Alice is forced to work in the cafe. She is befriended by a young man, who is heir to an immense fortune, and becomes his wife. The father disinherits his son for marrying Alice against his wishes, and they live in extreme poverty. Their son is injured by an automobile, in which his father is riding. He takes the child to its home and there meets his son and his wife. A reconciliation takes place and they go to live in the father's house. The cafe owner has lost his money and is working as a butler in the father's house, and when he sees Alice forces her to open the safe, steals the money and jewels in it and attempts to escape. A ball is in progress, and when the crime is discovered all give chase. The automobile in which the villain is riding blows up and when he comes down the money and jewels are recovered.

GREED AND GASOLINE (Dec. 26).—The cast: The husband (Reggie Morris); the wife (Gertrude Selby); the tramp (Dave Morris); his fat partner (Fatty Voss).

Reggie and Gertie, a newly married couple, have little cash but mortgage their home to buy an auto. Two lazy tramps scheme to make some money and one pretends to be hit by Reggie's car. The sympathetic young people bring him home and nurse him while he runs their house. Thinking he is seriously hurt, they humor his most extravagant whims and sleep on the uncomfortable parlor chairs while he reposes contentedly in their bed.

The next morning after a heavy breakfast he demands an invalid's wheel chair and hubby has to leave his office and hurry home with one. He arrives to find the tramp master of the house, while the little wife runs to obey his endless requests. Fearing a lawsuit and moved by sympathy, the young husband dares not protest and tries to bear the excessive demands with resignation. Later, the tramp's fat side partner arrives and they try to rob the house. The wife telephones to her husband and he arrives with officers in time to place the tramps under arrest.

CHRISTMAS MEMORIES (Three parts—Dec. 21).—The cast: Robert Harding (Robert Z. Leonard); Little Sunshine (Ella Hall); Reverend Baker (Marc Robbins); Beppo (Kingsley Benedict).

After the death of her mother, Little Sunshine, a child of the mountains, is left a pen-niless orphan. The Rev. Baker, who has been a friend of the girl and her mother, assumes a sort of friendly guardianship over her. Beppo, an Italian violinist, worships Little Sunshine. In the distant city Robert Harding, a clubman, leaves for the country on a fishing trip. One day while engaged in fishing a little hat comes floating down to him. He recovers it only to look up and see the owner—Little Sunshine herself—advancing toward him from up stream.

The attraction is mutual. Sunshine recovers the hat and there is promise of further meetings. The call of love is strong and before long a simple country wedding is celebrated. Little Sunshine leaves with her husband for the big city. Society and its conventions present difficulties to the little mountain maid which she has not suspected. After many months she misconstrues her husband's actions at a ball in their home and believes he no longer cares for her.

That night the inward struggle comes. Harding, returning from his club, finds Little Sunshine has disappeared. He fears the worst and is a little piqued at her actions of the previous weeks and her apparent inability to conform with the conventions of his accustomed existence. He throws himself into the whirl of dissipation in an effort to forget. Little Sunshine returns to the Rev. Baker and Beppo. Months pass and the kind minister learns that his former charge is about to become a mother.

Back in the city Harding, from time to time, feels the sting of remorse for his actions toward Little Sunshine, and is disgusted with the life he is leading. He learns what he had least expected when he comes across a little baby garment upon which his wife was working just before she left. He rushes away to the mountains, arrives at the little cabin and finds preparations have been made to celebrate the Christmas season. He rushes past Beppo at the door, through the room with its Christmas tree and to the door of the bedroom wherein Little Sunshine lies a mother. A joyful reconciliation follows.

POWERS.

THE FROLICS OF THE MARIONETTES (Dec. 9).—"The Frolics of the Marionettes" is a well-known vaudeville act. It consists in an arrangement of manikins in a setting representing a theater stage, and the boxes on either side of it. On the stage itself a vaudeville performance takes place, with manikins on strings, and the audience is represented by the manikins in different boxes. It is needless to say that Professor Charlarte's manikins posed gracefully, and without fear of the camera, for they refused to be frightened by anything so harmless. As the show on the stage goes on, we are given glimpses of the bold flirt in the left-hand box who refuses to watch the performance and the magician on the stage because of a wireless flirtation with a lady on the opposite side of the theater. He is sitting opposite an inebriated manikin, who barely escapes plunging from her second story box on every flirtatious glance of the lady, though none of them are intended for him. The performance on the stage is concluded with a dance in which the marionettes and their leading lady take part.

HOWARD'S MONARCHS OF THE AMERICAN FOREST (Dec. 23).—This is a picture version of a vaudeville act which consists of a group of black bears which were captured in the Rocky Mountains when cubs and made to respond to the will of Frank Howard, as a kitten would answer the call of its mistress. Although some of these animals weigh almost a thousand pounds, they are gentle and kind and have never been known to refuse to respond to the command of Mr. Howard or his wife, who assisted in putting the bears through their paces before the camera.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

GRAFT (Episode No. 2, "The Tenement House Evil"—Two Parts—Dec. 20).—The cast: Bruce Larnigan (Hobart Henley); Mrs. Larnigan (Nannie Wright); Roger Maxwell (L. M. Wells); Dorothy Maxwell (Jane Novak); Stanford Stone (Glen White); Anton Dow (Mr. Spooner); Mrs. Dow (Helen Orr).

Bruce Larnigan has been elected district attorney. His first move is a hot campaign waged against the tenement house evil. Supposed owners are warned, and they, in turn, pass the warning along to the "man higher up." Anton Dow is the head of a corporation handling the tenement property in the slums; also the cheap section of the "red light" district. This property pays them enormous dividends, as they spend no money on it in needed repairs and reforms. Dow calls a meeting of the Trust Syndicate and it is decided that Dow will either bribe Bruce or kill him. Dow knows it is useless to attempt to bribe Bruce and therefore plans to trap Bruce into an embarrassing intrigue. To this end he hires a woman of the underworld to tell Bruce of the evils existing in a certain house in lower New York—pointing out to him that he can only get the true facts by going there as a regular customer. Dow then plans to have the house raided and Bruce arrested.

Bruce makes several trips to the slums, investigating conditions at first-hand and relieving, where possible, the misery he finds about him. Dorothy Maxwell accompanies him on some of these trips and becomes much interested in the work; so much so that she organizes a Sunday school class in one section, renting a large storeroom at the top of a tenement for her school room. She has promised the children a real Christmas tree on Christmas eve. Mrs. Dow's two children beg their mother to let them accompany Dorothy to the tree on Christmas Eve and they are given their parents' consent. Bruce sends an ultimatum to the owners of tenement house property, which reaches Dow, to the effect that if fire escapes are not put on all buildings within thirty days, he will have the owners in jail.

Dow realizes that the time for action is at hand, so starts his plan for Bruce's downfall. Bruce leaves his preparation for the morrow—(it is Christmas Eve)—and goes with the woman. But, suspecting the trap, he has the commissioner of police follow him, the presence of the commissioner of police stops the officers from making an arrest. Dow steps forward, and insists on Bruce being taken to jail. This move is a bad one for Dow; Bruce sees in a flash that he is the man to go after. He denounces Dow and glories in the fact that the trap laid for him has resulted in his finding another member of the "Trust." Dow laughs, believing that his statements will not carry weight in the face of his present predicament. In the midst of the argument the fire department arrives across the street. Bruce sees the blaze, and, realizing the danger to the inmates, turns to Dow and shouts: "Man, there are scores of children in that building—one of your rotten tenements, without fire escapes—they were enjoying their first Christmas tree—and your own children are there with them."

Dow is beside himself with fright and grief. All rush to the rescue. Bruce saves the Dow children; Dorothy escapes carrying two little tots; a number of children are saved by jumping into life nets. The terrible experience makes a deep impression on Dow and he sets out to make all necessary changes for the safety and comfort of the tenants. His reform is complete. He promises Bruce that on the morrow at 9 A. M. he will join him in his fight on the trust. Stone, the head of the "Graft" Syndicate, overhears this and preparations are made to prevent the exposure, even at the sacrifice of one of their number. An infernal machine is placed in the clock at Bruce's office, attached to the works, so that it will explode at 9.05. Dow arrives for his confession and becomes a victim of his own system. Bruce has yielded to the wishes of his mother—to run home and have Christmas breakfast with her—and so escapes. The "trust" meets with two members from their accustomed places. They settle down in earnest to plan for the removal of Bruce from their path as the episode ends.

BR'DWAY UNIVERSAL FEATURE.

THE WHITE SCAR (Five Parts—December). The cast: Na-Ta-Nan-Gan (Hobart Bosworth); Wenonah (Anna Lehr); Mackintosh (Norval McGregor); Janet (Jane Novak); Robert (Frank Newburg); Henri (Ronald Bradbury); Red Pete (Seymour Zelliff).

Wenonah relates to her charge, a boy of twelve and the son of Na-Ta-Nan-Gan, a name which means, in the Indian tongue, "great trapper," a story of his father's early life.

Na-Ta-Nan-Gan is a great trapper and a friend of the Indians. Wenonah, a young Indian girl, has a deep affection for him. At the Hudson Bay trading post, where Na-Ta-Nan-Gan goes to dispose of his skins, he meets Janet, the daughter of Mackintosh, the factor, and a mutual attraction develops at the sight of each. It has been decided, however, that Janet is to marry Henri, a French Canadian, who has coveted her with a primitive passion which has held the girl in awe at times. Henri steals the skins left with Mackintosh, and gives them to Red Pete, a renegade, to hide. The factor misses the skins, and Robert, his son, voices his suspicions. Henri hears that he is being accused, and to get revenge places the stolen property in the mail bag which Robert is to take out. Mackintosh accuses Henri, who transfers the charge to Robert. The skins are found in the bag, and Mackintosh decrees that his son must be dealt with according to the law of the North. He is forthwith given La Longe Traverse, which means that the lawbreaker shall be sent for three days into the wilderness without means of sustenance.

Na-Ta-Nan-Gan learns of the incident and sacrifices his reputation for the sake of the brother of the girl he loves by declaring that he put the skins in the mail bag. He is imprisoned, but late that night is released by Janet and her brother Robert, who had been called back. At the suggestion of Robert, Janet and Na-Ta-Nan-Gan then hasten away and are married. The Indian friends of Na-Ta-Nan-Gan, learning of his sacrifice, set out to find him and eventually come upon him and his bride and offer assistance. A child is born to the pair and he is known to the Indians as "Starlight." Back at the post, Red Pete makes a dying confession that Henri is the real culprit, and Mackintosh, seeing his error, sends his men to locate Na-Ta-Nan-Gan and Janet.

Henri is sent on La Longe Traverse, and days later he is found in an exhausted condition by Wenonah. He tells her that Red Pete made a confession before his death that he (Red Pete) committed the crime, and that he was sent in search of Na-Ta-Nan-Gan and Janet. Believing his story to be true, Wenonah directs him to the hut wherein lives the missing couple, and to them Henri tells the same story. Days later, when Henri and Na-Ta-Nan-Gan are on a trapping expedition, the old covetousness of the former's nature to possess Janet comes to the surface, and he throws his benefactor over a cliff. Henri tells Janet that her husband met his death by accident, and pleads with her to let him protect her. Believing that it will be the best for her child, Janet consents, and they leave the vicinity. Wenonah discovers Na-Ta-Nan-Gan and nurses him back to health. Hearing what his wife has done, he believes that she is unfaithful to him, and vows to kill both Henri and Janet.

Meanwhile Mackintosh's searching party comes upon Na-Ta-Nan-Gan and learn the sad news from him. Instead of taking Janet back to her father, which he had promised to do, Henri stops for several days at a distant trading post. Janet is heartbroken by a letter purporting to come from her father which Henri shows her and which denounces her. She agrees to marry Henri, and just as the ceremony is about to take place, they are confronted by Na-Ta-Nan-Gan, Wenonah and Robert, who had started out in search of them. Henri is about to kill Na-Ta-Nan-Gan when Wenonah throws herself in front of him, and receives a bad wound. Na-Ta-Nan-Gan kills the criminal and, hearing the story in full, he realizes the innocence of Janet. Back at the post, old Mackintosh, bent low with years, awaits the return of his beloved. Joyous indeed is the meeting.

As the story ends, Wenonah solemnly points to the white scar upon her neck, and tells her little charge that it was made by the knife of Henri when she was willing to give herself that his father might live.

FATHER AND THE BOYS (Five Parts—Dec. 20).—The cast: Lemuel Morewood (Digby Bell); William Rufus Morwood (H. Ham); Thos. Jefferson Morewood (Bud Chase); Major Didsworth (Hayward Mack); Tobias Ford (H. Davenport); Tuck Bartholomew (Lon Chaney); Bessie Brayton (Louise Carbasse); Emily Donelson (Yona Landowska); Frances Berkeley (Mae Gaston).

Lemuel Morewood is a wealthy business man to whom riches bring no pleasure because he has entirely lost the sympathy of his sons, for whom he lives. Billy is society mad and completely enthralled by Mrs. Bruce Guilford, a leader of the smart set. Tom thinks of nothing but sport. He is an amateur athlete of national prominence. Lemuel longs to see the boys interested in the business. He escepially wants Tom to marry Frances Berkeley and Billy to marry Emily Donelson. But the boys will have none of them.

Bessie Brayton is a Western orphan who has come to New York and taken up society entertaining for a living. Her only property is a half interest in the Bluebird mine, which she supposes is worthless. The Morewoods employ Bessie one evening to entertain at an exclusive dinner they are giving, and here Bessie meets Major Bellamy Didsworth, who offers to sell her half interest for her.

Lemuel has run away from this dinner. But, goaded by Bessie's taunts that he is old-fashioned, he gets into his evening clothes and enters into the gambling that follows. Bessie encourages him and he cleans up on Didsworth, as the others look on, staggered by his plunging. Leaving them dazed, Lemuel makes a spectacular exit with Bessie to "blow his winnings."

Lemuel keeps up the pace he has set. He goes to the races and there his conduct is so riotous, and his followers, Bessie and a sporting man, so conspicuous that Mrs. Bruce Guildford is scandalized. She criticises Lemuel to his son. Billy defends his father, and the quarrel results in a complete break. Bessie has a telegram from Didsworth saying he can get $1,000 for her stock. Lemuel suspects that Didsworth is planning to rob her and takes the matter in his own hands. He and Bessie go out to Nevada together.

Lemuel's sons think he has run away to get married to Bessie, and they follow—with Emily, Frances and Ford, the family lawyer. Out in Nevada, Lemuel and Bessie find that her half of the Bluebird is worth at least $75,000, and—they discover that the other half is owned by Carl Higbee, Bessie's old sweetheart who disappeared in Alaska.

On the way to Nevada, Tom becomes engaged to Emily and Billy to Frances—which is exactly contrary to what Lemuel planned. They arrive in time to stop the wedding, as they think, and are mortified to learn that they are all wrong, and that Bessie is to be married to Higbee. Lemuel is delighted that his sons are going to bring the girls into the family, even though they have shifted partners. Lemuel agrees to go back and help the boys run the business.

WHEN LOVE LAUGHS (Dec. 21).—The cast: David (Matt Moore); Jane (Jane Gail); Bessie (Bettie Riggs); John (William O'Neil).

David and Jane are in love, but each suspects that the other is not true. Jane employs Bessie to meet David and put him to the test by trying to induce him to make love to her. David employs John to make love to Jane, to see if she will accept his attentions. The scheme progresses better than was expected.

John persuades Jane to elope, although her conscience tells her to stick to David. Likewise Bessie persuades David to elope with her. Autos are employed for the elopement, and both take place at the same hour. The autos collide at a crossing, and Jane steps right out and accuses David of unfaithfulnes. David draws himself up to his full height and makes the same charge against Jane.

David and Jane walk with their respective partners and quarrel. They reach the train so wrapped up in each other they cannot be separated, so finish their honeymoons by eloping with each other. And John and Bessie are left flat. We then learn that John and Bessie planned the two elopements and the auto wreck to bring David and Jane to their senses through jealousy. John and Bessie have been sweethearts all along without the audience having known that they were even acquainted.

LOVE AND A SAVAGE (Dec. 20).—The cast: Betty (Betty Compson); Her Mother (Stelia Adams); Her Father (Harry Rattenberry); Eddie (Eddie Lyons); Lee (Lee Moran); Chef (Gus Alexander); Maid (Jane Waller); Missionary (Harry Lyons); The Other Girl (Ethel Lynn).

Inspired by a feeling of brotherly love for the heathen, Betty has offered herself as a missionary to foreign lands. Mother is enthusiastic over the self-sacrifice of her daughter, while father agrees that it will redound to the family's credit. Eddie, Betty's lover, does not relish the plan at all.

Eddie's friend, Lee, and Ethel, Betty's chum, are in a fair way to get married. Lee accompanies Eddie into a saloon to help him drown his sorrow, and while they are talking Eddie gets a brilliant idea. He calls a friend to his aid and the two have a big laugh, not telling Lee what it is all about. Lee is persuaded to go to Eddie's room and they make him swear to help them out before they tell him the secret. He swears and then they prepare to make a "savage" out of him.

Eddie pleads so hard that Lee allows them to paint and dress him to resemble a heathen. The missionary is called to their aid and he assists them in placing Lee in Betty's house. Betty is told that he is an unfortunate heathen and she must practice on him. The chef takes him in tow and there is a riot. The chef and the maid are in the throes of a love affair and the "savage" does much to make their life a misery. Eddie calls and is told about the "savage," and he thinks it is a fine way to get Betty used to her new calling. When Lee's girl calls to spend the night with Betty the "savage" wants to throw the game, but is compelled by main force to retain his role.

The savage makes an awful hit during the meal; in fact, he hits the chef over the head with the turkey, and the meal breaks up in disorder. That night Betty wants to show off the "savage" to her guests, but he is incorrigible and there is a row. Betty decides that a missionary's life is not what it is cut out to be, and next morning decides that she will be satisfied to stay at home. She calls Eddie up and tells him the news. He removes the disguise from Lee and takes him along to witness the reconciliation. When Lee finds his girl still at Betty's home there is a happy reunion all around and the four hearts are in a fair way to beat as one.

THE OPERA SINGER'S ROMANCE (Dec. 18).—The cast: Jane (Gale Henry); Her Sweetheart (William Franey); Pumpernickle (Max Asher); Chorus Girl (Lillian Peacock).

Jane lives in a small town and is in love with a country boy. A show troupe comes to town and the boy takes her to the show. Jane falls in love with the tenor of the opera, who is a German of the name of Pumpernickle, and decides to marry him or no one. She turns down her country lover.

The next day she appears at the opera house for a position in the chorus. This is given her for the sum of ten dollars. That evening she practices dancing at home, and her mother, thinking she has St. Vitus dance, administers paregoric. Her initiation in the chorus proves her hopelessness as a dancer. However, she sends the tenor a basket of flowers. The country lover transfers the flowers and puts in their place cabbage, onions and other vegetables. Instead of being angry, the tenor is pleased with the vegetables.

As he is kissing Jane's hand a stout German woman appears with one or two children; she is angry and indignant, and proceeds to beat him with the contents of the vegetable basket, announcing to Jane that he is her husband. Terrified, Jane flees amid a shower of onions. That evening her country lover brings her a peace offering of a bantam egg, which, in the excitement of his reconciliation, he breaks in his pocket. Jane is cured of the stage and decides to settle down in her one-horse town.

THE TALE OF THE "C" (Three Parts—Dec. 24).—The cast: Mary Carpenter (Mary Fuller); Peter Cooper (Paul Panzer); The Widow (Marie Shotwell); Prof. Von Munsternberg (Charles Ogle).

Mary Carpenter goes to the seashore for a change in air. Peter Cooper, a wealthy young idler, arrives at the same hotel. Both Peter and Mary have grips bearing the same initial, a large "C," and careless bellboys mix the two so that when Peter arrives in his room and proceeds to unpack, he discovers amid a quantity of dainty lingeries ponderous volumes on the "Planets" and "Advanced Astronomy," by a Prof. Carl Von Munsternberg. Remembering the pretty girl he saw registering, he returns the grip to the desk after slipping in a best seller, "The Road to Love," that he has been reading en route. At the same time Mary arrives with his grip, in which she has found an assortment of pipes and pajamas.

When Mary returns to her room and discovers "The Road to Love" she is at first indignant, but soon starts to read it. Peter, meanwhile, meets in the lobby a young widow who has long set her cap for him, and, knowing she will lay in wait for him, he tries to devise some scheme for meeting Mary and avoiding the widow. He finds Mary next day seated on the sand reading the book he gave her, but she pretends not to see him. Thereupon he determines to disguise himself as Prof. Von Munsternberg so that she will take notice of him. He has a number of cards printed bearing the name of Carl Von Munsternberg, Doctor of Astronomy, University of Carlsbad. Disguised, he returns to the beach and drops one of his cards near her. Picking it up, she believes he is the great professor, and engages him in conversation.

Next day Peter, in his disguise, finds Mary awaiting him. He tells her that he wants her to test "The Power of Attraction." He asks her if there is any one upon whom she wishes to fasten her "thought vibrations." She mentions a certain young man in the hotel, and he tells her to concentrate her thoughts on him that evening. Peter dances with the widow that evening. He sees Mary following the professor's instructions, calling Peter to her—that is, mentally. Peter stops dancing and leaves the widow. He goes to Mary and asks her if she called him. Mary is overcome and cannot answer him, but turns and goes to her room full of excitement at her apparent success.

Meanhwile the real Prof. Von Munsternberg has arrived from Carlshad. The guests at the hotel agree to take a boat trip. The real professor is invited to take the trip with them. The widow with her jewel case, the detective who has been engaged to watch the jewels and the sneak thief, who hopes for an opportunity to steal them, all embark. Peter in the astronomer's guise, also sets sail likewise. Mary looks out for Peter, who seems to be nowhere in evidence.

Peter, however, in his professional disguise takes Mary aside and talks to her of the stars. Von Munsternberg overhears him and, much amused at his astronomical ignorance, inquires his name. Peter produces one of his cards. The professor reads his own name on it, and decides that Peter is a dangerous imposter.

The thief, meanwhile, has managed to creep into the widow's stateroom and secure the jewels, which he hides under his coat, hut, fearing a search, he slips the jewel box into Peter's telescope box. The widow discovers the theft, while Peter and Mary are star-gazing. The widow hurries to the detective, and the real Von Munsternberg, overhearing their conversation, is now confident that Peter is the thief, tells them of the imposter, and they decide to search him.

While they search the bag and find the jewels, Von Munsternberg tears off Peter's false whiskers, and, to Mary's horror, it is Peter who stands before her. No sooner have the jewels been set down, when the thief creeps up and steals them. As they are handcuffing Peter the widow catches sight of the thief diving from the side of the boat and they all start in pursuit. Peter begs for permission to go in pursuit also. This is granted, and he dives after the thief, captures him, restores the jewels to the widow, explains to the group the real reason of his prank, and they forgive him—all but Mary. It is not until he has convinced her that it was his only chance of winning her that she yields to forgive him.

LAEMMLE.

THE GREAT FEAR (Dec. 22).—The cast: Mrs. O'Grady (Lule Warrenton); Peggy O'Grady (Gloria Fonda); Kitty O'Grady (Elsie Maison); Larry Moore (William C. Dowlan); Reddy (Eugene Walsh); Art Paget (William Quinn).

Larry Moore, who has a small grocery store, is in love with Peggy O'Grady, who lives in a poor tenement over his store. Peggy, while she likes Larry, is rather fascinated by the better-dressed fellows who go in for "swell times." Peggy's mother, Mrs. O'Grady, takes in washing and one morning, while ironing, she leaves a hot flatiron on a shirt, and when she returns she finds that the shirt is scorched. Peggy looks at the shirt, and, finding it is worn out, tells her mother that only a 'cheap skate" would make her pay for it.

After Peggy leaves Mrs. O'Grady delivers the washing, which belongs to Ed Sumner. He is furious over the scorched shirt and refuses to pay for the washing. When the day's work is over at the department store Peggy is introduced to Ed and, with other companions, they go to a cheap cafe for dinner. The others try vainly to get Peggy to drink, but she refuses and starts home early. Ed takes her for a taxi drive, which she enjoys so thoroughly that she forgets that Ed has tried to be a little too familiar. The folks at home, meanwhile, has been much worried over Peggy's unaccustomed delay.

Peggy arrives home and stops in Larry's grocery store to tell of her adventure, Ed following her in Soon Mrs. O'Grady enters the store and is delighted to see Peggy, who tells her mother of the grand time she has had. She stops talking as she notices the terrible anger in her mother's face, who is looking at Ed. Mrs. O'Grady then tells how Ed has refused to pay her, and Peggy is dumfounded. Her amazement changes to rage, and she grabs a whip from Reddy and lays it across Ed's shoulders and compels him to pay her mother. Then turning to Larry, she tells him to "put him out." Larry throws him out, and Peggy, who has been perilously near the downward course, finds comfort and consolation in the true love of Larry.

ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO (Two Parts—Dec. 23).—Rodney Lane (Rupert Julian); Evelyn Gilbert (Dorothy Davenport).

Humphrey Lane is a gentleman of the old school and a lifelong friend of his neighbor, Mr. Gilbert. Their favorite idea is to perpetuate their friendship by a marriage between Lane's son, Rodney, and Gilbert's daughter, Evelyn. The son and daughter have no objection, as they already love each other without waiting for the sanction of their parents. While the two fathers drink to the proposed marriage the young couple are strolling in the garden. The old darkey butler summons them to hear the old men's plan, and a betrothal follows. After a supper of celebration the young couple wander off while the fathers discuss politics. They disagree and a violent quarrel ensues. All thought of the marriage between their children is now at an end, and the lovers are ruthlessly parted by the old men. Evelyn implores her father to relent, but in vain. Sorrow-stricken, she returns to her rooms, where she falls unconscious, overcome with grief. As the days go on she grows weaker and weaker. She implores her father to let her see Rodney, but he is obdurate.

Downstairs the old man writes in his diary the record of his obstinacy and says that his pride will not let him yield. He keeps the diary in a secret panel in the chimneypiece. A week later Rodney, after a scene with his father, in which he tries to change the old man's resolve, determines to take matters into his own hands. He goes to Gilbert to apologize in his father's stead. But he comes too late. Evelyn has succumbed to her grief and the father can only tell Rodney that she is dead. Rodney, in his misery, wildly curses Gilbert, who, overwhelmed with remorse, shoots himself as the clock strikes twelve, after recording the outcome of his pride in his diary and leaving a warning for his descendants.

One hundred years later Edythe Gilbert, his descendant and heiress to the old home, where she has lived with her father, is in love with young Arnold, but her father favors another lover. The lovers plan to elope, but as she joins Arnold that night in his automobile she is seen by Rodney's rival, who hurriedly summons her father. They start in an automobile in pursuit of the lovers. Edythe and Arnold reach the minister's house and Arnold goes in to arrange their marriage, leaving Edythe in the car. Her father and his favorite arrive while Arnold is gone, and insist upon her returning with them. Arnold coming out sees them and follows them home. In the hall of the old house Edythe runs to him, and an angry scene is about to ensue, when the clock strikes twelve. The shade of the ancestor Gilbert appears. He goes to the secret panel and reveals the diary. Hardly able to believe his eyes, Edythe's father takes the book and reads there the warning against obdurate pride. He gives way, and the lovers are restored to each other.

THANHOUSER.

AN INNOCENT TRAITOR (Two Parts—Dec. 14).—The cast: Colonel Archer (Wayne Arey); his wife (Carrie Niblack); doctor (William P. Burt); nurse, (Kathryn Adams); daughters (Marion and Madeline Fairbanks).

Twin daughters were born to the wife of an army lieutenant. It chanced that the doctor who was called to attend the case was secretly the spy for a foreign government. The nurse was in league with him. They alone were present when the children came into the world, and before the mother had recovered from the anesthetic, the doctor and the nurse had successfully kidnapped one of the twins. A startling idea had prompted their act.

Some twelve years later, they were able to put their scheme into practice. The spies, with their young charge, were sent to America to secure information concerning the country's defenses. They learned that the former lieutenant, now a colonel, the father of their ward, was in possession of the maps and plans they required. It was arranged that Marion should spy upon her own family. Her resemblance to the girl at the army post was explained to her as a mere coincidence. The wardrobe of Colonel Archer's daughter was skilfully copied, and one day, when Madeline left the house, Marion slipped in, and passed herself off to her own father as her twin. When the officer was called out of the library, this clever young spy copied the plans of the fort, and made her escape.

In a secluded corner of the grounds, however, she was seen by one of the officers, examining the plans. The outcome was that the colonel was accused of intrusting to his daughter, for delivery outside the fort, valuable government secrets. Meanwhile Marion had discovered the real truth about her parentage and native land. At the point of a pistol she drove the two spies into the courtroom, where her stirring testimony cleared her father's name and restored her to her family.

THE NECKLACE OF PEARLS (Dec. 19).—The cast: The banker (Thomas A. Curran); his wife (Ethyle Cooke); the crook (Sully Guard); woman crook (Ethel Jewett); detective (Wayne Arey).

Two crooks steal a hundred-thousand-dollar pearl necklace from the wife of a banker, while crossing the ocean. They fasten the pearls around the neck of a big black cat which they have in their stateroom, and tie a white satin ribbon over the jewels. When the ship reaches New York the little daughter of the banker demands to see the new kitten which her mother has promised to bring her from abroad. The mother is so worried over the loss of the necklace, however, that she hardly can hear what the child is saying. She pleads hysterically with the detective summoned by wireless to find the gems.

Meanwhile, her little daughter has found on the wharf a basket containing a big black kitten. She gets through the lines with it to her mother's automobile. The crooks, by this time, have discovered the loss of their cat. They find another basket, however, containing a maltese kitten, and tagged with the name and address of the little girl. Leaving all their baggage on the pier, they hastily follow on her trail. Such indifference to all their belongings, and an apparent insane desire to recover a lost cat, arouses the suspicions of the detective. He pursues the crooks. At the little girl's house they learn that the child has gone to a cat show in the neighborhood, where she is presentiug her new feline pet for a prize.

The detective shadows the pair to the show. The place is crowded. But presently the intruders manage to work their way up to the wire enclosures, where several hundred beautiful cats are mewing for popular favor. Suddenly the two crooks push their way over and lay violent hands on the black cat, which is sitting bolt upright on a blue cushion in a familiar hasket. The child utters a cry of dismay, and reaches out for her pet. In the confusion, the white satin bow becomes untied. The little girl's father, who has hurried up, seizes from the cat's fur the necklace of pearls. The crooks are arrested. And the little girl is surprised to find that she now has two beautiful kittens—the black one and the new maltese.

FALSTAFF.

BILLY BUNKS, THE BANDIT (Dec. 16).—The cast: The girl (Barhara Gilroy); the foreman (Claude Cooper); the cook, his rival (Arthur Cunningham); Bill (Burnett Parker).

The foreman and cook both are frantically in love with Belle, tbe ranch owner's daughter. She, heartily sick of their attentions, answers the advertisement of "a rugged young gentleman" in the East, who "yearns for a life in the open" and wants a wife. The two rivals join forces to "fix" the newcomer. They hire a pair of fierce handits, at large in the hills, to kill "the rugged young gentleman" in return for a hag of gold dust. When, however, the cook and the foreman see Belle's prospective hushand alight from the train, they decide to save their gold dust and do the job themselves. "The Insect," alias "Bill, the rugged young gentleman," obdiently mounts the horse which Belle leads up, and ahout thirty seconds later, is clinging desperately to the saddle horn while the flying animal bears him over the plains.

At last the girl succeeds in stopping the runaway. "We modern ranchmen use automohiles," explains the young man from the East. And the girl smiles at him in admiration. Meanwhile, the handits have discovered that they have been done out of their job. They are driving the cook and the foreman before them, bound and helpless, when—Snap The ropes ahout the wrists of the rivals are severed in twain. The handits turn to fight their unseen foe. Wiff! Off goes the hat of the sheriff, on the trail of the handits. Angry, he wheels about and runs right into his quarry. The hero of the wahbly gun and closed eyes rides up with the ranch owner's daughter. "I shot off your hat, sheriff," he announced cheerfully, "to attract your attention to my prisoners." And he gets away with it! Belle marries her hero.

William Deportment was a grave man. He had heen a grave hoy, and when he grew into manhood he acquired much wealth, a reputation for austerity, and a long, white beard. He was a star at funerals or religious ceremonies. William had a daughter who had many suitors. There was one who won her heart, but father frowned on the suit.

But even good men have their days of misfortune, and trouble came to Wiliam. He had been in New York on a husiness trip, and after boarding the train on his way home lost his ticket and wallet out of the window. The conductor told William to pay or get off the train, and gave him a few minutes grace while he collected the other tickets. Willam took advantage of this hy hiding under the seat, only to be detected and hurled off the train while it was in motion. William hobbled along to the nearest station and sent a collect message to his daughter, 200 miles away, ordering her to forward him funds. A little later he got the answer, his daughter had eloped and the house had been burned down. There was no one to pay for the message, and the telegrapher demanded payment.

The bearded lady in the local dime museum had left suddenly to see her grandchild, "the only haby horn with whiskers," and the museum proprietor was glad to give William's whiskers a chance to work. He speedily decked him out in a dress, and the unhappy William joined the other freaks on the platform. Just about this time the old man's daughter and fiance arrived in the little town hunting a minister. By sheer good luck the son-in-law-elect saw the new bearded lady, rescued him from his novel surroundings and brought him to his daughter with the message: "Your father was so anxious to see our wedding that he dropped off here on his way home."

What could William do? If he sent the young man away he would tell how William's whiskers had worked in a side show. So William, being a prudent as well as a stern old man, blessed the young couple and expressed joy in the marriage they contemplated. The bride never knew the story, and she wondered often why it was that her husband never suffered from the severity with which William had been accustomed to treat others who came within his circle.

TOODLES, TOM AND TROUBLE (Dec. 23).—The cast: Tom (Colin Campbell); Toodles (Baby Gereghty); Trouble Lady (Dog).

Toodles was a very attractive baby who was idolized hy all its relatives, particularly his mother, his grandmother and, last but not least, his youthful aunt. The young aunt was worshipped in turn by Tom, an energetic young husiucss man who hoped soon to make her his wife. An unusually attractive hargain sale tempted the women folks of Toodles' family, and they left their home, leaving the baby in Tom's charge. The young man was anxious to please his sweetheart, and so he took the baby to the park as its fond mother had directed, and there the trouhle began.

Tom met a young man in the park that he knew, and leaving the baby fast asleep on a bench strolled off for a short distance, and during his absence an officious individual took charge of the infant and set out in search of its parents. A little girl placed her doll on the bench that had been occupied by the baby and promptly deserted it. A frolicsome dog saw the doll, seized it in his mouth and ran off with it, but not before Tom saw him, and at once came to the conclusion that the baby was heing borne off by a ferocious canine.

A furious pursuit took place, for Tom realized that if anything happened to the child that his sweetheart would never forgive him. The dog with his "precious burden" ran directly in front of a swiftly speeding automohile and escaped death by a miracle, but the animal ran blithely on, dodging a trolley car, which almost ended the career of Tom, the mad pursuer. A coal scoop raised the doll high in air, and as the young man climhed up to rescue "the baby" the scoop opened and dropped the doll to the coal beneath, where it was promptly seized hy the dog, who ran off again. These were only a few of the adventures which hefell the dog, the doll and Tom, hut a great explosion in a ouarry finally ended the career of the doll and the dog, and all that Tom could find of the remains was the dog's tail and a lock of the doll's hair.

He grieved greatly, for he felt that he was responsible for the baby's death. He did not know that the baby was very much alive, and that the officious individual who had taken charge of it was having the time of his life trving to get some one to take it off his hands. Tom sadly returned to the park, and his grief turned to joy when Toodles was restored to him, hut he wasn't a bit happier than the officious person, who had had visions of landing in a prison cell for kidnapping the infant. Tom was warmly thanked for his care of the infant, and he took the praise with becoming modesty, but he was mighty glad of one thing, and that was that Toodles was too young to talk—for if Toodles could have told of his experiences!

THAN-O-PLAY.

HIS MAJESTY THE KING (Three Parts—Dec. 18).—To the Princess Helen, who had reached the mature age of five, he was only "My dear little Baby Brother." To residents of Ilicia he was "King Alfonso VII," their much heloved King.

The young ruler was only a few months old and his uncle, the wicked Regent, determined to take the throne for himself. Through his command of the army, he was enahled to cause an uprising, and the reins of authority quickly changed hands. The Regent had also exnected to seize the baby monarch, but the child was saved because of the bravery of a young officer and the Lady of Honor, attached to the person of the Princess Helen. The officer smuggled them out of the Palace and when overtaken hy troops of the usurper, stood them off in a single-handed fight, long eonugh to enable the children and the Lady of Honor to escape. Their defender was finally overnowered and taken hack to the capital a prisoner.

The fugitives found refuge in a neighboring kingdom, and although the usurper sought them, his messengers returned without any information. Believing he could learn the secret from the young officer, the usurper gave him his choice of two propositions: one was to reveal the hiding-place of the living King; the other, to maintain silence and die as a traitor. The prisoner chose the latter alternative and was led out for execution. Through the assistance of an old retainer, he managed to escape from the firing squad and was believed to have fled over the border. The facts were that he remained in the capital, in disguise, and secretly arranged with other followers of the rightful King for an uprising that would dethrone the wicked Regent. Their plans were successful, but they found that their enemy was not at the end of his resources. He told them that the hiding place of the King had been discovered and men he trusted sent with orders to slay him.

This plot would have been carried out had it not been that the bright Lady of Honor again outwitted them. She put a dummy in the Baby's bed when the soldiers forced their way into the room, the Princess Helen slipped out with the baby, mounted her horse and rode rapidly away. The Lady of Honor gained a few precious moments by parleying with the intruders and the children were safely out of sight before the trick of the dummy baby was discovered.

Within a few hours, the followers of the rightful King arrived and the Lady of Honor accompanied them to the hiding place she had picked out. At the door of the cottage they were met by the Princess Helen, who held up her hand and said in warning tones:

"His Majesty the King has just completed his bath."

The noble visitors entered the room. There they knelt in homage before "His Majesty," who was gurgling with delight, while a peasant woman completed his bath in a matter of fact fashion.

RELIANCE STAR FEATURE.

HER MOTHER'S DAUGHTER (Three Parts—Dec. 8).—The cast: Marie (Dorothy Gish); her mother (Mary Alden); her grandfather (F. A. Turner); the mother superior (Miss Lee); the nephew (W. E. Lawrence).

Marie is a village girl, very religious. Her mother, fearing some man will make her unhappy (as she had been made by a man) made her promise on her death-bed that she would enter a nunnery. Marie considers that promise sacred and will allow nothing to interfere with her keeping that promise. Her grandfather is charged with seeing that she keeps her word, and his advice having been refused by his own daughter—Marie's mother—he intends that this time it will be heeded.

Meeting and loving a young man visiting her village (a nephew of the village priest), Marie rebels against giving him up and, sealing herself up in a nunnery for life. But her promise to her mother stands between and her grandfather chides her and tries to force her to a realization that breaking the promise she made would mean everlasting damnation. She is still undecided, however, and grandfather, to save her soul, falsely accuses the young man of being untrue to her and by a ruse proves it to her and she is forced to believe. The crafty old man also falsely proves to the young man, by a forged note, that she is untrue and is going into the nunnery to expiate her sin. Broken-hearted, the young man goes away and equally broken-hearted, Marie goes into the nunnery and is on probation until she is considered fit to become a full-fledged nun. Later, she becomes a nun in full orders, the youngest of the convent.

The young man, a musician, writes a great opera and marries the star as a marriage of convenience, and lives not far from the convent. His wife does not love him. He realizes her motive for marrying him and is unhappy. He lives only in the dear, dead past and in dreams of Marie, whom he has never ceased to love. He has hidden away the forged letter the uncle wrote and often takes it out and weeps over it. Marie, too, even in full orders, cannot always forget him. At night in her cell she weeps and pours forth her agony of soul and heart and prays for peace from its suffering, and finally finds it completely in her religious life and affairs and puts the man out of her heart completely.

One day the uncle dies and tells the priest of his act in separating Marie and the boy. The priest tells Mother Superior, who is afraid to tell Marie; but she has overheard and realizes the position she and the young man are in, but is content, although sorry for the young man. Later, the young man's wife lies ill and is dying. A nun is delegated to nurse her and Marie is sent. The young man and Marie meet face to face across the bedside of the dying wife. Marie tells the young man of the truth of the affair, and he urges on her that her vows were taken under a misapprehension.

The wife dies; Dorothy refuses the love and happiness thus offered her; and finally renounces her love and goes back to the convent. Some years late, show Dorothy in the garden of the convent—telling her beads. Outside is the young man—alone—walking past the walls of the convent. He goes on and up upon a hill which looks down upon the convent. The garden can be seen from there. Dorothy can see the hill from her garden spot. She sees a figure on the hill; it holds out its arms to her; she gazes; then turns away; he, too, turns away. And that is how they live their lives—apart.

THE BANKHURST VICTORY (Two Parts—Dec. 19).—The cast: Remar, the detective (A. D. Sears); Philip Hanson (Alfred Paget); Reginald Mason (Jack Brammell); Mrs. Mason (Irene Hunt); Mrs. Hanson, alias Eleanor Brown (Margie Wilson).

Reginald Mason, manager of J. Jacard & Son, jewelers, conspires with Jim Hanson to steal the famous Kaffire diamond. This celebrated gem recently has been recovered from crooks by Remar, the detective, and placed in the vaults of Jacard & Son. Mrs. Mason overhears the plot, and pleads with her husband not to commit the theft. Failing to move him, she slips out that evening and talks to Hanson.

The next morning Mrs. Mason's body is found in the shrubbery. Hanson, believing himself safe, summons Remar, who makes a brief examination and then declares that the woman has been stabbed. Her husband is accused of her murder. Hanson's wife is masquerading at the hotel as "Miss Eleanor Brown." Remar sees her leave the hotel with Mason. The detective follows. Later, returning unseen to his room, he watches through a hole which he has previously made in the curtain, the interior of Hanson's room. He sees Mason hand Hanson the Kaffire diamond. That night, Remar tries all the shoes, left out in the hall to be shined, and finds that Hanson's fit the plaster cast of the footprint. Early next morning he summons his assistant. Scarcely has he returned to his room, when he sees Hanson and the supposed "Miss Brown" leaving in an automobile. He realizes that Hanson is making his getaway with his wife.

Remar dashes into a taxicab and gives pursuit. He overtakes the crooks, and leaping onto the running board of their machine, points his pistol at the driver's head. Hanson stabs the detective, and Remar is left unconscious by the roadside. Here he is found and revived by his assistant. The two give chase in the assistant's racing machine. Hanson and "Miss Brown" are captured at the depot. Remar sends his aide to arrest Mason. The eminent detective recovers the Kaffire diamond and restores it to Jacard & Son before they discover that the priceless valuable has been stolen.

THE HOLD-UP (Dec. 17).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Cyclone Pete (George George); Mr. Weston (Jefferson Osborne); Mr. Ashton, his friend (Louis FitzRoy); Mrs. Weston, his wife (Janet Sully); Bessie, his daughter (Belle Bennett).

After enjoying a hearty meal on the veranda of a swell cafe, the wherewithal for which has been obtained by a new means of appropriation, Jerry dispatches a note to his sweetheart, Bessie, requesting her to meet him at "the bench" at 3 o'clock. The note falls into the hands of Mrs. Weston before it reaches her husband and, engaged at Jerry's nonchalant references to her provider, makes preparations for Jerry's reception. After locking Bessie in her room, Mr. Weston proceeds to the bench designated by Jerry and there, heavily veiled, awaits his coming. Too intent to notice anything amiss, Jerry proceeds to embrace the veiled woman, whom he assumes is Bessie. He is soon brought to a realization of a mistake, however, for Mrs. Weston uses a rolling-pin with telling effect.

Jerry's cries attract the attention of Mr. Weston, who has been entertaining Mr. Ashton over liquid refreshments served in the summer garden. Armed with empty beer bottles, they rush to the scene. Their efforts to quell the disturbance are not quite successful, for in its course Mrs. Weston is knocked out, Mr. Weston suffers several smashes as does Mr. Ashton, and Jerry escapes. Bessie, in the meantime, has been busy. She has a note delivered by her maid advising Jerry that her mother has planned a long auto trip and adds that he might come to her rescue if he loves her. Accordingly Jerry assumes right to a burro standing conveniently near and starts off on his mission of rescue.

Along the road Jerry spies Cyclone Pete, a Mexican bandit. The sight of him forebodes evil, so Jerry dismounts and hides. Hardly has he done so when the Weston auto party comes into view. Pete quickly springs from his hiding place, covers the party with a gun and then compels them to drop their valuables into his hat. Jerry sees a chance to become a hero. Creeping back of the unsuspecting Pete, Jerry

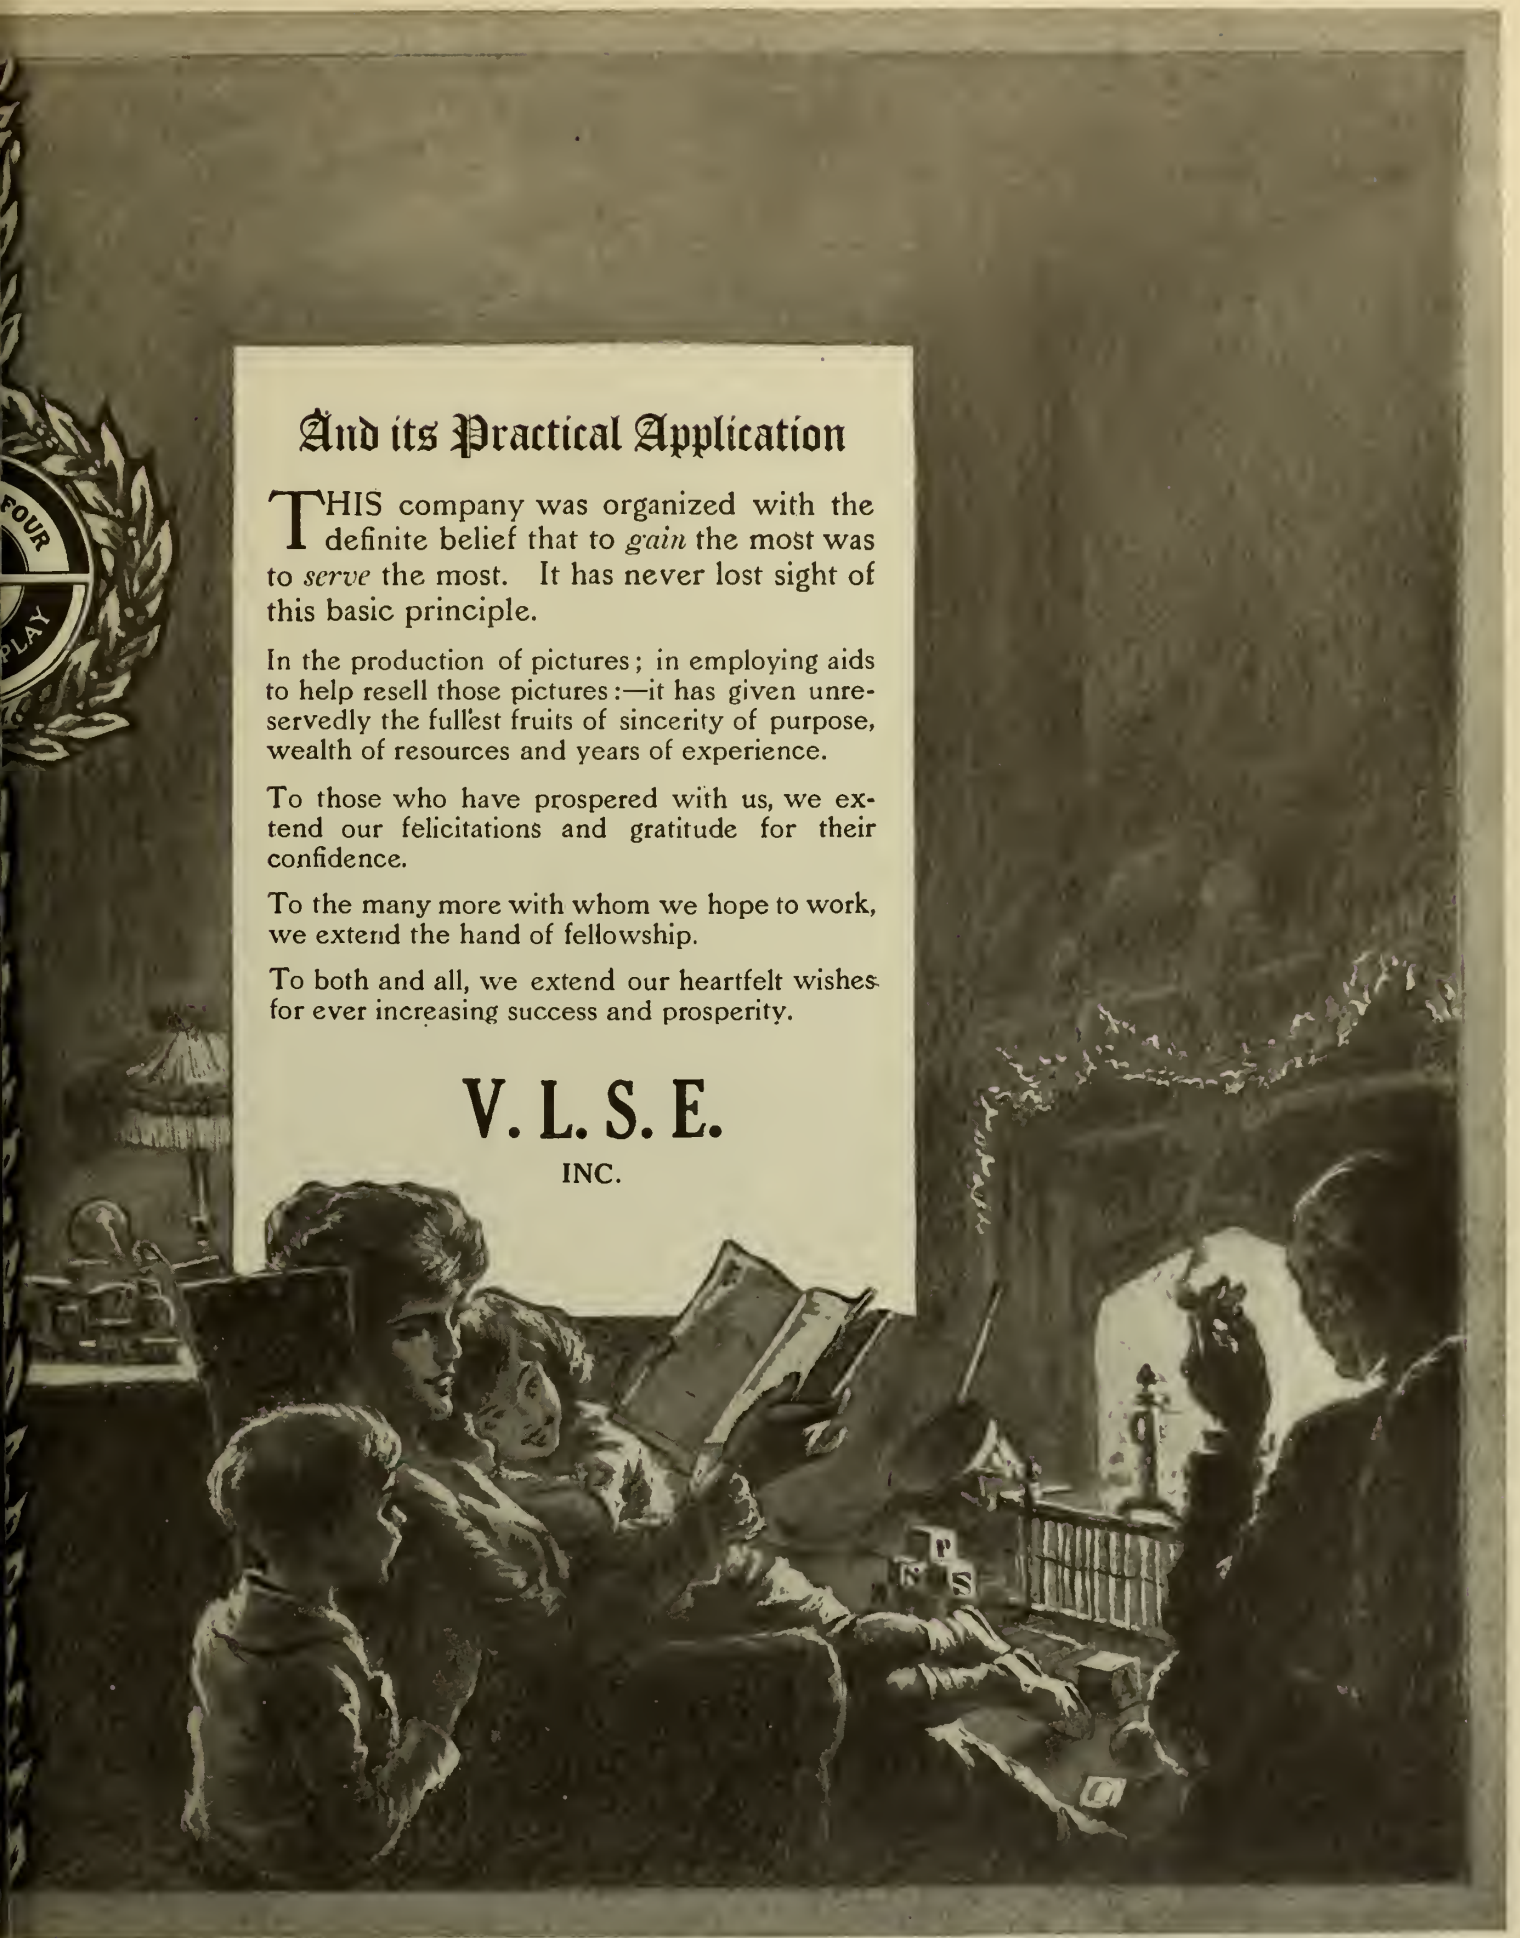
The Spirit of Christmas—
COMES now the time of giving—the happiest of all joys.
And comes, too, a little more forcibly than at any other season of the year, the realization that we get in life what we give.
A man must contribute to the stock of human happiness before he can participate in its profits, because happiness goes out from the heart before it comes in—
It never by any chance stays at home. You can harvest it, but you cannot hoard it. You can lend it, but you cannot borrow it. You can earn it, but you cannot buy it.
To seek it without giving it, is a futile quest, "and all our longings for what we have not learned to give others will be as empty bottles in the wine cellar of the soul."
The happy man is the man possessed of a simple, honest desire to make all those happy whose lives touch him.



And its Practical Application

THIS company was organized with the definite belief that to gain the most was to serve the most. It has never lost sight of this basic principle.

In the production of pictures; in employing aids to help resell those pictures:—it has given unreservedly the fullest fruits of sincerity of purpose, wealth of resources and years of experience.

To those who have prospered with us, we extend our felicitations and gratitude for their confidence.

To the many more with whom we hope to work, we extend the hand of fellowship.

To both and all, we extend our heartfelt wishes for ever increasing success and prosperity.

uses an improvised billy quite well and succeeds in recouping the lost valuables. Mr. Weston congratulates him and invites him to take the trip with them, but Mrs. Weston rescinds the invitation by throwing Jerry out of the car. By this time Pete has started to revive. Noticing this, Jerry takes the Mexican's horse and is off on a whirl while Pete starts back on the hurro.

A stop is made at a country hotel. Pete arrives a little later, finds his horse in the stable and immediately starts out for Jerry. Jerry is elusive, so there is nothing for Pete to do but to use his gun. In a few minutes' time he has the occupants of the place panic-stricken and is well on the way towards accomplishing his revenge when the police call an end to the riot.

MUSTANG.

THE PITCH OF CHANCE (Two Parts—Dec. 24). The cast: Nan (Helene Rosson); Kentuck (Jack Richardson); Kate (Lizette Thorne); Rocky Scott (Frank Borzage).

"Rocky" Scott is a reckless, exuberant character, who has a strong propensity for gambling. Kentuck is a calm mannered, cool headed gambler; a Southerner with a fanatical sense of honor in regard to his business and the rules of the game, but with a dominating undercurrent of hardness in his nature. Nan is a misfit member of the cow camp coterie. She shows the marks of finer breeding, but under the pressure of the domination of Kentuck does not know how to break away from it. She lives in an irregular way with Kentuck and serves as look-out at his faro table. Kate is the leader of the dance hall contingent. She is infatuated with Kentuck, and with dogged persistence attempts to replace Nan in his affections. Nan's indifference only strengthens her feeling of bitterness toward her, until her big-hearted sympathies are touched by Nan's helpless, unprotected state.

Rocky comes to the camp and enters upon a gambling and drinking spree. He becomes fascinated by Nan. At Kentuck's table he wins everything and leaves Kentuck stranded. Then, under the excitement of his success and luck he proposes to Kentuck to stake all of his winnings against the girl belonging to Kentuck, and taunts him into a mood to take the bet. Rocky wins and takes the girl away with him. This act turns Nan's indifference into bitter hate toward Kentuck. Also in this Kate sees her chance at last to win Kentuck. Driven by fear, Nan follows Rocky. But at their camp that night she makes a desperate stand and cools Rocky's ardor into a feeling of disgust and shame for his action. Her plea brings out all that is good in Rocky, and the next morning takes her back to the camp.

In the meantime, Kentuck has decided to hunt Rocky down and kill him. When Nan is left at the edge of the town she discovers Kentuck's intention and hurries back to warn Rocky. On the return from the warning she meets Kentuck starting up the trail and tells him that Rocky is coming odwn to meet him. The two men hunt each other on the twisting mountain road. Both are wounded but Kentuck is completely disabled. Rocky brings him back. The relations of Nan and Kentuck are at an end; but at this point Kate steps in and seizes the opportunity to express her devotion by taking her place at Kentuck's side. Rocky takes some encouragement from the fact that Nan would come back to warn him. He states his wish to win Nan in an honorable way. She has seen the real decency of the man at heart, and realizing that she herself has not been entirely above reproach, is willing to encourage the spark of love that has sprung up between them. She tells Rocky that she will wait for him.

AUTHOR! AUTHOR! (Three Parts—Dec. 25).—The cast: Buck Parvin (Art Acord); Marcellus Peckinpaw (Rea Berger); Peter Lone Wolf (Chief Big Tree); James Montague (Larry Peyton) Myrtle Manners (Dixie Stratton); Jack La Ru (Ashton Dearholt); Ben Leslie (Joe Massey); Charlie Dupree (Hardy Gibson).

Marcellus Peckinpaw is the celebrated author of a best seller hook, "The Lure of the West." Peckinpaw is offered a handsome sum by the president of the Titan Motion Picture Company for the film rights to his masterful writing. In addition to the money named, Peckinpaw insists that he be allowed personally to superintend the production of the picture. Accordingly, when Director Montague is ready to proceed with a selection of types for the production, Peckinpaw arrives at the studio and had luck camps on Montague's trail. Peckinpaw's knowledge of the West is limited to observations from a Pullman window and a visit to a Wild West show.

Despite his ignorance, the author insists on having things done his way and each thriller that Montague plans to inject in the picture is spoiled by the obdurate author's insistence "it isn't in my hook—it isn't in my book." Friction between author and director becomes acute and Monty, driven half frantic, declares, "I'll give fifty dollars to be rid of the pestiferous man of letters." Buck Parvin, cowboy actor, hears Monty's statement and concocts a plan.

Solomnly Buck tells Peckinpaw of the ferocious bloodthirstiness of Peter Lone Wolf, a real Indian who is a member of the company. Buck fixes it with the Indian, who, in reality, is as civilized as Peckinpaw himself, and Peter Lone Wolf agrees to aid Buck in his designs on the thoroughly hated author. Buck fills the latter full of wierd stories of Lone Wolf's warpath antics until the writer jumps half out of his skin at the slightest unusual sound.

In the distance is heard a rumbling roar and then a whoop, and over a hill, in full war paint and feathers, comes Peter Lone Wolf. The whole company disperses. There is a mad scramble and all but Peckinpaw reach a place of safety. The Indian singles out the author and pursues the little man until he hides up to his waist in slime. Then Lone Wolf returns to camp and he and Buck and others of the company split their sides with laughter at Peckinpaw's expense.

After dark a weary and bedraggled author crawls into camp and makes his way to the director's tent, where he hears familiar voices. He listens. Peter Lone Wolf is diparaging Peckinpaw as a writer and his hook as a work in fluent and well-chosen words of English. Peckinpaw hears Peter say, "When I was at Harvard," and then a great light dawns upon him. He realizes he has been duped, and decides to return to civilization. Amid roars of laughter, Buck agrees to split the fifty "fifty-fifty" with Peter Lone Wolf, provided of course, he can collect from the mirth-shaken Monty.

THE CLEAN-UP (Two Parts—Dec. 20).—The cast: Miriam Barker (Winifred Greenwood); George Prescott (Frank Borzage); Allan Hale (George Field); Claire Durand (Lizette Thorne); John Barker (Al Fordyce).

Miriam is the daughter of John Barker, a wealthy politician. She is engaged to wed George Prescott, a young newspaper reporter, who is employed on a newspaper which represents the better interests of the city. Prescott is assigned to expose gambling conditions, and he incurs the enmity of his prospective father-in-law, who secretly profits to a vast extent by the gambling, which flourishes in the city.

Miriam hears Prescott denounce her father as a grafter, and she forthwith breaks their engagement. Miriam takes up with what is known as the "fast society" set, and she is introduced at a fashionable gaming house conducted by Allan Hale and Claire Durand, two suave, polished and cool-blooded individuals, who fast are growing rich through their gambling activities. The mania for games of chance grows on Miriam. She becomes deeply involved financially.

Meanwhile Prescott, in his search for gambling evidence, has come upon the fashionable resort. A raid is planned and executed, and among those captured is Miriam, who tearfully falls on her father's neck and confesses her indiscretions. Then John Barker is led to see the evil that gambling can work, and he announces himself as a reform candidate at the coming elections. "Clean-up" is his party's by-word, and through the energy of Prescott and his paper the "clean-up" party wins. Prescott and Miriam renew their friendship and are betrothed. They receive the blessing of the grateful John Barker.

RIALTO STAR FEATURE

THE ACE OF DEATH (Three Parts—Dec. 15).—The cast: Paula Castellar (Stella Hammerstein); Ricardo Castellar (Henry W. Pemberton); Felix Castellar (Leonard Craske); Doris (Kathleen Butler); Theresa (Flavia Arcaro); Belton (John Reinhard); Mali (James Levering); Steve (Sydney Mason); Messenger (Jimmie Davis).

Paula Castellar owns two gambling places—one a disreputable den on a back street of an American city, with an underground passage to a more fashionable resort. Finding that her fading beauty is causing her to lose patrons in her fashionable gambling hall, she secures Doris Fenwick to preside at the gaming table.

Doris is rescued from a suicide's death by Paula just after she has pawned a diamond necklace, received at her room in the hotel by mistake, and lost the money at cards. Paula redeems the necklace, which she recognizes as once having belonged to her. Putting the necklace back in its original package, she seeks the woman to whom it belongs. At sight of her Paula recognizes the woman is Theresa Castellar, now a woman of fifty and a morphine fiend. She doesn't reveal herself to Theresa, but in her own mind goes over the events which led to the loss of the necklace years ago. Theresa had fallen in love with Paula's husband. Upon being repulsed her love had turned to hate and she had caused the Ace of Death to be given him at a meeting of patriots, sworn to sacrifice their lives for their country. Having taken the forced card, Paula's husband had gone out to his death. The card had been given by a gambler named Beltou, who was under Theresa's influence. After the death of Paula's husband the two had fled from Central America, where she and her husband then lived. First Theresa had set Paula's child adrift at sea and robbed her of the precious diamond necklace.

After recovering from the shock of these several misfortunes Paula had gone to the United States and haunted its gambling houses in the hope that she might find Theresa and Belton. She now determines to use Doris to revenge herself on Theresa. Belton, who is still with Theresa, becomes a frequenter of the gambling house and falls madly in love with Doris. Paula plays upon Theresa's jealousy, and by a message which seems accidentally to fall into her hands Paula lures Theresa to the gambling house just after Belton has been dealt the Ace of Death At last the two are in Paula's power.

Just as Paula has declared that either Theresa or Belton must die, leaving the choice to them, Doris enters, wearing a locket which had been about her neck when she had been set adrift at sea. Paula recognizes that the girl is her own daughter. Overjoyed at finding life yet has happiness in store for her, she allows Theresa and Belton to escape the doom she had planned. However, their freedom was brief, as Theresa, a few hours later, while crazed because she cannot secure the drug to which she had become addicted, kills Belton and then herself. Paula closes her gambling houses and determines to live the rest of her life for her daughter.

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURE.

THE MILL ON THE FLOSS (Thanhouser—Five Parts—Dec. 16).—The cast: Maggie Tulliver (Mignon Anderson); Tom Tulliver (Harris Gordou); their father (W. Eugene Moore); their mother (Fannie Hoyt; Philip Wakem (George Marlo); his father (lawyer) (Arthur Bauer); lawyer's clerk (Leo Wirth); Steven (Boyd Marshall).

The Tullivers had owned "The Mill on the Floss" for generations, and there was a tradition that if the mill, instead of passing from father to son, was sold to another family the Floss would overflow its banks and destroy the mill. Tulliver, the impetuous mill owner, was devoted to his wife and two children, a boy and a girl, Tom, the son, had already shown signs of a strong will, and resembled his father greatly, while Maggie, the little daughter, while a very affectionate child, was wild and mischievous. One of the sorrows of Mrs. Tulliver's life was that her daughter's hair did not curl. Lucy, Maggie's cousin, had beautiful blonde curls.

The Tulivers entertained their relatives at dinner. Maggie, who had heard her father say to one of the guests that if her hair was cut it would lie smooth, determined to cut off the troublesome hair. After considerable urging she succeeded in inducing Tom to perform the task. The reckoning came when the shorn Maggie appeared before her surprised family. Her father was the only one who sympathized with her. During a visit to Tom at his boarding school Maggie made a new friend in Philip Wakem, her brother's crippled schoolmate, and the son of Lawyer Wakem, her father's bitter enemy. Philip had considerable talent as an artist and he made an excellent sketch of Maggie. Maggie returned to her home, but the memory of her visit was treasured by the little cripple.

Maggie's father had good cause to regard Lawyer Wakem with suspicion. For years he had cast longing eyes at "The Mill on the Floss," but Tulliver had firmly refused to sell it. The Miller's hot temper was well known to the lawyer, and he planned by arousing it to secure the property he coveted. So, as the representative of a neighboring mill owner he managed to embroil Tulliver in a lawsuit. The miller mortgaged his mill to prosecute the case, and when it was decided against him the mill was sold to pay his debts, and Wakem, who secretly held the mortgage on the mill, took possession. Philip, Wakem's son, pitying the Tullivers plight, induced his father to make the former mill owner the manager of the property he had once possessed. The miller would have refused the position but he had to care for his wife and family, so he went to work for Wakem, but he made his son swear undying enmity to the lawyer. Meanwhile Maggie and Philip frequently saw each other and the devotion of the lawyer's crippled son to the daughter of the miller became more marked. Philip finaly told Maggie that he loved her and asked her to marry him. She told him that she had not thought of it, that she regarded him only as a highly honored friend.

Tom Tulliver cherished a deep hatred against the Wakems, and when, by chance, he discovered Philip and Maggie strolling along the shore together, he angrily threatened Philip with violence. The cripple was powerless to fight Tom, and he might have met with serious injury if Maggie had not told him that he must never see her again, without her brother's consent. Maggie's wish was his law and he promised. The miller and his family worked incessantly in an effort to obtain sufficient money to buy the mill back from Wakem. At last an investment which Tom had made with Bob, a former employee of the mill, returned huge profits. Joy over the unexpected news was too much for the miller, and when he met Wakem on the road, his long smouldering resentment against the arrogant lawyer flared up. A quarrel ensued and Tulliver struck Wakem to the ground. The lawyer was not badly injured, but Tulliver overwrought by his sufferings and bis sudden triumph, was taken seriously ill and died that night.

Tom bought tbe mill, but he still cherished resentment against Wakem and his crippled son Phil. Maggie was true to her promise not to see Philip. Phllip was happy in Maggie's company until a rival appeared in the person of Stephen Guest, the son of a wealthy man. Philip noticed the growing attraction between Maggie and Stephen, and, desiring her happiness even at the cost of his own, so contrived it that Stephen took Maggie rowing. On the trip Stephen made love to Maggie and urged her to marry him, but although she loved him, also she reminded him that he was pledged to Lucy, her cousin, and refused to listen to him. When they returned to town the tongue of gossip had done its deadly work and life became very hard for Maggie. Her friends turned against her, and Tom, her brother, ordered her from their home. Her mother was loyal and offered to go away with her, but this Maggie would not allow, telling her to stay with Tom. Bob, the former mill hand, brought her to his little home.

In the evening Maggie read over two letters. One was from Stephen, urging her to wait for him, saying that he would soon come to claim her; the other was a pathetic letter from Philip, the cripple, telling her that he could not blame her for loving Stephen. She thought of the two men, the one she loved and the one she pitied, and realized that it was best that both should pass out of her life. Dropping on her knees, she prayed to be restored to the love of her brother.

Her prayer was answered the following day. There had been a heavy rainfall for many days, and when the morning dawned the Floss had overrun its banks and a raging torrent descended upon the land. Maggie awoke to the realization that the water had risen to her bedroom window. Boats were brought, and the people in tbe house escaped, while Maggie rowed to the mill to find her mother and brother. Tom was alone in the mill, his motber having left the day before to visit relatives. He realized how he misjudged his sister. The current of the flood was too strong for Tom and Maggie to combat and several hours later their bodies were found in the wreckage in a close embrace.

THE PAINTED SOUL (Five parts—Dec. 23).—The cast: Irene Brock (Miss Bessie Barriscale); Barnard, the young artist (Charles E. Ray); bis mother (Truly Shattuck).

Barnard completes a study in oils which he calls "The Resurrection." It represents a beautiful, dark woman, her awakened soul shining from her eyes. At a private exhibit in studio the painting causes a great deal of admiring comment, and Barnard's mother, a society leader and an art connoisseur, admits to her son that he virtually "imprisoned a woman's soul" in the canvas. The soul of the picture, a few days later, stirs to the depths of her being a sordid girl of the underworld whom Barnard has found in the night courts and persuaded to become his model for "The Fallen Woman." Irene Brock, once she has met the rapt, spiritual gaze of Barnard's ideal, involuntarily revolts against the hideousness of her environment. The trade she has been accustomed to ply in saloon dance-halls and low resorts becomes a torture to her.

Day by day Irene watches the new painting grow. But she is changing. Barnard, feeling that something is unsatisfactory, and that he will be unable to paint from his model "The Fallen Woman" of his imagination, reluctantly brings the sittings to a close. The moment of parting precipitates an emotional crisis. Love, for the first time, has dawned in the girl's soul, and Barnard, moved by a profound sympathy, takes her in his arms. It is in this position that the young artist's mother finds them. She diplomatically conceals her horror, while smilingly asserting that "that could never be." Irene goes away, struggling to be resigned. But the young artist, fired by a self-sacrificing love, refuses to let this end the episode. At last, the mother seeks Irene in her squalid lodging. "Such a marriage," she pleads with the girl, "would make my son a social outcast. Even your love could not always make him forget."

The soul of "The Resurrection" working upon her heart, and controlled also by her deep love for Barnard, Irene promises to cure him of his passion. That same night she deliberately gives herself up to a detective an old enemy of hers. The following morning she sends for Barnard to come to the night court and pay her fine. He goes. She is brought before the judge. To the charge, she replies, "I am guilty." Silently, Barnard lays the money on the desk. Outside, in the corridor, they meet. By sheer force of will, she resists the almost overwhelming impulse to fling herself in his arms and tell him the entire story of her deception. The next instant, with a murmured good-by, he turns and rushes out of doors. That evening Irene slips into the deserted studio, and stands long before the painting of "The Resurrection." From these wonderful eyes she imbibes strength for her lonely struggle with the world.

BEAUTY.

MAKING A MAN OF JOHNNY (Dec. 21).—The cast: John (John Steppling); Johnny (John Sheehan); Carol (Carol Halloway).

John Steppling, a wealthy bachelor, visits a summer resort, where he becomes captivated by the winsomeness of Carol, a sprightly bathing girl. John's sister writes that her son Johnny is too good to be true, so she asks John to take the boy in hand and make a man of him. John consents and tells his bathing beach sweetheart that his newsphew, an awful simp, is coming for a visit. In due time Johnny arrives. The first person he meets is Carol.

Johnny proves anything but a simp, and he and Carol become friends at first sight. She tells Johnny what his uncle has said, and Johnny arranges to act the part of the simp he is supposed to be. Johnny meets uncle and the latter endeavors to throw the youth into the society of girls as much as possible. Johnny pretends to be very shy, at which uncle is very much annoyed.

Despite his famed shyness, however, Johnny falls in love with Carol, and learns that his uncle is his rival for the girl's hand. Johnny asks his uncle, "If you were in love with a girl and there was another fellow, what would you do?" Uncle emphatically answers, "Marry her, you simp." Whereupon Johnny proceeds to follow the good advice. He and Carol are wedded and they return to uncle's presence. That person promptly collapses when he learns the truth.

THAT COUNTRY GAL (Dec. 25).—The cast: The Girl (Miss Neva Gerber); Her Aunt, (Lucille Warde); Her Uncle (William Carroll); Their Daughter (Nan Christy).

The country gal decides to visit the city, and uncle and aunt are so informed. They are horror-stricken, for they think, of course, that the country gal is a first-water boob. She, however, is an up-to-the-minute young lady—vivacious, stylish and pretty, and her uncle, who has gone to the station to meet her, immediately starts a flirtation, not dreaming the object of his glances is in reality his niece.

All sorts of complications arise, until the country gal has uncle and aunt and cousin literaly eating out of her hands. In other words, she has something on each of the trio, and each of the three, fearing that the country gal may tell, more than shower attentions upon her. Uncle and aunt and cousin each break their necks, figuratively speaking, to wait on the once despised rural relative.

CASINO.

HUNTING (Dec. 26).—The cast: Lord Fitzroy Camembert ("Bud" Ross); Count de Gorgonzola (Edward Boulden); Gladys Gladiola (Jenny Nelson); Reginald Astorbilt (Phln Nares).

Lord Fitzroy Camembert and Count de Gorgonzola, both residing at the Hotel de Gink, were highly delighted on receiving invitations from Gladys Gladiola to lunch with her at the Ritz. But when the two rivals showed up matters became less rosy, for an enormous plume on Gladys' hat became ignited from the candelabra, and she positively demanded that it be replaced. So both of the impecunious gentlemen set out in quest of a plume from the breast of a golden pheasant. They ransacked hen yards and millinery stores only to be spurned by Gladys. So both went hunting.

Hunting proved disastrous. Not only were they arrested by a game warden, but in their absence Reginald Astorbilt made Gladys' acquaintance and bought her a new plume in a very off-hand way. So when the game warden

THE TERROR OF THE FOLD (Two Parts—Dec. 30).—Jim Thorne (William Clifford); Beulah Martin (Marvell Spencer); Steve Martin (Edward Alexander); Tom Walsh (Howard Milcrest).

Steve Martin, a sheep-herder, has been living happily in the love of his daughter, Beulah, when a shadow of his past looms up before him. Years before he had become involved in a counterfeiting scheme with Tom Walsh, who remained to expiate the crime, Steve escaping. Walsh, who alone shares Steve's secret, is now a nefarious character engaged in rounding up sheep which he steals and drives over the government lines. When he finds that he is in Steve's neighborhood his mind reverts to their common past. Cunning and revenge combined prompts him to go to Steve's house and by menacing him with the past makes him a tool in his criminal undertaking. Steve, to shield his daughter, weakly consents.

In the meantime, Jim Thorne, a government ranger, in love with Beulah, senses something wrong and instructs his assistant to be on the lookout, promising to meet him at a certain time. Steve and Tom are rounding up sheep when the assistant appears. Tom kills the assistant, and Steve also fires but believes it was his shot that went true. The dying man manages to slash Tom on the arm in the death struggle. The assailants escape. Jim, according to arrangements, arrives at the spot and finds his dying comrade, who tells him that he has slashed his murderer on the arm and to look for him. He then dies and Jim, putting the body on his horse, takes him to Steve's house. A frightful storm comes up and Tom decides to take refuge in Steve's house. Looking through the window he sees Jim examining the arm of Steve and then knows that he is a marked man. The next day, overheard by Beulah, he threatens Steve and also the life of Jim.

He has conceived a cunning revenge for the ranger. From the cave of a puma he takes several cubs to Jim's cabin knowing that the mother will follow. In the meantime Beulah goes to warn Jim of the criminal's design. Jim laughs at her fears but is on his guard when he happens to meet Tom. He is quicker with the gun than Tom, however. He fires and fearing that he has killed him Jim carries the unconscious form to his cabin and places it upon a couch under which the puma cubs are lying. He goes to a stream to get water to revive him, but while absent the revenge Tom so cunningly planned proves a boomerang, for the puma enters and finding Tom helpless draws his life. Beulah has heard the shots exchanged and she and her father, coming to the cabin, finds the two terrors of the fold have passed and the slash on the arm proves that the murderer of the ranger has been found.

An Audience of Exhibitors, State Right Buyers and Press Representatives Went Wild!

Regent Theatre yesterday was the scene of something most unusual in motion picture history.

A feature announced without any advertising, thrown on the screen, on its own resources, presented to an audience of the hardest-to-please men, who were figuring dollars and cents, profits, box office returns—went over "red hot." The scene, as those who were present will testify, was one that reminded the writer of a crowd of school boys at the circus.

Therefore, B. S. Moss has no hesitation in offering to the field at large

"The SALAMANDER"

(Adapted from Owen Johnson's Greatest Novel)

A play that will be rendered immediately popular through the medium of the two million followers of Owen Johnson who read the novel.

A play with a story that's got to go across. Acted by fourteen stars. Directed by Donaldson. "The Salamander" is a play that will go in the city because it depicts the yearnings of those outside its borders. It will appeal to the town because "The Salamander" tells of the fight for right, of a woman who gets into the clutches of the "wolfish" elements of the metropolis.

"The Salamander" has already, yesterday and today, received a shower of applause by the press. But greater than this—already offers have been put down for states by men recognized among the keenest buyers of the country.

The One-a-Month Release

There are now, practically completed, two features of sensational importance as listed below. The others are already casted and shall be completed well in advance with one production always in reserve. This will be good news to the state right buyers and exchanges who want a stock in trade that will eliminate worry.

The Promotion Plan for All Moss Associates

Backing the productions our advertisement department is empowered to spend an appropriation which will dramatically place Moss Features before the exhibitors and the public of America. In addition, a plan of co-operation has been evolved by an expert retained by the biggest commercial concern of its kind in the world.

This will be of extreme help to state right buyers, exchange men and exhibitors.

THE NEW ADVENTURES OF J. RUFUS WALLINGFORD (No. 11, "A Stony Deal"—Two Parts—Dec. 13).—J. Rufus Wallingford and Blackie Daw, the gentlemen crooks who are endeavoring to recover a stolen fortune for the Warden girls, get a little of their own medicine in this episode. Jones Squibble, the man they have scheduled for a "shakedown," is a tight-fisted old farmer, and taxes the Warden girls ten cents for taking a drink from his well. Blackie gets in a jam with him and he, too, is assessed. Then J. Rufus himself runs afoul of Jones for driving his automobile across his property. This angers our hero and he immediately buys the place for $200. He acts the part of a mine owner in boom times and Zeke, the brother of Jones, plants a mine on his property, expecting Wallingford to "fall." But Jones tips him off, expecting J. Rufus to sell him back his property for the sum paid in exchange for the information. However, this our hero refuses to do, and Squibble has to fork over $35,000 for it. But what cares he? He sells it right away for $50,000, and rather slips one over on Wallingford. Nevertheless, the Wardens get their $35,000, just the amount due them.

CLIMBING MT. BLANC (Globe—Dec. 13).—This is an interesting release showing mountain climbers mounting the sides of the famous mountain. This rugged peak tosses its snow-capped summit 15,781 feet into the heavens, the highest peak in the Alps, and affords unlimited thrills for the hardy tourist who is ventruesome enough to attempt to reach its summit.

In this picture, we follow the start of a party of climbers from the village of Chamonix, which is just to the north of the peak. The slow porgress made causes the men to stop over at a small hotel on the slopes for the night. They start again in the morning and as they mount higher and higher, rare views of the small villages nestling in the valleys below are unfolded to their gaze. The photographer of the party had his camera aimed in such a way that it was possible for him to get a thrilling and most unusual view of an avalanche, which is highly interesting. Finally, the men, after many narrow escapes and harrowing experieuces, such as crossing a human bridge, reach the summit and shake hands at the success of their dangerous trip.

RUSES, RHYMES AND ROUGHNECKS (No. 1 of the "Lonesome Luke" Series—Phunphilms—Dec. 15).—This offering telis the tale of one, Oscar Weeban, a fellow deeply in love with a certain Maisie. He has promised to take her to the Garbage Gentiemen's Rally, that annual society event of the small town in which it is their fortune to reside, and she sends him a note to this effect. He is a rank outsider, but manages to inject himself into the spirit of the affair and enters into the sport of the occasion with a vim. It is at this event that the ashes throwing contest is held every year, and garbage men from all sections, trained to the minute, flock to the party to compete. The contest is at its height and one of the experts is trying for a world's record when Oscar crosses the range. Of course, he and Maisie manage to get in the way of the winning throw and spoil the record which is about to be made. But what cares he? Despite the boob he made of himself at this elite affair, Maisie falls for him hard, after he has written some poetry for her, and the picture winds up with Oscar in the charming role of bridegroom.

BELOVED VAGABOND (Gold Rooster—Six Parts—Dec. 17).—When Gaston De Nerac was awarded the highest honor the French Academy can bestow on an architect, he returned to England, there to arrange the details of his marriage to his cousin, Joanna Rushworth. To save Joanna's father from financial ruin, Gaston borrows a sum of money from another of Joanna's admirers, the stiuplation being that he shall not communicate in any way with Joanna for two years. The scheming lender leads Joanna to believe that her love has been bartered for dollars.

She marries him, and Gaston, believing the one perfect creature in the world to have been fickle, gives up everything he holds dearest—art, friends and future—and assuming the name of Paragot, goes forth into the world a cynic, to bury with the past all his hopes for future. Follows a period of absinthe and recklessness, until he meets Augustus Smith, a lad of fifteen, to whom he takes a liking, because, forsooth, the boy reads "Paradise Lost"; and together they start on a vagabond wandering in which many strange things come to pass.

But years have separated these two, and they find, after their formal engagement, that it's no go. Paragot goes forth broken hearted, only to realize, when he gets home, a certain something that startled him—for he finds, in a cottage that which he lost in a mansion.

MORE DEADLY THAN THE MALE (Starlight—Dec. 18).—Heinie and Louie run afaul of a sort of Utopia in which only women reside. There are female cops and all other officials of the town are of that sex. Men are barred under pain of death, so when our two heroes are observed wandering along the main thoroughfare of the burg they are immediately spotted and pursued by the entire police force and captured. After being subjected to the spanking machine and the water cure, they are locked up in cells, but the novelty of having males in the neighborhood appeals to the mayoress and sheriffess, and they take the captives to their home for dinner. But even this hospitality has no effect on their guests, and the latter rob their hostesses of the contents of the safe. However, some time later their absence is discovered by the cops and they are tracked down to the home of the mayor, where they are given a terrific beating and cast to the four winds.

I have been working for the following men in the motion picture state right business and have made more money for them than they ever thought a single little girl could do, (No, I'm not single, am I?).

Fontana Bros., Produce Exchange, New York, all of New England; A. Caille & Co., Majestic Thea., Detroit, Mich., who bought the States of Michigan and Ohio; Author's Film Co., Inc., Empire Thea. Building, New York, who bought Greater New York and New York State, Pennsylvania, New Jersey; The Celebrated Film Corporation of Chicago, who purchased Illinois and Wisconsin; Warren Shorts, Equitable Building, New York, who just purchased Virginia, Georgia, Alabama, North and South Carolina. Options on other territories have already been taken.

third term. He is met by June Travis and her mother as he leaves the gray walls of the jail. They offer him money, being interested in the reform of ex-convicts, but he turns on them savagely. Max Lamar, a young detective, standing near by ready to carry out his instructions to shadow Borden, interferes and orders the criminal to be on his way.

Shortly afterward Borden sees his son lift the watch from a man's pocket and determines to kill him, and himself, and thus end the criminal strain of the family. Lamar has taken up the chase and reaches Borden's room in time to learn that the last of the Bordens is dead. The next day, Lamar, while standing beside a curtained automobile, is astounded to see a woman's hand come from beneath the curtains and on its back—the red circle. When he recovers from his surprise the auto is moving away, but he has noted the license number. Interesting developments follow in the next episode. It is called "Pity the Poor."

Miscellaneous Feature Film

RELIABLE FEATURE FILM CO.

THE WORLD OF TO-DAY (Dec. 15).—The cast: Sylvia Ormonde, Alfred Ryden, Harry Fredericks, Richard A. Stratton, Arthur Limpke.

Nellie, a poor flower-girl, supporting her idle father and brother, tires of her wretched life and decides to strike for a higher and easier one. She meets Arthur Wallace, a wealthy banker, by means of an arranged accident. He marries her and lavishes his wealth on her until he meets with reverses. He pleads with Nellie to give up her jewels and help him, but she refuses and deserts him.

Nellie has met a new admirer, a wealthy baron, and leaves with him for Monte Carlo. Nellie's husband follows and traces her to the faro room, where a scene takes place. The baron defends her and a duel is arranged. Nellie, fearing for her life, leaves Monte Carlo with another admirer, known as "the count." The husband, wishing a reconciliation, enters Nellie's room. He finds her gone. The baron awakens and a terrific struggle takes place, Arthur throwing the baron out of the window to his death. The place takes fire and in the excitement Arthur makes his escape.

The count takes Nellie to London, where she continues meeting many new admirers, who lavish their wealth on her. Nellie's husband has met with reverses and accepts a position as a butler in the count's family and meets Nellie face to face. An exciting chase takes place to the secret stairway in the haunted castle, where Arthur is trapped. Nellie again leaves the country for foreign parts, and while in France meets the aviator Pegoud, who invites her to the aviation field, where the largest Zeppelin dirigible balloon in the world is seen. The progress made by this vampire shows that a life of folly does not pay. In the end the husband whom she has left so cruelly finds her and, under the disguise of her chauffeur, rides her to her death over a yawning precipice to the valley below.

PARAMOUNT.

THE UNKNOWN (Lasky—5 Parts—Dec. 9).—The cast: Richard Farquhar (Lou Tellegen); Captain Destinn (Theodore Roberts); Nancy Preston (Dorothy Davenport); Captain Arnaud (Hal Clements); First Private (Tom Forman); Second Private (Raymond Hatton); Hotel Proprietor (Horace H. Carpenter).

Richard Farquhar, the ne'er-do-well nephew of a titled Englishman, after a protracted "good time" finds himself penniless in an Algerian hotel. He expects money from England, but instead receives a cablegram stating his allowance has been stopped and that his uncle will have nothing further to do with him. He goes to a native cafe, where he sees Nancy Preston, an American girl. An Arab insults her. Richard protects her and in the fight that follows loses his father's Victoria Cross.

Richard refuses to tell Nancy who he is until he has made a name for himself. He joins the Foreign Legion under an assumed name. He meets Nancy again and also Captain Destinn. Destinn falls in love with Nancy, but she prefers Richard. In the meantime Richard's uncle has died and left him the entire estate. The family solicitor in hunting for Richard meets Destinn, whom he thinks he recognizes as Richard's father. Destinn denies the truth.

While in pursuit of Bedouin bandits the soldiers mutiny against Destinn and tie him up, meaning to leave him to die in the desert. The soldiers are outnumbered by the Bedouins and Richard releases Destinn, giving him a chance to fight for his life. When the soldiers are all rescued Richard takes the blame for the mutiny and is sentenced to death. Nancy, disguised as an Arab boy, effects Richard's escape and the two flee into the desert. Destinn starts in pursuit and steals up on them just as Richard finds out who Nancy is. Richard, thinking the game is up, bands Nancy the Victoria Cross. Destinn recognizes it and tells Richard he will stop pursuit and allow them to escape into English territory.

THE CHEAT (Lasky—5 Parts—Dec. 13).—The cast: Edith Hardy (Fannie Ward); Tori (Sessue Hayakawa); Dick Hardy, her husband (Jack Dean); Jones (James Neill).

Edith Hardy is greatly admired by Hishuru Tori, a wealthy young Japanese. Edith tells Tori of her husband's request to economize, and he, sympathizing with her, asks her to come to him for assistance whenever she needs it. At a lawn fete given to raise money for the Belgium sufferers, some $10,000 was turned over to Editb as treasurer of the fund. A friend gives Edith a tip on United Copper and she, in hopes of doubling her money, invests the entire fund. The night of the Charity Ball, given at Tori's house, she is informed that United Copper has collapsed and the money is lost. As the fund is to be sent away the next day, Edith hysterically appeals to Tori for his assistance and he gives her a check for $10,000, with the understanding that she is to come to him the next night.

The next morning Hardy realizes on his investments and rushes to give the joyous news to his wife. She secures $10,000 from him and that night goes to repay the Japanese. Hardy, suspicious, follows her. Edith offers the check to Tori, but he refuses. Edith threatens to kill herself if he comes near her. Tori offers her his revolver, knowing that she has not the courage. Suddenly enraged, he seizes an iron with which he has been branding some curios and, tearing Edith's gown from her shoulder, places the red-hot iron to her flesh. Edith, wild with pain, shoots Tori in the shoulder and flees, just as Hardy breaks into the room. Hardy finds the check and a piece of chiffon from his wife's dress, and when the police arrive assumes the blame and is arrested. Editb offers Tori everything not to press the charges, but he refuses.

The day of the trial Hardy is declared guilty of shooting Tori and is about to be led away, when Edith rushes to the witness stand and bares the brand to the judge and the jury. The enraged audience in the court room attempts to lynch the Japanese, but is suppressed by the police. The charge against Hardy is dismissed and he and his wife are reunited.

V-L-S-E, INC.

A PRICE FOR FOLLY (Vitagraph—5 Parts—Dec. 13).—The cast: Dorothea Jardeau (Edith Storey); M. Jean de Segni (Antonio Moreno); Duchess de Segni (Louise Beaudet); Duke de Segni (Charles Kent); M. Landon (Harry Morey); Mlle. Elsa Benviet (Ethel Corcoran); M. Benoist (Col. T. Waln-Cogan Draper); Mme. Benoist (Helen Pillsbury); Butler (John Hines).

M. Jean de Segni, scion of a noble house, is notorious for his reckless extravagance and wild life, but on receiving word from his lawyers that he is ruined he takes it like a true gambler, with a shrug of the shoulders. Most of his money he has spent lavishly on a mercenary actress of great beauty, Dorothea Jardeau. The news of his ruin gets into the papers, and his father, who has managed to keep from his mother the kind of life Jean has been living, realizes she will soon know. He also knows that after his death Jean will gamble his mother into the poorhouse unless she dies before, of a broken heart, for she idolizes her son. His father has but a short time to live, determines to take his beloved wife with him, and he kills her.

The butler discovers Jean with a stiletto in his hand at the body of his mother, but the Duke saves Jean from being accused of murder by confessing he did it. Nevertheless, everyone, including his Dorothea, believe the Duke lied to save his son, and after his father's death Jean finds himself scorned and a social outcast

A DAUGHTER OF THE CITY (Essanay—5 Parts—Dec. 20).—The cast: Margaret Fowler (Marguerite Clayton); Henry L. Bancroft (E. H. Calvert); Dick Conklin (John Junior); Mrs. Bancroft (Camille D'Arcy); Mrs. Fowler, Florence Oberle); Muriel (Betty Scott); Le Moyne (Ernest Maupain).

Margaret Fowler is a daughter of the city. Her mother, mean and avaricious, ground down to poverty, is willing to sacrifice her daughter's happiness and love for wealth and position. The girl longs for the beautiful things of life. Prompted by her own mother's pleadings, she turns her back on love.

But her heart is pure and she shrinks back in horror from the lure of evil when it confronts her, although it wears a golden mein. She sees behind the mask of the man who pretends he wishes to befriend her. But she knows not which way to turn.

Her sweetheart, however, unknown to her, steps in to protect her. Through the aid of a good woman he succeeds in saving her. She discovers at last that happiness lies only with the man she loves.

FATTY AND THE BROADWAY STARS (Keystone).—The cast: Roscoe Arbuckle, Ivy Crostbwaite, Al. St. John, Mack Sennett, Willie Collier, Weber and Fields, Sam Bernard. (This picture is released in place of "A Submarine Pirate," which will be released later.)

Fatty is janitor of the studio and is sweeping the entrance, when the Broadway stars come trooping in for the day's work. He is always getting into other people's way, stirring up dust and turning the hose on every one. Finally he is discharged by the director and goes out to the front of the building, lights a cigarette and has a day dream. The studio gets on fire and Fatty sees himself rescuing several actors and actresses and even the director. Then he wakes up a little and sees some of the rescued coming out at the end of the day in their automobiles, but they never notice poor Fatty. Still believing that he has saved their lives, Fatty shrugs his shoulders in acquiesence at the ingratitude of the stars, especially that of the comely young actress he had taken out while she was bound with ropes and encircled with flames.

WORLD FILM CORP.

THE SIREN'S SONG (Shubert—Dec. 13).—A young man, who comes to the big city to make his way in the world, has been unfortunate in securing employment. At last he receives a position with a bank. Through his limited knowledge of the world he is used by his employers as a tool to dupe patrons into purchasing worthless stock. Fearing detection, the employers make their "get away," and leave the clerk to face the rioting depositors. The young man is arrested and sentenced to serve four years in prison. His prison life ended, he adopts the name of John Grey and decides to go to a foreign country.

On board the steamer he meets Blake, the former bank president, and his confederate, Helen Granger. Grey becomes so embittered against Blake that he awaits an opportunity to demand reparation. Late at night he finds Blake on the deck alone and accosts him. There is a fight, at the termination of which Blake throws Grey overboard. After floating all night on a stray log, he is rescued by the crew of a fishing boat, who land him in a small village along the fishing banks, and he finds employment among the fishing folk.

John Gordon's wife, a drug fiend, left him and, not having heard from her for several years, he again marries. The second union is blessed with a daughter, Katherine. While this happy family are visiting a summer resort, Gordon is confronted by his first wife. The shock of seeing her is so great that he suffers a heart attack and dies. His wife and daughter, knowing the truth, retire to the same village where John Grey has by this time endeared himself to the inhabitants.

Helen Granger gains the confidence of the first wife and purchases her marriage certificate. Armed with this document and accompanied by Blake, she seeks the second Mrs. Gordon and attempts to blackmail her. Katherine, who is the affianced wife of John Grey, tells him of their predicament. Upon his discovery of who the plotters are, he secretly goes to the rooms occupied by Helen Granger to obtain the marriage certificate. He is discovered by Blake, who attacks him, and hearing the noise of the scuffle the adventuress enters the room.

Grey, having secured the paper, is threatened with the exposure of his past life by his enemies. He tells them he will make a clean breast of the whole affair which would ultimately send Blake and his companion to prison. Realizing that he has the upper hand, the conspirators promise to leave town in the morning. This brings a happy ending to an interesting story.

OVER NIGHT (Brady—Dec. 20).—Percy Darling, a husky fellow, boards a Hudson River day boat with his bride, a little, timid, clinging sort of a girl, they having been married but a few hours. On the boat Percy meets Richard Kettle, an old college chum, who is also on his honeymoon. Kettle is a frail youth of a retiring disposition, and his wife is a suffragette who makes him "toe the mark." The two couples sit together and remember that they have left some of their baggage on the dock. Mrs. Kettle and Percy Darling leave the boat to go and see about their baggage. As can be imagined, the boat starts, leaving Mrs. Kettle and Percy Darling behind. The timid little wife of Darling does all in her power to stop the boat, but the captain will not listen to her.

In order to prevent scandal and awkward explanations, the two decide to say they are man and wife. While on board the boat, they are showered with rice, and are treated as the royal guests. That evening the boat lands at Poughkeepsie and the two decide to take the next train back and meet their other half. They learn that the next train leaves in the morning, and much to their regret they have to sleep "over night" at the Rip Van Winkle Inn, at Pougbkeepsie. They register there as man and wife and a fresh clerk pokes all manner of fun at them.

In the last act, which takes place at the Inn, the next morning, the other couple arrives, and much to their surprise see Mrs. Darling and Kettle in each other's arms. This they have to do to pass off as man and wife. The other couple become wild with rage and demand an explanation. A fake hypnotist, who happened to be stopping at the Inn, puts Mrs. Darling and Kettle to sleep and forces from them the truth, saying that in order not to arouse scandal they had to make love. The play ends happily, with the two couples together again, and they continue their interrupted honeymoon.

CAMILLE—(Shubert, Dec. 27.).—The cast: Camille (Clara Kimball Young); Armand Duval (Paul Capellani); Cecile, his sister (Lillian Cook); M. Duval, their father (Robert Cummings); Joseph, the servant (Dan Baker); Robert Bousac, Cecile's fiance (Stanhope Wheatcroft); Count de Varville (Frederick C. Truesdell); Gaston (William Jefferson); The Doctor (Edward M. Kimball); Madame Prudence (Louie Ducey); Naoine (Beryl Morharge).

Marguerite Gautier, known as "Camille" on account of her fondness for camellias, is queen of the underworld. She has a wealthy lover in Count de Varville, whom, though he supplies her with plenty of money, she does not love in return. Her affections are set upon Armand, a young lawyer from the country. She suffers from her excesses, and the doctor warns her that she must change her mode of living, but she laughs at his advice. Admand's love for her renews her interest in life, and she goes with him and lives quietly in the country. But their happiness is short. Camille has had to sell her jewelry and horses in order to pay her debts, and, learning of this, Armand becomes suspicious.

Armand's father, hearing of his son's attachment for Camille, demands that the woman should abandon Armand. For the sake of Armand's young sister, Cecile, Camille agrees to sacrifice herself and returns to her former life with Count de Varville. But Armand's love for Camille will not be suppressed. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD stands alone among all trade publications by reason of the SPECIAL SERVICE it is rendering to all its readers.

Our Special Service

We act as your booking agent, because we print the story of every film and then give you an expert opinion on it; we help you in getting the best light and the brightest picture; we stand at your elbow when you prepare your advertising and edit your program; we have an unrivalled news service; our "ads" tell you at a glance what the market offers to you today and tomorrow; we provide you with regular, competent advice on your daily problems, such as heating and ventilating and questions of construction; we keep you constantly posted on the live topics of the day. All this we do as part of our GENERAL SERVICE and in doing it we give you much more than a hundred cents on your dollar. You have a right to expect all this general service as a matter of course, but have you busy readers ever stopped to think of what the SPECIAL SERVICE of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has been worth to you?

This SPECIAL SERVICE given by no other paper and never even attempted by any other publication in the industry has consisted and will continue to consist of practical missionary work for the benefit of the whole industry. Do you know who killed Federal Censorship in Washington? Do you know who led the fight against legalized censorship in New York and who secured the final victory? Do you know who aided in taking the sting out of the Pennsylvania censorship law? Do you realize what an amount of local censorship has been killed by THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD? THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD brought about these victories not merely by its editorial attitude, but by getting into the actual fight; in Washington no one spoke against the dangerous Hughes Bill but a representative of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD; in Albany we stood shoulder to shoulder with the organized exhibitor in killing the Mitchell Bill; in Harrisburg we were the first in the field and fought to the bitter end. In New York we asked the Constitutional Convention for immunity from censorship and when this was refused we went into the campaign against the constitution, we enlisted the aid of the exhibitor, and for the first time we showed the POWER OF THE SCREEN. We appealed directly to the motion picture audiences, both by speeches and by slides. The result is well-known. The next time the moving picture men in this state ask for a hearing in Albany we believe they will get it.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, through this SPECIAL SERVICE has preserved the exhibitor and the producer from serious losses and grave perils. The fight against censorship is but one feature of our

HIS TURNING POINT (Five Parts).—During a reception given by Mr. and Mrs. Carey, the topic of "black sheep" in families comes up, and Mr. Carey makes the remark that if ever he discovered that there was a thief in the family of the woman he married he would divorce her. The next evening Carey is called away, and Mrs. Carey and her little child are left alone. The child is put to bed, and Mrs. Carey goes to her sitting room to read. She thinks of what her husband said the day before, and a vision of other days comes to her.

We find Mrs. Carey a young woman in good circumstances, her father a prosperous business man. There comes a day, however, when he returns home to inform his son and daughter that his fortune has been swept away. The loss of his fortune and his position cause him much worry, and he dies from the effects. The brother, accustomed to all the good things of life, finds it hard to do anything. He sells his belongings and gets what money he can. Lower and lower he falls, until one day he is caught by the police in the act of leaving a house by a window and is sent to prison as a burglar. The sister, not wishing to live alone, writes to one of her friends, telling her that she is in poor circumstances, and asks if she might visit her. At once the invitation is extended, and we find her at the handsome home of her friend. Here, as time goes, she meets a wealthy man who learns her story, excepting that part relating to her brother, and he proposes marriage.

As the reverie breaks a burglar is seen entering the home of Carey. He glides in quietly, searching for some important papers. He knocks over a stool, which awakens the little child. She at once leaves her bed and goes into the drawing room. The burglar, masked, not knowing who is entering, points his revolver toward the door. The child enters, and the burglar tries to persuade her to go back to her room.

Mrs. Carey, hearing the noise, comes hastily to the drawing room. Stealthily she had secured her own revolver, and, seeing the situation, gets the "drop" on the masked man and calls to him to throw up his hands. He obeys, but, seeing the woman, pulls off his mask and shows he is her brother. She begs him to leave at once, telling him what her husband had said. While they are talking, the child, seeing the revolver which her mother had laid on the table, picks it up and begins to examine it. She puts the muzzle into her mouth and is fingering with the trigger. The mother and the man see this at the same moment, and the mother starts quickly for the child in an effort to grab the gun. The man, quicker witted, stops her and talks quietly with the child until he gets the gun.

At this moment Carey is heard coming in. Mrs. Carey pleads with her brother to leave quickly and she hastens out of the room with the child. Carey enters, sees the lights turned on, turns, and sees the fleeing form of the man. He reaches for his revolver and shoots through the window. The shot attracts a policeman who comes to the scene as Carey reaches the garden and both find the wounded man. He is brought into the house and Mrs. Carey is about to tell who he is, but the brother signals to her and the story is left untold. Mrs. Carey finds herself in straits to explain the situation, but manages it successfully.

The gang in its den reading the papers of the next morning and seeing that their confederate had failed in his attempt determine to get the papers themselves. They get into the house, capture Carey, bind him, and get the papers from his open safe. After a while the brother arrives from a short sentence, and is told of their success in getting the papers. He knows now that the papers belong to his brother-in-law, and is anxious to get them. He watches where they are kept and, after drinking and carousing in the den he manages to get the papers, and quietly returns them to Carey's desk one night. The next morning the gang learn that the papers have disappeared and plan revenge. They arrange to kidnap the child and thus cause Carey to give them ransom. The brother hears these plans and joins in them.

A few days later the little child is seized by one of the gang. The brother sees the scheme. Just as the child is being thrown into a waiting buggy, he draws his gun, shoots, and wounds the kidnapper. The horse, frightened, leaps away with the child in the vehicle. The young fellow runs behind in an effort to race the horse down. Coming to a motorcycle, he grabs it, and starts a race. Passing the running horse, he dismounts and heads off the runaway. He is slightly hurt, but manages to stop the runaway and starts back with the child.

The reconciliation comes when Mrs. Carey tells who the young fellow is, taking the chance which she had always feared. Carey decides to send the young man to one of his plants in South America, extracting first, however, a promise that he will never return to this country and that no hint will ever be given of his past life. The picture ends with the little girl waving her good-bye to the young uncle, as he leaves on his long voyage.

THE LABYRINTH (Five Parts—Dec. 13).—The cast: Florence Burgess, later Flo Burke (Gail Kane); Ray Fox (Dolly Larkin); Rev. Robert Fenton (Richard Neal); Oscar Morse (Edward Roseman); Frances Burgess (Polly Champlain).

Florence Burgess, a singer in the Cafe Fanchon, supports her lame sister, Frances, but keeps her struggle secret. Oscar Morse, a theatrical manager, is attracted by Florence's beauty and talent, and offers her an engagement. When they meet he demands the usual payment his girls have to make, and is refused. The cafe has been closed. she is out of work and decides to trick Morse. She gets him drunk, and he signs a paper she has substituted for the contract he planned. Florence the next day admits her deception and Morse, fearing publicity, accepts the situation and stars Florence in "The Green Goddess." She makes a big success, her stage name being Flo Burke.

At a little country hotel where she has gone to rest after the first year's work, she meets Fenton, the minister, whose efforts closed the Fanchon, but he does not recognize her. He tells the story of his mission work, she becomes interested, they fall in love, he not knowing that she is the actress, Flo Burke, the register showing Miss F. Burgess. She finally keeps her secret, saying she is the sister of the actress. Fenton is preaching, Florence hears him, determines to give up the stage, but Morse demands the payment of a large forfeit, and she is bound to the stage.

Frances, who has been sent to a sanatorium, starts with her sister for New York, the train is wrecked, and Fenton, when the bodies are brought in, finds one bearing cards which tell him it is Flo Burke. Another woman, not dead, has cards of Florence Burgess. Florence sees in a paper in the hospital the announcement of the death of Flo Burke, and sees that it means her escape from the stage. She marries Fenton, but is full of remorse over her deception, and plans to use her money, which had come to her through her own will, which had left it to her sister, for the work of Fenton.

Morse goes to the church rectory to see Fenton about a problem play, sees Florence, she denies knowing him, he returns to his office, finds a diary she had kept, and it reveals her secret. He returns, demands full payment of the contract forfeit, and Florence is up against a dilemma. If she gives the money to Morse, she must explain to her husband; if she gives it to her husband Morse will drag her back to the stage. Seeking a way out of the labyrinth, she promises Morse to read the play, and advises Fenton to favor it for production by Morse. He comes to the house, meets Fenton instead of Florence, who overhears her husband praising the play, and decides to give her husband the money. Morse flies into a rage, threatens to denounce her, but Fenton stops him; there is a fight, Morse accidentally shoots himself with his own pistol, and with her husband's love safe Florence feels that she has escaped from the labyrinth.

SEALED LIPS (Five Parts—Dec. 20).—The cast: Henry Everard (William Courtenay); Cyril Maitland (Arthur Ashley); Alma Lee (Mary Charleson); Lillian Maitland (Adele Ray); Marian Everard (Marie Wells).

Cyril Maitland and Henry Everard, friends since childhood, are of contrasting temperaments, the former hot-headed and rather impracticable, the latter cool tempered and possessed of a sane viewpoint of things. Cyril, studying for the ministry, is engaged to Henry's sister, Marian, and Henry, studying medicine, is engaged to Cyril's sister, Lillian.

Unable to resist temptation, Cyril ruins a girl of his parish, Alma Lee, and when a child is about to be born, her father swears to kill the man, but Alma conceals his name. On the night the child is born, Alma's father is found dead. Cyril being about Henry's build, has worn his clothes, and witnesses see him in the vicinity of the woods where the crime was committed. Henry is convicted of the crime of which Cyril is guilty, Lillian alone believes him innocent, and is sent to prison, Alma declaring him to be the father of the child. Cyril, believing his calling in the church above all other things, keeps silent, but at the last moment, about to speak, is held back by his father, who thinks him unstrung.

Cyril marries Marian, but his conscience tortures him almost beyond endurance and his life becomes a living hell. Finally Henry is released after twenty years in prison, and he attends the cathedral presided over by Cyril, who has become the great Dean Maitland, the most eminent preacher in the country. Cyril sees Henry in the congregation and there is a powerful scene. Cyril meets his son, with a letter from Alma asking for his education, then Alma dies, and her son, learning his identity, renounces his father. Marian dies, and Cyril's troubled soul is grief and conscience-stricken. Henry, seeing the terrible pain of recognition in the cathedral, and remembering his old love for the Cyril, now so changed, writes a letter of forgiveness to him, when beyond all endurance, Cyril's pride now broken, repentance enters his soul.

The next day, Sunday, his sermon is at first a trite appeal to repentance, and then a dramatic confession of his own sins, when, falling from the pulpit, he drops dead.

And after the storm, the sunshine—Henry and Lillian live happy in their true and undying love.

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION.

BLACK FEAR (Five Parts—Dec. 27).—The cast: Lillian Ellsmere (Grace Elliston); Mary Ellsmere (Grace Valentine); Judge Le Roy (Edward Brennan); Horace Ely (Paul Everton); Gordon Ellsmere (Frank Hannah); "Billy" Ellsmere (John Tansey); Mrs. Martindale (Mrs. Allen Walker); Jake Gilbert (Edwin Polk); George Martindale (Albert Hackett); Henry Gilbert (Del Lewis).

In an allegory Satan is seen on his throne, disgusted with the age-long monotony of ensnaring mankind with the old devices and passions. Miss Cocaine presents herself, and offers to go forth to Earth as his ambassador to lure souls to perdition.

Horace Ely, head of a big messenger service company, is starting on an automobile ride with the two Ellsmere sisters, Lillian and Mary, when their attention is attracted to a group on the corner. There the sisters find the younger brother, Billy has been engaged in a fight with two messenger boys, employed by Ely. The trouble has arisen over Billy's efforts to dissuade the boys from taking cocaine. Ely champions the cause of the boys, but the police lead them off to the station. One of the boys proves to be the son of Mrs. Martindale, housekeeper for the Ellsmeres. Judge Le Roy, who presides at the Juvenile Court, has long been friendly with Lillian Ellsmere, and when her little brother and Mrs. Martindale appear in court next day, he agrees to be lenient and arranges to have the boys take a drug cure.

Soon after this incident, the father of the Ellsmere girls loses his fortune in Wall street, and ends his life. The girls take a small flat, and Billy gets a place with Ely as a messenger boy. Through the direction of Ely, Billy is introduced to cocaine, and soon becomes a confirmed victim. Mrs. Martindale has learned from her son that Ely, who has been posing as a single man, is married. Mary has become fond of Ely and refuses to believe it. Lillian forbids Mary to see him, and Ely uses Billy as a go-between in arranging meetings with Mary.

Mary is finally lured to Ely's apartments, and when she resents his advances, he drugs her. Billy's health has been undermined through using the drug, and he is removed to a hospital in a dying condition. Lillian learns of this and hurries to the hospital, but arrives there as Billy is breathing his last. Crazed with grief Lillian seeks out Ely's apartments to avenge Billy's death. She forces her way into the apartment just as Ely and Mary, who is recovering from the effects of the drug, are in a terrific struggle. Mary hides before her sister can see her there. In a fight with Ely Lillian attempts to shoot him, but he wrenches the revolver from her hand. Ely trips over a rug, and in falling the pistol is discharged and Ely is killed. Mary witnesses the whole affair, but fearing Lillian's wrath, and to save her own reputation, she flees.

Miss Cocaine reports her success to Satan and is commended.

Lillian is arrested charged with murder. She convinces Judge Le Roy of her innocence, and he resigns as judge to defend her. But it is not so easy to convince the jury. Mary is about to flee the city, when the figure of a traffic officer appears in front of her as the implacable Justice. She turns and hurries to the courtroom, just as the jury has decided against Lillian. Mary gives her testimony, and recounts how Lillian saved her from outrage at the hands of the monster, Ely. The jury returns a verdict of "Not Guilty," without leaving the jury-box, and Judge Le Roy is rewarded by Lillian's acceptance of his suit for her hand.

Notes of the Trade

"Lord Loveland Discovers America," the story of C. M. and A. N. Williamson, the popular authors, is being produced at the American (Mutual) studios. The setting called for a most elaborate and expensive preparation, and this promises to be one of the most beautifully produced pictures of its kind ever released through the Mutual.

Robert Leonard is at work on the production of another of his own stories, a two reel drama entitled, "The Silent Man of Timber Gulch." The company has left Universal City and is stopping at Arrowhead Hotel at the foot of the San Bernardino mountains and there will get practically all of their exterior scenes. Ella Hall plays opposite Leonard in this offering.

The Gaumont company plans to release on the Mutual program, during the Christmas holidays, a wonderful colored photodrama called "A Prince of Yesterday." This film has been hand-colored and is unequaled in its pictorial effect. All the settings have been planned with an eye for artistic excellence and to add to the effectiveness of the story. "A Prince of Yesterday," although unusual in character and an expensive colored film, will be released as a regular Rialto Star Feature without extra charge.

Since finishing "Neal of the Navy" Harry Harvey of the Balboa company has become Jackie Saunder's director. He is putting on an interesting story in five reels in which the "Maude Adams of the screen" will be seen as a dancing girl. William Conklin plays opposite Miss Saunders. E. J. Brady is also in the cast.

Sydney Ayres, the Universal star who is once more directing himself, is at work on the production of a three reel story of the Canadian Northwest by F. McGrew Willis entitled, "John o' the Mountains." A number of the exterior scenes will be taken in the mountain country back of San Bernardino. Doris Pawn plays opposite Ayres in this production.

* * *

Just because he acted so well in the new Fannie Ward picture, "The Cheat," Sussue Hayakawa, the Japanese actor who has been in several Lasky productions, has been placed under a long term contract by Jesse L. Lasky. The same goes for Tom Forman also.

The storm pictures taken for the Mutual Weekly at Galveston proved such a hit in that city that they played a return engagement there.

Two interesting new people have joined the playing force of Balboa this week in the persons of Bert Ensminger and Elsie Randolph. The former is a well known young player. Miss Randolph is a charming southern girl.

HAVE YOU A REAL THEATRE?
IF SO
DO YOU NEED A REAL MANAGER?

I am accredited with being one of the most successful exhibitors in the West. I will be in New York before you have read this advertisement. Would like to connect with an individual or company that owns one or more modern theatres. I can convince you that my ideas are correct. Am desirous of forming eastern connections. I might be willing to make an investment. If employed on salary the arrangement will be such that I will earn all I receive and it is my wish to receive all I earn. The greater your investment and the more difficult the task the more apt we are to agree on terms. No vaudeville houses will be considered. If your business requires a cheap manager it does not require me. If your theatre has large seating capacity and is in a position to compete, I will tackle it regardless of whether it is located on 42nd and Broadway or in Yonkers. If this advertisement interests you address

Harry Rose

Chicago, Ill., Nov. 15th, 1915.

J. P. Seeburg Piano Co.,
1004-1010 Republic Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen: I am pleased to advise you that the Seeburg Pipe Organ which I purchased from you almost a year ago has not given me a moment's trouble. There have been no repairs necessary and the instrument has had only one tuning.

I feel that I could do no greater favor to any friend in the Moving Picture business than I would be doing him by recommending the Seeburg Pipe Organ.

My business has been better since the instrument was installed, which is proof positive that my patrons like the instrument very much. With best wishes,

Yours very truly,
(Signed) HARRY ROSE.

"Here It Is"

Through the length and breadth of the country, in big towns and little, the 1916 model MOTIOGRAPH is the standard projector.

Dealers everywhere are selling it, not merely because it meets the demands, but because they are enthusiastic over its merits.

The MOTIOGRAPH is rapidly going into the booths of the largest theatres BECAUSE — of its Simplicity, Reliability and Perfect Projection.

HAPPY NEW YEAR

An Animated Cartoon Picture
50 ft. Long—15c per ft.

A trick title spells out "TO ALL OUR PATRONS," which fades out. "Old Man 1915" walks in with a suit case marked "1915." Old Man fades away; while he fades away, suit case opens; a gay little fellow jumps out, discovers the mistake and repairs it at once, putting Number 6 on top of 5, that makes "1916" on the suit case; picks same up, walks out, wishing everyone a "HAPPY NEW YEAR."

The Long Chance—vs. The Sure Thing

The U. S. gold dollar contains 96% of pure gold—4% of other metals to harden.

A pound of gold—troy weight—twelve ounces to the pound—is worth two hundred and forty dollars. So-called gold bronze can be bought at any store, sixteen ounces to the pound, for one dollar per pound—

Now if you have ever used gold bronze you certainly know it oxidizes, loses its brilliancy, turns in color in a few weeks.

The sure thing is to modernize your theatre, your projection by installing a screen that is guaranteed for five years against oxidizing! cracking! peeling! and changing color! The screen that is guaranteed to be made of drill canvas—not window shading. The only screen that will give you true color tone, true perspective regardless of close up or angle view, eliminating that hazy, out-of-focus effect, eye strain, glare and fade-away, so peculiar to other screens—because it is the only rough or matte finish metalized surface screen in the world.

MIRROROID

This statement is made without reserve, and the proof will be more profitable to you than to us. Let us give you that proof—our large free samples are yours for the asking.

Compare Mirroroid

With any other screen on earth. Test any way you desire. Try tearing, folding, creasing,—abuse it to your heart's content.
That is why Mirroroid "Supremacy" is universal.

Gloversville, N. Y., Nov. 2nd, 1915.

The J. H. Genter Co., Inc.

Gentlemen: We take this opportunity of saying that we have the greatest success with our photoplay projection. The result of the combination of good pictures, Mirroroid Screen, Power's 6A Machines and a competent operator, and have earned the reputation of showing pictures the best way, without causing eye strain, and without the flicker that so often causes headaches.

Very truly yours,
NEW GLOVE,
Geo. E. Dartch.

Truly Mirroroid users are Mirroroid boosters. Because—they Know.

If you have a wide house, no other screen will give you Mirroroid results. Besides we protect you against pending patent infringement suits.

Mirroroid is sold by our agencies at 36 1-9 cents a square foot.

Insist upon getting the genuine—The Screen With the Black Back. The screen built and governed only by the limits of human ability. Beware of imitations.

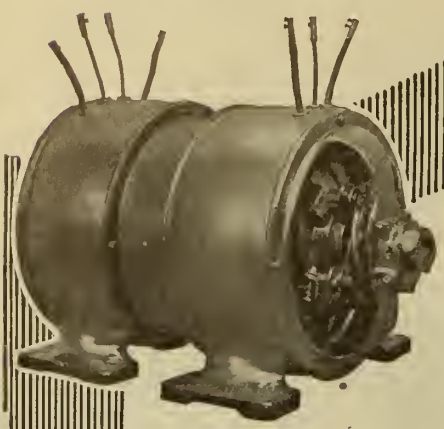
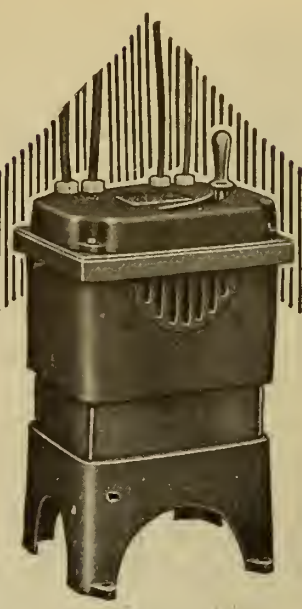
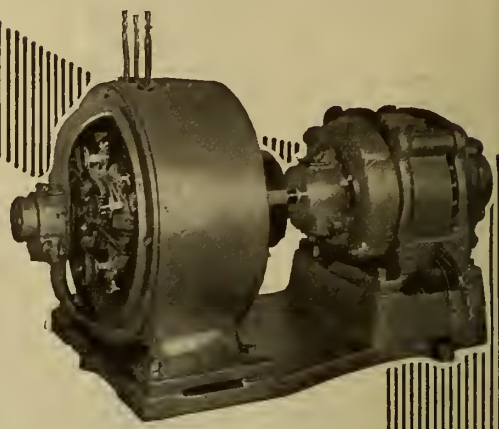
BETTER LIGHT LESS CURRENT



The DC Compensarc lowers the voltage of a direct current supply to that required at the lamp without needless waste.



The AC Compensarc cuts ⅔ from your lighting bill if you use alternating current.



The AC to DC Compensarc will transform alternating into direct current and reduce the voltage at the same time without needless waste.

No matter what current you have---Alternating or Direct---or what voltage or frequency, one of the will enable you to secure a light that will give those clear, bright pictures that everybody now demands.

What's the use of paying extra money for special screens, projecting machines, and first run films and then spoil the whole result with poor light? With the Fort Wayne Compensarcs you can get any kind of light you want regardless of the kind or quality of your current supply.

The Compensarcs will give you

STEADY LIGHT. No flickering, no sputtering, even when changing intensities or from one machine to another.

WHITE LIGHT. No yellow streaks, no ghosts.

BRIGHT LIGHT. Three times the light with two-thirds the current.

They are safe, efficient, easy to operate, fool proof and reliable.

C-5

Compensarcs are so commonly found in motion picture theatres that many people now call all current saving and transforming devices by that name.

How can any Exhibitor who claims to be a business man, overlook the tremendous money-making possibilities of these great plays released as Broadway Universal Features? For an inferior class and type of play you are asked by the average feature concerns to pay so large a rental price that you POSITIVELY CANNOT MAKE A CENT OF PROFIT. "The Man Inside" is a big play featuring a great player in a fascinating dual role; it is taken from a book that has been read throughout the United States; it is released on the Universal Program at a reasonable rental—one that enables you to make a good profit on the crowds this play and player will draw into your theatre. A New Year's Resolution

From its place at the top of the few whose picture progress in the year 1915 has been upwards, Metro greets the year 1916 with eagerness for even greater pictures, with enthusiasm for more artistic pictures and with the ability to present consistent pictures that dignify the industry, that gratify the public and assure the exhibitor of certain and continuous success. Metro points to its current releases as its best arguments, and Metro, in all modesty and with the utmost sincerity, resolves to continue to present the best motion pictures in the world.

The New IVAN Success

"Forbidden Fruit"

You yourself have yearned for that which you cannot gain. But the yearning which makes the story of "Forbidden Fruit" is of the shadows, in frightful contrast to the dazzling whiteness of the martyr-woman.

In this new sensational surprise of Ivan Abramson the woman sacrifices and yet the supreme sacrifice of her life comes years later when she is driven with her babes from the home of her husband.

There is not a single feature in the field today which for power of story and direction and beauty of acting and scenic effects is superior to "Forbidden Fruit."

Successes of To Day

in motion picturedom are measured not by advertisers' liberties and exaggerations. Successes in the motion picture field are measured by but one thing—the money they bring the exchange man, the money they bring the exhibitor, the satisfaction afforded the public.

Ivan Productions measured by these three rules are without superior in the field. Survey the list—"Should a Woman Divorce?", "Sins of the Parents," "Unwelcome Wife," "A Mother's Confession," "Concealed Truth," "Forbidden Fruit."

This drama introduces once more to the field Paula Shay, destined to assume a brilliant position in the firmament of photo play satellites.

A story of the West, a story of love, thwarped with danger.

Produced in the famous Western Vitagraph Studios

This heart drama features William Duncan, George Holt, Mary Ruby

And other eminent Vitagraph Stars.

Story :

Clem, a wandering blacksmith, lands in a rough mining camp and in gratitute for saving him from a beating at the hands of the camp bully, an old miner gives Clem some apparently worthless oil shares. These later boom when a big gusher is struck and Clem finds himself a rich man. A former sweetheart turns out to be his partner's sister, and when the bully meets his just deserts in Devil's Swamp, the Wanderer marries and settles down.

The release date of this startling three reel feature

Is Saturday, January 1st.

THE HAZARDS of HELEN

THE ORIGINAL RAILROAD SERIES, FEATURING

HELEN GIBSON

The Most Daring Actress in Pictures

Continue to be the most thrilling pictures on the market. Miss Gibson's daring is beyond description, and what is more, she performs every one of the sensational feats depicted herself, and challenges any other player to make the same assertion.

In "When Seconds Count," the release of January 8, Helen braves death in the manner shown in the still above. "The Haunted Station," released January 15, offers a thrilling story in which the climax is reached when the dauntless Helen climbs thirty feet, hand over hand on a swaying rope to a drawbridge that is being elevated.

1 and 3-sheet, 4-color lithographs on each issue. Newspaper mats also.

THE TRICKSTERS

An Episode in "The Ventures of Marguerite"

An unscrupulous plotter seeks to inveigle Marguerite into marriage, but is exposed in a picture teeming with action.

Released Friday, January 14. Attractive 1, 3 and 6-sheet, 4-color lithographs.

GUARDIAN ANGELS

A Bud Duncan Burlesque Comedy

Bud and his pal, Jack, are hired to guard Doughbags and his "little girl," who is no other than Ethel Teare. The action never lags.

Released Tuesday, January 11. Catchy posters in 1 and 3-sheet, 4-color lithographs.

THE PURIFICATION OF MULFERA

A "Stingaree" episode by E. W. HORNUNG. Creator of "Raffles."

A two-act episode in the series that is creating so much talk. Mulfera, the "toughest station in Australia," is the scene for the red-blooded action of this issue. Bishop Methuen and his chaplain set out to evangelize Mulfera, but they are waylaid by Stingaree and his pal, Howie, who take the travelers' places in preaching to the "bad men." Real good comedy is blended with the stirring action that is expected in this Hornung series.

Released Wednesday, January 12. Striking scenes on the 1, 3 and 6-sheet, 4-color lithographs with each issue.

Facts and Comments

ARE we not making a little too much use of "close ups?" The "close-ups" are the italics and the "caps" of the screen. If used with wise discrimination they have a fine effect. Indiscriminate and reckless use cheapens them. Even the megaphone loses its power and emphasis if we use it to excess. Within the last few weeks we have seen "close-ups" that were entirely unjustifiable. The director who tries to bolster up a weak production by a lavish use of "close-ups" does more than merely demonstrate his own incompetency. He ruins a precious tool for other directors, and to that extent he detracts from the art and power of the screen. No one realizes this better than the patrons of the motion picture theater. The percentage of experts in the audience is everlastingly on the increase.

NEXT to the friendly attitude of the press the favorable decisions of the courts on the rights of motion picture men are sources of genuine gratification. We are happy to note that the courts in Philadelphia have put a stop to the meddling censorial spies who descended upon the operator in his booth and demanded to see the approval of the censors. The courts have decided that this cannot be done hereafter and that there are other legal ways of ascertaining whether the Breitinger "imprimatur" is on the film.

EVEN more important is the decision of the Courts in the same city upholding the judicial right to review the findings of the censors. The appeals from the Catonian sages to the common sense of the Courts had become annoyingly successful to the censors, and through the Attorney-General they have evolved a new theory according to which the Courts really had no particular right to interfere with the censors. This notion was hit hard by the judicial shrapnel, and now there is nothing left of the censorial hopes.

UNDER no circumstances will we try to guess at the mental processes of the Jersey City officials who continue to persecute the motion picture exhibitors there in spite of the fact that the Grand Jury refused to indict the motion picture men who had been arrested under a literal interpretation of the "Blue Laws." The Grand Jury not only refused to indict, but it went on record as condemning in no uncertain terms the inquisitorial and irrational antics of the police authorities. If representative government and local autonomy mean anything at all the deliberate declaration of a Grand Jury ought to count for something. The voters will get their chance at these arbitrary police officials and at the powers that keep them in office. New York exhibitors have shown what they can do at the polls and how powerful are their means of agitation. If a campaign of slides and speeches will help the exhibitors of Jersey City at the next election THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD offers its services right now.

EXHIBITORS all over the country are crying out for films that tell a simple, coherent story with real human interest. They prefer stories of the American life of to-day, but any simple story which moves swiftly and logically and which tells a tale of the heart is welcome. Too many of the features on the market to-day are complicated and full of digressions and episodes that point away from the central theme. If a story can be told in two reels what in the name of common sense is the use of spinning it out into five and six, putting in a lot of social festivities and dances and weddings and parades and processions and Heaven knows what?

THE battle of "Feature versus Program" is, as the war dispatches would phrase it, "still raging." No one at this time can see the end, but both "belligerents" are putting up a determined struggle. Accounts of the battle vary and are more or less colored by the interests of the observer or reporter. The feature men predict the gradual but certain elimination of the program, while on the other hand the program men are very sure that what they call the "feature craze" is nearing its end. While the struggle is going on the importance of the exhibitor as the deciding factor is becoming more and more apparent. In the development of the industry in our country the exhibitor has so far been led by others and has had little chance to find his own proper stride. With the fermentation now going on he may become as important a factor as the exhibitor in Great Britain.

Directors as Artists*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

EXPECTING a director to be an alchemist is a little too much, though he is often called upon to transmute base metals into gold, but it is quite within his province to cultivate the esthetic sense and attempt some perfection of design. It is no longer enough to provide appropriate backgrounds and put the actors through a series of movements for the purpose of story-interpretation—he should learn to perceive the beautiful and express it in artistic forms. There is a live necessity for this improvement growing out of new conditions throughout the whole country, one appreciated by artists themselves.

Under the title of "Art and the American Public," Joseph Pennell, whose views of New York streets are marvels of beauty and revelation, has this to say, "We have more galleries, more exhibitions, more prizes, more patrons, more encouragement, more painters than any other country." "There is hardly a town without its art gallery, society or club, while the whole affair is directed by central authority. Even the cities tax themselves for the support of art, artists and art galleries. Art education has been given a place in schools and colleges."

"Murals," he continues in "The Craftsman," "are seen on the walls of every public building and many of the private houses one visits. Art has descended upon us and has spread all over us." In the same issue is another revelation to those not entirely acquainted with what is going on in their own country under the title "America in Bloom," a story of the tremendous interest in Garden Clubs started by a group of earnest flower-loving women in Philadelphia. "It has spread in ever-widening circles until the farthest shores of our country have felt the gentle motion and quickened into bloom."

Moving pictures are being exhibited before people who are giving art subjects careful study and before women who are cultivating their natural love of the beautiful in a field of their own chosing. "The women of our land have plunged with characteristic energy into the task of making and maintaining this national garden. The first step was the organization of garden clubs. The number and activity of these clubs indicate that with the American woman to think is to act, for they have already made a noticeable change in our highways and byways, little home gardens and city parks."

"Deep in every woman's nature is a native love of flowers. With little quickening this love ripens into a practical working knowledge of plant life. The hundreds of women members of garden clubs, now eagerly and actively working for the beautifying of America through personal gardens, well-planted streets and parks, are laborers, not theorists, for membership in a garden club is restricted to workers, and not merely for lovers of beautiful gardening."

Much of the charm of what greets the eye when we are travelling through the highways and byways of our country is not the result of professional talent, but comes direct from the hearts of people who are trying to make this part of the earth fair and sweet to look upon. This expression of national character, coming direct from the hearts of people, is fruitful of suggestion or those who are engaged in mirroring national life on the screen. The author of a photodrama can but barely indicate the necessity of beauty of background—it is for the director to formulate the picture and appropriately frame it.

A busy director, on whose shoulders rest many responsibilities, all merging into a delivery of the goods, may not feel that he has time for considering the frame of a screen picture, but if he realized how many fairly scream bad taste from lack of suitable enclosure he might give the matter a second thought. Merely to illustrate, a relief is suggested to the commonplace embrace of the lovers now regarded as THE suitable termination of a photodrama. Suppose it occurs in a hall where there is an artistic stairway adorned with plants. Place the camera on the stairway and "shoot" down amid the plants for a pretty effect.

Suppose the embrace occurs by a lake, usually the gem of a landscape. Again such a camera position can be chosen as will give an exquisite light effect through a frame of foliage. Sunlight is a great painter—there is only a question of ingenuity, or of imagination, involved. The broken light filtering through a lattice window, or through the artistic tracery of leaves, is music to the eye in this last scene between those whose struggles and adventures of life and love have been portrayed.

It will gradually come to be recognized that the author gives form and soul to a photodrama, the director its treatment and STYLE. Style in literature covers pretty nearly the whole craft of writing. In the New Art it may eventually cover the whole craft of visualizing what the author has written. Whatever the novelist's views of life, he is compelled to become a skilled craftsman before he can give those views such expression as he would like. The screen novelist is wholly at the mercy of the director. The latter's peculiarities, whether weak or strong, are bound to crop out and have a powerful determining influence either for success or for failure.

The time may even come when a director will be known by his style, the word including besides scene setting and lighting his method of handling actors. Just as soon as he gets away from the bare incongruities, or the silly superfluities, of former stage backgrounds and conventional methods of determining the action he begins to assert his individual taste and acquire a style of his own. The actor's whole inclination, his determination when highly intelligent, is to BE the character he is to impersonate, but his finest actuality as that character is bound to be affected by a background of unreality.

The living interpreter must have the living scene to do his best. The artificiality which deadens many plays originally headed straight for success is almost entirely due to an inability on the part of a director to preserve the illusion. The weak setting jars the cultivated part of an audience and dissipates attention. The way to fix attention on the story is look closely into it, become imbued with its mood and sustain that mood while designing, supervising and imagining in advance the effects most to be desired.

There is a vast amount of work for a director to do, but he is well-compensated to-day and made the autocrat of a play from the time it is placed in his hands until the negatives are finished, even until the positives are assembled. To be an autocrat of beauty, dramatic emphasis and design, and to be a success at it, the director may express his individuality in all he does, but THROUGH that fine artistic taste which must be gathered by study and nourished by unending cultivation. By the quality he exhibits he passes judgment on himself.

The New Departure

By W. Stephen Bush.

AS REPORTED exclusively in last week's Moving Picture World, the biggest exhibitors in the country, owning a hundred or more of the largest houses, have organized for the purpose mainly of having something to say in regard to the productions upon the character of which their investments must depend.

We look upon this event as the most important in the history of the American film since the formation of the Motion Picture Patents Company. It is important, to be sure, by reason of the union of the leading exhibitors, it is important because the advantages of organization are clearly recognized by men who have heavy investments in the industry, but it is most important because it asserts for the first time in this country the right of the exhibitor to have a voice in the selection of the subjects of features and because it asserts for the first time the right of the exhibitor to select his films in reliance on his own judgment and in the light of his own experience. The right to select implies the right to reject.

The moment the exhibitor exercises the right to reject a new day has dawned in American film history. The new organization, we understand, has no desire to dictate to the producers. Its members will offer to the producers with whom it deals such advice as is founded upon an intimate and practical acquaintance with the tastes and the demands of the motion picture public. We have no doubt whatever that this offer of intelligent cooperation will gladly be accepted by all producers. The burden of selection, the task of gauging the public's wants will be made lighter through the help of these experienced and successful showmen. The exhibitors come in daily contact with the public. After a man has successfully catered to a motion picture public for a period of years his judgment is entitled to great consideration, and it ought to be a welcome aid in the studio.

These owners of motion picture theatres are ready to show the faith they have in their judgment by guaranteeing to the producer the full cost of his negative, an advance of ten per cent. and a substantial share in the net earnings.

Unless I am very much mistaken I believe that this new organization will prove a tremendous benefit to the entire industry. It will for one thing stop the growing waste in production and it will reduce to a minimum the evils of over-production. We must give the new idea a little time of course, but there seems to me no doubt possible as to the ultimate results.

One of the best planks in the platform of the new organization is its cooperation with the small exhibitor. The small exhibitor whose demise has now been vainly predicted for the last three years is in spite of all the prophets the backbone of the industry. He cannot be left out of the reckoning in any scheme which aims at the improvement of films and their proper distribution. The new organization promises the small exhibitor generous territory and absolute protection against greedy competitors. Many of the men in the new organization are graduates from the ranks of the small exhibitor and are therefore quite capable of understanding the position and the needs of the small exhibitor.

The fearful waste in production which is going on all around us has heretofore of necessity been saddled upon the exhibitor, whether he owns a five hundred seat house or a theatre of six times that capacity. He bore his pro-rata share. The new organization will aim to stop the exorbitant and ridiculous salaries which are now being paid to stars of every magnitude. If the new system grows as we hope it will the incapable director will soon find his occupation gone.

I am not trying to "look into the seeds of time and tell which grain will grow and which will not," but I firmly believe that the new dispensation, if it prove successful, will be of benefit to the producer and will lighten the burdens of the exhibitor, which under the present conditions are altogether too heavy. He will cease to be "the goat."

The Exhibitor's Millennium

By W. Stephen Bush.

"SOMEWHERE out West" a film producing and distributing company has drawn a little attention to itself by its startling offer to its prospective patrons. The company which we carefully and conscientiously refrain from mentioning offers to give away the trifle of $500,000 in the manner following, to-wit: Every man, woman, or child, that uses our service will get, positively free, a Ford automobile."

The maker of this exceedingly handsome offer concludes his paragraph with this shrewd guess: "You wonder how we can do it."

Indeed we do! Some years ago a man was giving away a plate of ice cream with every admission, more recently an exhibitor put an automobile in his grab bag of premiums. Wonderful achievements in their way, but absolutely outclassed by this prodigious Santa Claus from the West.

We can't wonder enough. This philanthropic interest in the exhibitor's welfare is unheard of in the history of motion pictures. If I dwell on the thing much longer I fear I will give up my job on The Moving Picture World and get into the exhibiting ranks; in fact, ride straight into the ranks on a brand new Ford.

Here is a little more altruistic rage from the pen of the philanthropist: "Show your brother exhibitor that you are making money. They will look at that moving picture man; he is making money hand over fist, see him riding around in an automobile. Look prosperous and you will be prosperous. Get started now and have something to look forward to in the early spring."

To assure any exhibitor who, through bitter previous experience, has become calloused, the philanthropist exclaims thusly: "This is not a scheme to hold you up."

Certainly not. It is the dawn of a new era. It is the first step in a general distribution on Christmas principles. We have not seen the films which we are supposed to buy before we may enthrone ourselves in our new Ford. Only quibblers and unfeeling skeptics will want to delve into particulars. If particulars are wanted, however, the philanthropist is right there with them. In addition to your Ford you get "the pick of the world's market." To dispel the last lingering doubt you are further assured that "the other fellow will not get it."

Marvelous magicians who have too long remained in obscurity. Only one trifling difficulty may arise. The audience may flee in precipitate haste from the theatre rather than look at the "pick of the world's market."

Seriously speaking, we wonder what the philanthropist really thinks of the intelligence of our exhibitors. We cannot imagine that there is even one single, solitary exhibitor in the United States capable of believing in such preposterous schemes.

The man falling for such sublime altruism would have "to have something to look forward to in the early spring."

Federal Motion Picture Commission

Congressman Hughes Reintroduces His Censorship Bill in the House—Provides for Many Jobs.

THE motion picture interests of the United States will be called upon to support quite an army of government employees as well as face all sorts of inconveniences if the measure reintroduced into the House of Representatives by Congressman Dudley M. Hughes, of Danville, Ga., designated H. R. Bill No. 456, to create a new division of the Bureau of Education to be known as the Federal Motion Picture Commission, is allowed to be enacted into law.

The amount of money involved in the maintenance of this new division in itself is quite appalling. There is to be appropriated by Congress for its maintenance $40,000 annually which is to cover the salaries and other expensse, except the cost of manufacturing seals.

There are to be five commissioners, one of which is to be selected as chairman at a salary of $4,000 per annum, while the compensation of the other members is placed at $3,500. They are all to be appointed by the President, and each commissioner is to hold office for six years, except that when the commission is first constituted two commissioners are to be appointed for two years, two for four years and one for six years. Each commissioner will thereafter be appointed for a full term of six years. This means one or two fine plums each year to be handed out to the political faithful.

Many Jobs for Inspectors.

The possibilities do not stop here, for the commission is to be empowered to appoint deputy commissioners and other assistants and fix the compensation of each. Actual and necessary traveling expenses are to be allowed to those who travel on the business of the commission, and the commission will be provided with necessary office furniture, stationery, supplies, projecting machines, and appliances necessary for inspecting films and for the manufacture of film seals.

The commission is to have the right to appoint advisory commissioners to advise and assist in the examination and censoring of films, who will hold office during the pleasure of the commission. They, however, are to serve without compensation. No person may, however, be so appointed who directly or indirectly may have any pecuniary interest in the exhibition of motion pictures, or in any film exchange or firm or corporation engaged in manufacturing motion picture films.

The commission is to license every film submitted to it and intended for entrance into interstate commerce, unless it finds that such film is obscene, indecent, immoral, inhuman, or depicts a bull or prize fight, or is of such a character that its exhibition would tend to impair the health or corrupt the health or corrupt the morals of children or adults or incite to crime.

No effort is made within the bill to definitely declare what shall constitute "obscene, indecent, immoral, inhuman." There are more than "57 varieties" of each, yet nothing is said to instruct the commissioners as to the application of each work. But the commission is to be empowered to license any films subject to such excisions, amplifications, or alterations as the commission may direct and require to be made. The commission may, by unanimous vote, withdraw any license at any time for cause shown.

The commission is to adopt an appropriate seal to be affixed in such manner as the commission may direct to every film approved by it. This seal is not to be attached to any film which has been approved by the commission subject to revision until after the required changes have been made, a record of which is to be kept, and portions objected to shall be delivered into the possession of the commission. Upon the approval of a film, the commission will issue a certificate in the form to be adopted by it, which will describe the film and shall bear a serial number, stating the title of the film, the day upon which it was approved, and the number of linear feet it contains. The commission may, if it has licensed a film, issue a seal and certificate for each duplicate thereof without an examination of such duplicate, upon the payment of a license fee. No copyright is to be issued for any film which has not previously received the certificate and seal of this commission.

No motion picture film shall be allowed to enter into interstate commerce except when consigned to the commission for examination or other purposes, unless it has been licensed and a true copy of the certificate accompanies it.

Any film made and exhibited within any single state will be subject to the provisions of the proposed law, for Congress can exercise no jurisdiction over interstate commerce, but no unlicensed film may thereafter be shown in any place of amusement in the District of Columbia, or in any of the territories of the United States, or in any place under the jurisdiction of the United States.

Where the Money Will Come From.

A fee of one dollar will be charged for the examination by the commission of each film of one thousand feet or less, and 50 cents for each film which is a duplicate of any film which has been licensed. Any change or alteration in any picture on the film after it has been licensed, except the elimination of a part, shall be a violation of the law, and shall also void the certificate and seal of the film. The penalty for violation of the proposed law shall be a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment not more than one year, or both, in the discretion of the court, and the films unlawfully changed, exhibited, or transported shall be confiscated.

Besides the fee for examination, the commission will have the power to charge such sum as is necessary to pay the expense of manufacturing the seals, and they do not engage in manufacture in the government service in the same manner as is pursued in commercial establishments.

The fees are to be paid into the United States Treasury each month, except such amount as is collected for the purpose of defraying the expense of manufacturing the seal, which the commission will retain and expend for that purpose.

All the money collected is to go toward the maintenance of the commission for the Hughes Bill provides that three months after the commission has begun to license motion pictures, and at any time thereafter, the commission shall have the power to reduce the fees to such a sum as will produce no larger income than is necessary to pay the entire cost of the commission, including salaries and all other expenses.

The general principles of the law are to take effect immediately upon the passage of the bill.

H. R. Bill No. 456 is considered to represent one of the most drastic measures ever introduced into Congress. It is all the more so because of the fact that there is absolutely no need for such legislation. There is but one excuse, jobs for a lot of politicians, and the question is whether the people will accept such a proposition.

Philadelphia Censor at It Again

Equitable the Goat This Time—Puts Absolute Ban on "Sealed Lips."

THE Philadelphia censors are still busy. This time they have taken exception to a story which in book form, has sold into the millions, and which is in every public library in the world, namely "The Silence of Dean Maitland," which, under the title of "Sealed Lips," was released by the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, December 20.

It seems that friend censors refused to pass the picture because a minister, responsible for a young girl's wrongs, has a fight later in the play with the girl's father, then allows another to be punished for the crime committed during the fight.

The picturization of the famous Maxwell Grey story is far less frank than the book. It lessens the wrongs of the minister to a great extent and condones his crimes by permitting him to marry the wronged girl, which is not the case in the original fictional work. However, the three censors were certain in their own round hearts that a minister should not be held up to this sort of thing. "If any other person in the world was typified in the picture, except a minister, it would be all right, but it holds the 'cloth' up to ridicule and we cannot pass it," said the censors—but there is to be a last word. Milton C. Work, one of the principal officers of the Equitable Corporation, hastened to Philadelphia, made several cuts, voluntarily, in the picture, secured a review—then decided that a court of law would right the censor's wrongs and the case is docketed for Monday, December 20.

"The Silence of Dean Maitland" was published ten years ago, has been printed in almost every language and over one and one-half million copies have been sold. Pennsylvania is the only place the censors have taken exception to the picture.

MME. PETROVA FINISHES NEW SCREEN PLAY.

Mme. Petrova has finished the final scenes in "What Will People Say?" a five-part feature produced at the Popular Plays and Players studio in Fort Lee, N. J., and which will be released on the Metro program January 3. Mme. Petrova has come to be recognized as the foremost emotional actress on either the stage or screen, and great care is exercised by Metro to provide her with vehicles suited to her remarkable gifts.

Edison Leaves General Film Program

Will Release Five-Reel Features Through the Kleine-Edison Feature Service.

FOLLOWING close upon the announcement from the Edison studio that it would reduce its output through the General Film Company to one three-reeler a week, comes the most recent one that Edison has withdrawn all releases through that company. This new order of things applies to "Blade o' Grass," in which Leonie Flugrath and Pat. O'Malley were to be featured; to "The Matchmakers," in which Sally Crute and William Wadsworth lead; to "Celeste of the Ambulance Corps," with the same players as "Blade o' Grass," and "The Duel," all of which were to be released the latter part of December and during the first half of January. This is contrary to the advertised announcements that have appeared stating that the above plays would be released through the General Film Company.

This leaves Edison releasing no films whatever through the General Film program, but the Edison studio will go on as usual devoting itself to the production of five-reel features, released through the Kleine-Edison Feature Service. Manager Leonard W. McChesney is silent on whether the studio would hereafter produce any shorter films than these five-reelers, and is also silent on the cause of the Edison withdrawal from the General Film.

The Edison organization will, for the present, release two five-reel features, the next one being, on January 12, "The Catspaw," in which Miriam Nesbitt and Marc MacDermott are featured; on January 26, "The Innocence of Ruth," in which Viola Dana and Edward Earle will star; on February 9, Mabel Trunnelle and Robert Conness in "The Crucifixion of Phillip Strong"; and Carroll McComas and Richard Tucker in "At the Rainbow's End," on February 23.

The last release of the Edison studio through the General Film was "Santa Claus Versus Cupid," on December 18.

Warda Howard

WARDA HOWARD, a leading woman with Essanay, leaped into the icy water of Lake Michigan in the middle of December (December 14) in taking a scene for a photoplay. No, gentle reader, she was not nearly drowned, neither did she take a chill and barely escape with her life. Mirabile Dictu! She says that after the first shock was over she enjoyed it.

It was a scene in "The Prisoner at the Bar," a three-part drama, in which, spurned by the man who has wronged her, she leaps into the water to end her life.

Warda Howard.

With the thermometer at ten degrees above zero, and ice forming in the lake, she jumped off a pier while the camera man ground his machine. She struggled in the water three minutes, rising and sinking several times, to simulate a drowning person, before she was rescued by the noble fisherman.

She was hustled into a heated auto, wrapped in heavy blankets and rushed to her home.

"I suffered no ill effects, although I would not care to do this every day," said Miss Howard. "In fact, after the first shock, which made me gasp for breath, I felt a thrill and stimulus from the icy water."

Miss Howard is a daughter of Professor C. H. S. Howard, head of the Spanish department of the University of California, of which institution she is a graduate. She was well known on Broadway before joining Essanay. She has starred in such productions as "The Lion and the Mouse," "The Wolf," "Paid in Full," "The Christian," "When Knighthood Was in Flower," "The Girl of the Golden West," and "Brewster's Millions."

In Essanay photoplays she has played leading feminine roles opposite Henry B. Walthall in "The Raven," "Temper," "The Circular Path," and "The Outer Edge."

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"The Immigrant" at the Strand.

VALESKA SURATT in a new silent drama entitled "The Immigrant," is at the Strand theater. The play was written especially for Miss Suratt by Marion Fairfax. The story has to do with Masha, a young Russian girl, who comes to America in the steerage. Two men on the boat, David Harding, and J. J. Walton, are struck by her beauty. To protect Masha from the insults of one of the officers, Harding secures for her a second-class cabin. Walton has noticed the Russian's beauty and is attracted by her. Harding secures the address of her relatives in New York, and so does Walton. The husband of Masha's sister is a drunken brute, and when Walton appears and offers Masha a position in his house, her brother-in-law forces her to go, and Masha becomes Walton's mistress. The blowing up of a dam is the spectacular effect of the picture, which was produced by the Jesse L. Lasky Co. Other features are scenic and educational studies, the Strand Topical Review, new ladies' fashions in colors, and "Animal Movements Analyzed," a striking picture showing actions of a horse and other animals. A new comedy concludes the film part of the program. A new Strand quartette is heard in popular and operatic arias. Martha De Lachman, Margaret Horton and Martin Richardson are the soloists.

Triangle Program at the Knickerbocker.

DeWolf Hopper's debut as a motion picture star took place this week at the Knickerbocker theater in a film version of the Cervantes classic, "Don Quixote." In Mr. Hopper's support, Fay Tincher will appear as Dulcinea; Max Davidson, Sancho Panza; Rhea Mitchell, Lucinda; Chester Withey, Don Fernando, and a typical Griffith cast, not forgetting Rosinante and Dapple, the Don's ancient steed and Sancho's clever mule. To complete its Christmas star combination at the Knickerbocker, the Triangle has added Frank Keenan's ruthless exposition of the horrors of war, "The Despoiler," and for comedy relief, a Mack Sennett satire called "The Hunt." Ford Sterling is the featured member of the cast.

"The Reform Candidate" at the Broadway.

At the Broadway theater Maclyn Arbuckle, the celebrated American actor, is the headliner in a new Paramount picture entitled "The Reform Candidate." Aside from being a fine comedian, Mr. Arbuckle proves himself a dramatic actor of ruggedness and power. "The Reform Candidate" is a political romance, and is acted by a well selected cast. The remainder of the program consists of Pathe current events, "Climbing Mount Blanc," a beautiful colored scenic; "Charlie in Cuckoo Land," a very funny cartoon; selected comedies and overture by the orchestra.

Program at the Vitagraph.

"A Night Out," a sparkling three-part comedy; Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in a James Montgomery Flagg story, "Is Christmas a Bore?" and a Broadway star feature, "The Thirteenth Girl," a three-part drama from the magazine story by Francis Aymar Mathews, "Where Did Lottie Go?" comprise this week's bill at the Vitagraph theater. Arline Pretty, Julia Swayne Gordon, Robert Whiworth and other capable Vitagraph players are in the last-mentioned picture.

"The Birth of a Nation" still holds the fort at the Liberty theater.

OHIO CENSOR STOPS THE TRAIN.

Just to show that he bears no partiality between Shakespeare and "The Hazards of Helen," the Ohio motion picture censor sharpened his shears up last week and snipped a scene from the railroad series. Kalem officials are still trying to figure the reason for the elimination, notice of which they received in the following letter from D. W. Phillips, manager of the Columbus branch of the General Film Company. The letter read: "We regret to advise that the following elimination has been made on your release of Saturday, December 25, 'The Boy at the Throttle,' an episode in the 'Hazards of Helen' series: Cut out scene showing child running railway engine." It might be said in passing that if picture productions must have a moral, the one that could be found in the above offering is a warning to youngsters of the dire fates that befall youngsters who climb aboard railroad engines when no one is looking and pull the throttle open.

G. McL. Baynes Visits New York

Director of Hepworth Manufacturing Company of England Talks on Renewed Activities at His Studios.

BRINGING over two recent examples of the work of the studios of the Hepworth Manufacturing Company of London, G. McL. Baynes, director of the company, has for two weeks been looking over the film situation in the United States. Mr. Baynes' company plans an energetic campaign in this country for the sale of the Hepworth brand. On December 15 two fine subjects, "Iris" and "A Welsh Singer," were shown to the trade in New York and received praise. Mr. Baynes said there were many others coming, some of which personally he considered superior to the two shown.

The company's determination vigorously to enter the American market was reached indirectly as the result of the invasion by American subjects of the English market. The Hepworth decided it would be necessary to reach out in order to hold its own patrons. The discovery came that the features proving so successful at home were the counterparts of the subjects whose competition it had felt. The company is confining its efforts to five-part pictures or larger. Four directors are at work now. These are producing an average of approximately 6,000 feet a week.

"We are contracting for the works of famous playwrights and authors," said Mr. Baynes to a World man. "You have today seen an illustration of how well this policy is working out in the cases of the play 'Iris' by Sir Arthur Pinero and the novel 'A Welsh Singer' by Allen Raine. We have already completed Thomas Hardy's 'Far from the Madding Crowd,' featuring Florence Turner and Henry Edwards, and produced by Larry Trimble. You will see it here in January, and I have every hope it will be liked as well in the United States as it has been in England. So, too, we have finished Trowbridge's 'The White Hope,' and I don't mind telling you we think it is great. From Sydney Grundy we will have 'Sowing the Wind' and 'Coming Through the Rye.' We also have Mrs. Humphrey Ward's 'The Marriage of William Ash.' Henry Arthur Jones and Temple Thurston are two more noted men whose works will be adapted by Hepworth.

"It is one of our established rules that everyone in our plant shall have knowledge of what the other fellow is doing. Cecil Milton Hepworth, our chief producer, devotes three evenings a week to viewing the productions of other companies. It is practically compulsory for every person in an official capacity to do the same thing at least two times a week. It is the duty of the London office to ascertain where the larger productions are being shown on given evenings and arrange for the staff to reach these theaters. Then again, once every fortnight the entire staff is assembled for viewing the work of the Hepworth studio. We discuss and dissect our own work and seek out any weak spots that we may fortify them.

"As to photographic difficulties encountered in outdoor work in England it is ridiculous to say we cannot make pictures there. It is true production is more expensive, perhaps twice as much, because we have to wait for the sunshine. But understanding these conditions we minimize the expense to a great extent; we work on different lines from what you do in California, for instance. In our photography we are striving for artistic effects, for definition, for halftones. When the present war tax was under discussion someone suggested to the Chancellor of the Exchequer that England was dependent on the outside world for its pictures, that good photography could not be obtained in England, and that if the impost was too high there might be no pictures. Pictures produced by the Hepworth Manufacturing Company have given this statement the lie direct.

"The way the tax works out, the importer pays about twenty per cent. and the English manufacturer about forty-five per cent. Don't misunderstand me. This is merely stating a fact, not uttering a complaint. We are only too anxious to pay out every penny we can get hold of to support in our small way the great cause of our little country, and I as an Englishman have yet to hear a Britisher grumble on taxation. The imposition of the tax has been beneficial in unexpected ways. For instance, where formerly it was possible to import a worthless bit of film and make a profit if two copies were sold, that can be done no longer. The tax is an aid to good American pictures and to good English pictures. We have got to have American pictures; there are not enough English manufacturers to supply six thousand houses."

Mr. Baynes was speaking about advertising pictures to the general public. He told of the success of the Hepworth Company in interesting the residents of the great English metropolis. Posters were placed each week in the many traffic stations in and around London telling where Hepworth subjects could be seen. Few words were used in the text, it being the idea literally to permit a man to read as he ran. There were about six hundred of these announcements. So thoroughly did they do the work intended that if by any chance the weekly billposting were delayed complaints would come in.

The great war in Europe was hardly two months old when the Hepworth Company inaugurated the policy of sending films to the men in the trenches. These are shown in "picture palaces" fitted up by the soldiers. Not always have these been situated at a sufficient distance from the firing zone to prevent their destruction by hostile fire. They were quickly rebuilt, however. There have been sent from fifty to sixty thousand feet a month, every subject different. The Hepworth Company was not able to continue to supply this demand alone. There have been many occasions when other companies have been called on for contributions. Mr. Baynes said in every instance there had been prompt response, and the Americans have been among the first. After the viewing of the pictures by one division, they are sent "down the line" to the others. A charge of admission is sometimes made, either two cents or four cents, all of which goes into the canteen, where it is used for the purchase of minor luxuries for the soldiers.

So keenly have the soldiers appreciated the opportunities of seeing these pictures that generals in command were moved to write to the company. Mr. Baynes quoted in substance from one of the letters: "If you gentlemen had only the remotest idea of what it means to these men, you would feel more than repaid. Here are soldiers who have been weeks in the trenches, many of them in the first line; they then look upon familiar scenes, pictures taken perhaps near their homes. For two hours they forget the war. They are home."

Mr. Baynes sailed for England on Wednesday, December 22.

Vernot Becomes Gaumont Director

Specially Engaged to Handle the Company Which Will Feature Miss Marguerite Courtot.

THE magnitude of the Gaumont expansion on the Mutual program has been more than verified by the signing of contracts with important stars to appear in the Gaumont features to be released as Mutual Masterpictures, edition de luxe, and now Gaumont announces the engagement of Henry J. Vernot as a director of one of these Masterpicture companies.

Mr. Vernot returns to the company which brought him to America. In 1911-12 he was a director of a Gaumont company, a position he had occupied before this with the same corporation in Paris. In 1912 he went to the Eclair Company, leaving that concern a year later to direct for Pathe.

Mr. Vernot will devote his entire attention to the company which will feature Miss Marguerite Courtot. This little star has just been signed, and will leave for the Gaumont winter quarters at Jacksonville, Fla., on Christmas Day. Mr. Vernot has directed some of the most popular pictures ever released in America, and his return to Gaumont gives him ample opportunity to display his skill in the direction of big features. The first Mutual Masterpicture, edition de luxe, in which he will direct Miss Courtot will be released in February.

LUTHER A. REED JOINS LASKY STAFF.

Luther A. Reed, for the past eight years a member of the reportorial staff of the New York Herald, has gone to the Lasky studios at Hollywood, California, to become a member of the photodramatic department, which is under the general supervision of William C. De Mille.

Mr. Reed is a graduate of Columbia University, and during his experience as a newspaper man in New York City has come into contact with the leading men of affairs of the nation. For the past few years he has been ship news editor of the Herald, one of the most important departments of the newspaper. Previously he was music and dramatic critic.

A student of affairs, Mr. Reed has written considerably for the motion picture and now he has given up newspaper work to enter on a career as a photodramatist. For the present at the Lasky studios he will be associated with Paul Dickey, who left for the studios at the same time. Mr. Dickey will join the staff of Lasky directors.

Buffalo Times Syndicate Opens Office

John T. Miller, Personal Representative of Norman E. Mack, Planning Exploitation of New Serial.

THE Buffalo Times Motion Picture Syndicate has opened offices on the twelfth floor of the Times Building, Forty-second street and Broadway, in New York City. John F. Miller, representing Norman F. Mack, editor of the Buffalo Times, is in charge. Mr. Miller, whose picture experience has been extensive, has been associated with Mr. Mack for several years. The Buffalo Times was one of the first of the great newspapers to take cognizance of the increasing importance of the motion picture, and the department has been under the guidance of Mr. Miller from the first.

Two large serials have been exploited by the newspapers connected with the Buffalo Times syndicate, "Lucille Love," by the Universal, and "Who Pays?" by Pathe. The success of these is history. Mr. Miller is now concluding arrangements for another serial which he promises will exceed in public interest any of which he has knowledge. The formal announcement will be made within a few days.

The Buffalo Times also has gone extensively into the exploitation of war pictures and has been successful. Two of these subjects have been "Warring Millions, or the Battles of a Nation," and "Fighting in France," the property of the American Correspondent Film Company. Mr. Miller intends very soon to put on the former picture in one of the large downtown theaters in New York City. "One thing about these subjects," he said, "is that they are guaranteed battle pictures."

The Buffalo Times has one of the largest publishing plants in the country. In the big establishment in the lake city there are printed besides the Times three magazines as well as black and white and colored supplements for many other newspapers. On the staff of the Times are some of the best syndicate men in the country. Combined with the big journal are forty-seven newspapers of the first-class, and seventy of the second class. It is this engine of publicity through which Mr. Miller will exploit his coming subject.

"Mr. Mack personally is very much interested in the motion picture industry," said Mr. Miller. "He is a partisan of good clean, moral pictures, and his influence is not only on the side of these, but also strongly against all subjects that do not come under this classification."

Cameramen Direct a Ball

Scenes at Palm Garden Are All in Focus During Third Annual Festivities of the Cinema Club.

DIRECTORS, actors, scenario writers, exhibitors and, of course, cameramen, representatives of every department of photoplay production in fact, were the guests of the Cinema Camera Club of America at its third annual ball in Palm Garden, New York, on December 18. There were between 600 and 700 guests, mostly representing the executive or acting forces of producers in the east. Practically all of the boxes overlooking the dancing floor were occupied by parties from the various studios—Edison, Thanhouser and Equitable taking the lead in point of numbers.

Conspicuous in an attractive scheme of decoration were the illumined letters spelling "Cinema Club" above the platform occupied by the orchestra. Strips of white bunting flecked with stars were suspended about the hall in an artistic design. The surprise of the evening was the delightful dancing of Doris Booth, a child of about six years, who in two solo numbers revealed a surprising grace and an instinctive sense of rhythm. These exhibitions and the grand march were the only interruptions in a long dance program. Shortly before dawn on Sunday morning, Leon J. Rubinstein, of the Thanhouser Company, entertained his immediate flock and a few others at a supper served in Palm Garden.

Leaders in the grand march were: Anita Stewart and Augustus Phillips, Carl Gregory and Virginia Norton, Mabel Trunnelle and Herbert Prior, Edward Earle and Leonie Flugrath.

The box parties included: Edison—Richard Ridgley, Edward Earle, Mr. and Mrs. George Wright, Herbert Prior, Mabel Trunnelle, Augustus Phillips, Viola Dana, Leonie Flugrath, Richard Tucker and John Collins;

Thanhouser—Gladys Hulette, Herman Deering, Eugene Nowland, Leon J. Rubinstein, Louise Warden, Katherine Walters, Alice Seacord, John Lehnberg, Cecelia Doherty, Otto Brautigan, Gladys Leslie, William Hall, Charles Goerke, Lawrence Fowler and Eugene Moore, Jr.;

Equitable—Clara Whipple, Rene Glendenning, Mr. and Mrs. Wray Physioc, Joseph F. Physioc, Jr., Thomas McKnight, Frank Crane, Frank Berresford and Mary Charleson;

Peerless—Lucien Andriot, John Van Den Beroack, Alec Francis and Lucien Tanguay;

Universal—Mr. and Mrs. Harry Keepers, Philip Massi, Marion Heath, Mildred Mason, Mildred Tag, Jack Harvey and William Harvey;

Famous Players—J. Searle Dawley, L. Broening, Gladys Marshall, Frederick Thomson, Dorothy Green, J. M. Wheeler, Mr. and Mrs. Leo Jacobi, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Gattle, Manuel Chappell;

Fox—Mr. and Mrs. Will S. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Vaughn and William Tooker.

Among others present were: Lee Ochs, Samuel Trigger, Mr. and Mrs. George Lessey, Edith Storey, Shannon Fife, Irving Cummings, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Curley, Victor Vinton, Edna Vinton, George De Carlton, Jesse J. Goldburg, Joe Farnham, Joseph Smiley, Marshall Farnum, Howard Tobias, Paul Scardon, Arline Pretty, Alice Lake, Thomas McKnight, Elizabeth Goodall.

The entertainment committee comprised: P. E. Rosen, chairman; Walter K. Scott, A. L. Ansbacher, Arthur Edeson, George Lane. Reception committee: Emmett Williams, Edward Wynard, Hal Young, John Theiss, William Hall, B. Struckman, R. Lyons, Arthur Todd, A. Martinelli and Lewis Physioc. John A. Arnold was the floor manager, assisted by George Lane and A. Lloyd Lewis.

Protest Against Ordinance

Board of Trade, Local Exhibitors and Moving Picture World Heard by Aldermen.

MOVING picture interests were largely and vigorously represented before the General Welfare Committee of the New York City Board of Aldermen at its session on Friday last.

An ordinance had been introduced requiring an increase of $50 in the licenses of all motion picture theaters in New York City with a capacity of more than six hundred seats. The same ordinance also contained a curious provision forbidding the presence of a stage in any motion picture theater.

Among those who appeared to speak against the passage of the ordinance were F. H. Richardson of the Moving Picture World; Samuel Trigger, former president of the local exhibitors' league and still actively interested in the councils of that organization; J. W. Binder of the Board of Trade, and others. Lee A. Ochs, president of the local and state exhibitors' organization of New York, made an eloquent address in opposition to the ordinance.

Mr. Richardson declared that there was absolutely no reason whatever for wanting to abolish the stage in the motion picture theaters. On the contrary, he said, the stage was useful in more than one way. He pointed to the fact that the presence of a stage always meant that the screen was a good distance away from the front seats. He thought it was bad to have the screen too close to the audience, as it often meant a severe strain on the eyes. The man, he continued, who sits in the front row of a theater where the screen is too close is compelled to take in the whole picture to follow it with any satisfaction, and this involved a hard task on the eyes.

Mr. Trigger spoke against the adoption of the ordinance as a piece of persecution and questioned whether there was any real and honest public demand for it. In the course of the hearing the question was brought up whether License Commissioner Bell was behind the ordinance, but no proof was offered or attempted to show that he was. Mr. Binder called attention to the excessive taxes and burdens now upon the shoulders of the exhibitor and declared there was neither reason nor justice in any of the provisions of the proposed ordinance. William Seabury, counsel for the Board of Trade, also made a telling argument.

The members of the committee betrayed considerable interest in the arguments submitted to them and seemed, on the whole, little disposed to defend the ordinance. While no decision was announced at the end of the hearing, the impression prevailed generally that the ordinance would not be reported favorably and that in all likelihood it will not come up for further consideration.

MOSS CALLS GENERAL CONFERENCE.

B. S. Moss, president of the B. S. Moss Theatrical Enterprises, the Amalgamated Booking Agency and the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation, has issued a broadcast appeal to independent motion picture producers.

It is his desire to place before all independents a scheme to be operated during the coming year for the mutual benefit of all independents.

New Feature Organization Announced

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., Will in January Begin Release of Notable Foreign as Well as American Subjects.

A NEW feature organization will enter the feature field shortly after the new year has been ushered in. This is Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., formed by several men prominent in filmdom. Those at the head of this newest aspirant for success in the feature field frankly declare it is the dearth of what they consider really meritorious big productions that has caused them to enter into competition with the feature organizations now in existence. Quality, with a capital "Q," will be the predominating characteristic of all the productions which bear the trade-mark of Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., and it is emphatically asserted by one of the founders of the organization.

"We fully realize that the feature field is regarded by many individuals as being somewhat overcrowded," the film man declared. "At the same time, here is one important fact which those who are complaining of this condition are overlooking. The market for good features is not overcrowded—never has been, in fact."

Sol. Berman has been elected as temporary head of the new organization and will shortly take up his new duties. The general policy of Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., will consist in presenting the world's most famous stars—this to include film stars as well as stars of the legitimate stage—in productions averaging five reels in length. These subjects will be released at weekly intervals, commencing with Monday, January 24, when "Secret Love," based upon Frances Hodgson Burnett's novel, "The Lass of Lowrie's," and featuring Helen Ware, will be issued.

Of particular interest is a statement made to the effect that some of the foremost foreign producers have asked for the privilege of contributing the best of their efforts to the Bluebird's program of releases. As an example of what may be expected in this direction are "Rupert of Hentzau" and "Shulamite," directed by George Loane Tucker, the man who produced "Traffic in Souls," and "Jeanne Dore."

J. Warren Kerrigan has made his last appearance in Universal subjects and henceforth will be counted among the Bluebird stars. Hobart Bosworth is another player who will confine his activities to those subjects, as will Ella Hall, Lois Weber, Phillips Smalley and many others of equal popularity.

"Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., will maintain only two exchanges of its own," said Mr. Berman. "One of these will be at 1600 Broadway, New York City. The other will be in Chicago, where we are even now negotiating for suitable quarters. An announcement concerning its location will probably be issued next week. The remainder of the country will be supplied by existing exchanges."

The second Bluebird release will be "Undine," based upon the wonderfully dramatic mythological story by De La Motte Foquest, and released Monday, January 31. The February 7 release will be "The Shulamite." Then comes, on February 14, Booth Tarkington's intensely dramatic story, "The Flirt," produced by the Smalleys and featuring Marie Walcamp. On Monday, February 21, will be "Jeanne Dore," in which Sarah Bernhardt once more makes her bow to photoplay patrons.

"We have adopted the name of Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.," Mr. Berman stated, "because this company is to be the harbinger of the coming of the very best that can be produced in features. Unless a production is 100 per cent. perfect it will not be issued. There will be no fair or passable Bluebird releases—the exhibitor has our definite promise on that!"

ADDITION TO BIG FOUR PUBLICITY DEPARTMENT.

The advertising and publicity department of the V-L-S-E was further augmented this week, when Victor M. Shapiro was made assistant to E. L. Masters, the head of that office. Mr. Shapiro was for some time associated with Wid Gunning when Mr. Gunning conducted the Motion Picture Section of the New York Evening Mail, and recently has been attached to the Detroit sub-office of the V-L-S-E. He has had a practical advertising experience, having been Mr. Masters' assistant in the promotion and service departments of the Hearst magazines, and having also been associated with Mr. Masters in the advertising agency field.

The Premo Feature Film Corporation announces that it has taken the building at 11 East Fourteenth street, New York City, formerly the Kleine and Biograph studios, as its executive offices and studio.

Hugh Tighe Retires From Willis Wood

His Interests in Big Kansas City Picture House Are Bought by H. O. Martin and E. L. Estes.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made that H. O. Martin and E. L. Estes have purchased the interest of Hugh Tighe in the Willis Wood theater, Kansas City. Henry Lappe, who with Mr. Tighe converted the old "legit" house into one of the finest motion picture theaters in the country, will retain his ownership in the Willis Wood.

Mr. Martin and Mr. Estes conducted the Empress theater in Kansas City as a picture house and have state rights in Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska for several big feature films. They will continue this activity, and have moved their exchange office from the Gumbel Building to the theater.

Mr. Estes will be manager of the Willis Wood. Joseph H. Gilday, who has been with the house since it began its new policy, will continue as resident manager. The Willis Wood will use big feature plays and has for its offering Christmas week "The Battle Cry of Peace." A big advertising campaign has been started for the film and the governors of Missouri and Kansas and numerous army officers have been invited to view it as guests of the house.

Paul Dickey a Lasky Director

WIDELY known as a dramatist, actor and stage director, Paul Dickey has left New York for the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company studios at Hollywood, Cal., to begin work as one of the Lasky directors. He will undertake a production on his arrival, his first photoplay being a picturization of the big stage success, "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine." Miss Charlotte Walker will be the star and the feature will be released through Paramount Features Corporation.

Paul Dickey.

During the past few years Mr. Dickey has come rapidly to the front among the younger successful dramatists of America. In collaboration with Charles W. Goddard he wrote "The Misleading Lady," "The Ghost Breaker," which has been produced in photoplay form by the Lasky Company; "The Last Laugh," and "Miss Information," in which Elsie Janis appeared this winter on Broadway. With his own company of players Mr. Dickey toured the vaudeville circuits of the country several times as the star in his one-act farce entitled, "The Come Back."

A graduate of the University of Michigan, Mr. Dickey has been steadily forging ahead in the theatrical world. For some time past, however, he has been devoting himself methodically and carefully to the study of the art of motion picture producing. He has studied the craft as a guest in some of the leading studios of the country and he will take with him to the Lasky studios a fund of knowledge and experience.

Mr. Dickey is a native of Chicago and some eight or ten years ago was rated among the best high school athletes of the city. He has continued his activities along these lines.

GEORGE SPINK, NEW LUBIN PRESS AGENT.

George Spink, the present publicity promoter of the Lubin Manufacturing Company of Philadelphia, was formerly attached to the scenario staff, his specialty having been one-act comedies.

Mr. Spink is the author of the one-act screams, "Otto's Cabaret," "This Isn't the Life" and "The New Janitor," in which Dave Don, the celebrated comedian, is featured. He was formerly an author of international reputation who contributed many successes to the vaudeville stage and is a musician of marked ability.

Mr. Spink succeeds Joe Farnham, who is at present with the Ocean Film Company, New York.

Massachusetts League Election

Officers to Be Chosen at Meeting to Be Held in January—President Horstmann to Retire.

THE annual election of officers of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts is scheduled to be held next month. Ernest H. Horstmann, who has been the head of the league during the last three years, has stated that he is not a candidate for re-election and that he will not accept the office under any condition for another term on account of the pressure of his private business.

The other officers, all of whom have been in office for two years, have also stated that they are prepared to retire and display the same attitude as Mr. Horstmann regarding another term.

In the refusal of Mr. Horstmann to accept the office for one more year, the Massachusetts League is losing an able executive who has always had the interest of the league at heart and has worked untiringly for its success and has accomplished many things that have been helpful.

During his tenure of office he has succeeded, one might say, in personally defeating several proposed censorship bills, and also repealed the bill, which provided for a five minute intermission between every reel of pictures. Through the endeavors of Mr. Horstmann, one of the worst censorship bills that has ever been offered to a legislature was defeated last year.

The bill was backed by most of the leading women's clubs and social organizations throughout the state. At every hearing over 200 women were present. The proponents of this bill will not be dormant this year. They will endeavor to rectify their weak arguments of last year. When the league elects a leader for 1916 they should have a man who is willing to work and not only that, every member should pledge himself to co-operate with him in his work.

The work in the Massachusetts League has always been done by a few, who have neglected their own business ventures in order that the industry might not be subjected to any hostile legislation.

It is now time for the legislative committee of the league to get together and prepare their anti-censorship campaign. This is a fight that cannot be waged at the last minute, and if they wish to avoid censorship there is only one way to defeat it and that is by preparing an advance campaign.

The screen is their best medium of publicity and they ought to secure the co-operation of all newspapers if possible. The police members of the legislature fear the power of the screen and they realize that it exerts a great influence over the moving picture lover. They displayed this fear last year, when it was rumored that the league intended to use every moving picture screen in the state in an endeavor to defeat any legislator who voted for censorship.

Call for Chicago Meeting

Secretary Delves Issues Official Invitation for Meeting of National League Executive Board.

THE following invitation to the exhibitors from James Delves, secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, is self-explanatory:

"Dear Sir: A two-day session of the semi-annual meeting of the Executive Board of the M. P. E. L. of America has been called by President Fred J. Harrington for January 5 and 6, 1916, at the La Salle Hotel, Chicago, Ill., the first meeting to convene at 10:30 A. M. Wednesday, January 5.

"Our prospects are bright for fairly good attendance of exhibitors at this meeting as several state leagues have already declared the intentions of having a representative present, and I take great pleasure in extending to you, by request of President Herrington, an urgent invitation to be with us if you can possibly make it convenient to do so.

"Several matters of vital importance to you as an exhibitor and to the best interest of the organization will be taken up for consideration, including the selection of the next national convention city for the next national convention which will be held in July, 1916. Special care and due consideration should be given to this question as it is of vital importance to the future of the national league. Several cities have already made very liberal offers and are very anxious to secure the convention—namely, Chicago, Detroit, Pittsburgh and New York.

"We must next turn our attention to the organization of the exhibitors, as it was never more needed than at the present, and unless something is done in the very near future in combining these forces and putting the organization on a more solid foundation the exhibiting business will, I am afraid, be past redemption, as you no doubt know that in many sections of the country, and in particular those where organization is lax, the business is in a deplorable condition. We as exhibitors should get together for the protection of the industry as a whole. We have the power. Why cannot we use it for our own protection against the petty politicians who are responsible for the greater part of our persecutions?

"Hoping that we may be favored with your presence and your valued counsel and assistance at this meeting, and also the pleasure of meeting you and as many others of your state exhibitors as can be present, I am, Yours truly,

"(Signed) JAMES DELVES, National Secretary."

"Sis Hopkins" a Kalem Star

Announcement Is Made of Important Capture for Pictures in Persuading Rose Melville to Place Her Unique Rural Character on Screen.

SPECULATION aroused by the unique announcement in the advertising pages of last week's Moving Picture World that "Sis Hopkins" would be presented on the screen is satisfied by the news that Rose Melville, creator of the inimitable Sis, probably the best-known comedy character of the American stage, had been lured to the screen by the Kalem Company. Miss Melville has signed a long-term contract that practically insures her being a permanent screen fixture. Following the general Kalem policy, she will be presented in comedy vehicles written especially for the screen, but built around the famous rural character. The star will arrive in New York within a few days from her Lake George home and start almost immediately for Jacksonville, where the pictures will be produced.

A departure of note in the presentation of prominent stars is found in the Kalem announcement that in addition to a multiple-reel feature a series of one-reel Sis Hopkins comedies will also be offered. These short films will be released in regular service, replacing the "Ventures of Marguerite" in February as the Kalem Friday release through the General Film Company. An extensive publicity campaign of unusual proportions will be built around the character of Sis Hopkins, a radical step in connection with regular program releases.

Kalem officials are now busily engaged in recruiting an all star company to appear in the Sis Hopkins comedies. Though conditions are not yet ripe for a definite announcement of the supporting players, a surprise is promised when the news is finally issued. Seeking to escape the danger of having a "one-star" organization with mediocre support, Kalem has already practically placed under contract a number of players who are themselves listed as stars with large personal followings in the comedy field. It is expected that further announcement in this regard, as well as the name of the director and details of the initial offering will be made within a few days.

No other character creation of the stage has ever taken so complete a hold on a player's identity as that of Sis Hopkins. Though well known as a dramatic actress and musical comedy favorite before the character of Sis Hopkins leaped into country-wide fame that unique character became so popular that Rose Melville has never since been allowed to be anything but Sis Hopkins. Without the possibilities for universal popularity presented by the screen the Sis Hopkins character took the country by storm a decade ago, and the pig-tailed hair and gingham-aproned girl of the farm reached the heights of becoming a fad. Sis Hopkins dolls, Sis Hopkins aprons, and Sis Hopkins hair-ribbons were among the many crazes of the time. She is the only player known to have had a national publication named after her, when the quaintly humerous sayings of the character inspired the establishment of "Sis Hopkins Library of Fun," published by the Leslie-Judge Company.

It is remarkable to note that the character of Sis Hopkins was the creation of Miss Melville and not the work of an author. Born in Terre Haute, Ind., and educated at St. Mary's of the Woods Convent and Franklin College, Ind., Miss Melville made her first stage appearance in 1889, playing child roles with a repertoire company under the management of her brother-in-law. Her initial role was Arthur Sydney in "Queen's Evidence," and during the next three years she played such parts as Topsy in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," Louise in "The Two Orphans," Fanchon, the Cricket, in the play of that name, etc. Later, with her sister Ida, she formed a traveling stock company, and when a play called Zed" was produced, Miss Melville introduced the character of Sis Hopkins.

Originally this was a small part which she so elaborated that it became a feature of the performance, with the result that when she came to New York in 1894 she was immediately engaged to introduce the character of Sis Hopkins in "Little Christopher," then playing at the Garden theater. In another famous Rice extravaganza, "1492," she appeared with her sister in a similar specialty called "Two Little Jays from Indiana." A two year engagement in "The Prodigal Father" was followed by the appearance that made her famous overnight when Sis Hopkins was made a prominent part of the Matthews and Bulger presentation of "By the Sad Sea Waves." At the conclusion of this piece's long run a vaudeville sketch, "Sis Hopkins' Visit," was written around the character and in its long run on the Keith time the act included the unprecedented feat of eight weeks consecutive engagement at the Union Square theater, then the pinnacle of New York vaudeville.

The play "Sis Hopkins" was then written, and following its opening in Buffalo in September, 1899, it has been played almost continuously ever since. Though on different occasions she had other plays written and prepared to offer them, managers and the public demanded the popular "Sis Hopkins," and she has never been able to play in any other attraction. In response to many requests a revival of the play to appear throughout the Middle West had been arranged for this year when Kalem induced the star to cancel the contracts by offering her a large figure for appearances on the screen.

QUESTIONABLE FILM SUPPRESSED.

A film production of Philadelphia origin which had been booked for a four weeks' run at Daly's theater, has been stopped by License Commissioner Bell. The production, which is said to be very stupid and amateurish, had been brazenly advertised as something "which would outdo the Seeley dinner." That dinner, it will be remembered, had been raided by the police and some of the performers sent to jail.

The Moving Picture World refused the advertising offered by the promoters of the film.

A temporary injunction against License Commissioner Bell was dissolved by Supreme Court Justice Platzek. The style of advertising used in connection with the picture was introduced as evidence against allowing the display of the film. Justice Platzek wasted little time in dissolving the injunction after he saw the kind of advertising used in connection with it. Louis J. Vorhaus appeared for the promoters of the film and assured the Court that the picture was a moral one.

"KID" HOGAN TO MARRY.

Danny B. ("Kid") Hogan, head property man at the Rolfe-Metro studio, and a former champion lightweight pugilist, who has just finished playing a prominent role in "Rose of the Alley," a forthcoming Metro picture of life in New York's underworld, will be married New Year's Eve to Miss Frances Silver, a non-professional. Mr. Hogan's friends are arranging to have the marriage ceremony performed in the studio, in an elaborate church set, which Edward Shulter, the technical director, has agreed to build for the occasion. Little Mary Miles Minter, who is starred in "Rose of the Alley," and other prominent members of the Metro clan have signified their willingness to be present for the event.

The Strand theater announces for the week of December 19, an attractive and timely program. They have the showing of Frank A. Nankivell's cartoon taken from the poem, "T'was the Night Before Christmas," entitled, "A Visit from St. Nicholas."

This is not Frank A. Nankivell's first effort at animated cartoon work, as he made a number of pictures for the Edison company. His paintings and illustrations in all the magazines and dailies are known all over the world. The fact of the Strand theater showing his work gives it the stamp of quality.

Coming Triangle Plays

Offerings of the New Year Will Be Unusually Rich in Story Material and Good Acting.

THE Triangle Film Corporation announces among the new feature plays of the early part of the new year the following:

Orrin Johnson in "D'Artagnan"; William S. Hart in "Hell's Hinges"; Willard Mack in "The Conqueror"; Bessie Barriscale and Bruce McRae in "The Green Swamp"; Mae Marsh in "Hoodoo Ann"; Wilfred Lucas and Mary Alden in "Acquitted"; Norma Talmadge and Seena Owen in "Martha's Vindication"; Sam Bernard in "The Great Pearl Tangle"; Chester Conklin in "Dizzy Heights and Daring Hearts." These are only a few of a long list of thirty or forty plays that might be named.

Scene from "D'Artagnan" (Kay-Bee).

It is believed that "D'Artagnan," an Ince KayBee production, will prove a genuine surprise in its fresh and unhackneyed treatment of "The Three Musketeers" theme. Those who have seen the film say that Dorothy Dalton as beautiful Anne of Austria and Walt Whitman as Cardinal Richelieu share honors with the star.

"The Green Swamp" will show Bessie Barriscale in the somewhat novel role of an extremely jealous wife, one who hounds her doctor husband and prevents him from attaining his complete success in his profession. For the filming of "Hell's Hinges," starring William S. Hart, a complete village was built near Inceville and burned down to make the fiery climax of the piece. It takes its title from the name of a frontier town in the far west.

"Acquitted" presents Wilfred Lucas and Mary Alden in the featured roles, a deserved promotion when their much good work at the Griffith studio is considered. Miss Alden was the mulatto housekeeper in "The Birth of a Nation." The story is of unusual interest. It was adapted from one of Mary Roberts Rinehart's mystery novels. There is a large cast, including Sam De Grasse, Elmer Clifton, Spottiswoode Aitken and D. W. Griffith's new ingenue find, Bessie Love. "Martha's Vindication" is a small town domestic drama in which both Miss Talmadge and Miss Owen have congenial parts. As to the remaining two, "The Great Pearl Tangle" gives Sam Bernard his first big opportunity at Keystone, while "Dizzy Heights" is replete with aeroplane thrills and winds up with the dynamiting of a smokestack 200 feet high.

NEW ASSISTANT TO MR. PARTRIDGE.

F. F. Hartich, who since last July has been in charge of the Booking Department of the New York branch of the V-L-S-E, has been promoted to become assistant branch manager of that office.

This promotion is unusually interesting for the fact that until his affiliation with the Big Four Mr. Hartich had had no experience in the film field. He has introduced many advanced business methods in the conduct of the Booking Department of the New York branch, and the efficiency of the service of that office under his supervision has won for him high approval from exhibitors everywhere.

As assistant to Joseph Partridge, Mr. Hartich will devote most of his time to the furtherance of the interest of exhibitors and matters pertaining to advertising aids, etc.

Money Talks

Ethel Barrymore Signs for Series of Pictures at Record High Figure, Says Metro.

WHAT is probably the highest figure yet paid to a stellar attraction for a series of pictures, even in this era of fabulous salaries in the motion picture firmament, was the feature of a contract entered into this week between Ethel Barrymore, the celebrated stage star, and the Metro Picture Corporation.

Under its terms Miss Barrymore is to receive the flat sum of $40,000 for each picture in which she is featured in a series of elaborate screen productions now being planned by the Metro Pictures Corp. The contract provides that these shall number not less than four annually, although this number may be increased at the option of the Metro officials.

In return Miss Barrymore agrees to appear in Metro pictures exclusively during a period of three years. She will also arrange such stage work as she may engage in during that time with reference to its non-interference with her screen labors. Metro also holds an option on her services at the expiration of that time under the same terms as those provided in the contract for the previous productions.

Ethel Barrymore.

While other stars have in rare instances received considerations in excess of that to be paid Miss Barrymore for a single picture, it is thought that this is by far the highest contract ever entered into with any star by any motion picture corporation for a series of pictures. The minimum amount involved, $160,000 a year, for three years, or $480,000 in all, is a figure that certainly surpasses anything in the recent history of the screen.

Although the contract did not receive its final signatures until Tuesday, December 14, it had been under consideration for several weeks. On that date Miss Barrymore, President Richard A. Rowland of Metro, Joseph W. Engel, treasurer of the corporation, Maxwell Karger, general manager of Rolfe Photoplays Inc., and the attorneys for both, met at the Rolfe-Metro studios, 3 West Sixty-first street, New York City, and after a few final formalities were arranged Miss Barrymore and the Metro officials appended their names to the paper, which will call for the expenditure of close to half a million dollars during the coming three years.

DUSTIN FARNUM ILL.

Dustin Farnum, the Pallas-Paramount star, recently passed through the first serious illness he has ever experienced. For five days he was confined to his bed in his home in Los Angeles with malignant tonsilitis. Mr. Farnum was expected to make the trip with others to a ranch of 289,000 acres near San Diego, where 50,000 head of cattle roam, for the filming of scenes in "Ben Blair," the latest Farnum Pallas Pictures production. The others had departed and Mr. Farnum was to follow immediately, but he was attacked so suddenly that even while he was planning to leave he was forced to take to his bed. Consequently, the scenes were held up for several days.

LESSER—CONTINENTAL COMMUTER.

Sol. L. Lesser, president of the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., operating on the coast and through the middle west, left San Francisco Sunday, the 12th, for New York City to close contracts for several large feature productions.

This is Mr. Lesser's fifth trip this year. He estimates that ten per cent. of his profits are paid out annually for railroad fares. In fact, he spends as much time in New York City as he does in his offices in San Francisco.

Exhibitors in California can look forward to his return with some of the biggest productions that the open market affords.

Leon J. Rubinstein, purveyor of publicity for the Thanhouser Company, has a gift. He can sight a newspaper man in the offing (whatever "offing" is) without the aid of binoculars. "Ruby's" first intelligible words, they say, as he grasped the air with his baby hands were "See! See pretty newspaper man!"

Marquis Serra Safe

Special Cines Representative on His Way Here Aboard "Ancona" Writes to Moving Picture World.

A MEMBER of the staff of the Moving Picture World has received a letter from the Marquis Ugo Serra di Cassaba, special representative of the Cines Company. The Marquis had been on his way to this country from Naples on board the ill-fated "Ancona." He says in his letter, dated November 29, and mailed from Naples:

"On the fifth of November I left Naples for New York on the steamer 'Ancona.' As you undoubtedly know, the 'Ancona' was torpedoed in the Mediterranean on November 7. My escape was a true miracle. There was gun-fire and shipwreck. I have only been wounded on my left foot by an explosion, while I was still in the upper part of the steamer. I am back to my home in Naples among my people, although forced to remain lying in bed."

Though the Marquis had only been in this country a short time before he went to Rome to get two important negatives, he had made a host of friends here. These friends will be happy to learn that he is on the high road to recovery. He will, upon his recovery, go to England, and from there he will return here in the latter part of January.

Fania Marinoff With World Film

FANIA MARINOFF, who has scored personal successes in many notable Broadway productions, is the latest recruit to the World Film Corporation banner. Miss Marinoff assumes the difficult and trying role of Trina in the forthcoming production of "Life's Whirlpool," an elaborate and deeply dramatic film version of the famous play and novel "McTeague," by Frank Norris, hailed till his recent death as the greatest American realist. Miss Marinoff in appearance and temperament is ideally suited to the character of Trina, which she plays opposite to Holbrook Blinn, who appears as McTeague, her evil genius. Miss Marinoff made a painstaking study of the part of Trina before she would undertake it as the character presents unusual angles and is distinctly out of the ordinary.

Fania Marinoff.

Born in Russia, Miss Marinoff's early stage experience was in her native country, but she was ambitious to appear on the English-speaking stage and after assiduous study finally came with her parents to America, where her rise was rapid once she had mastered the language, the rudiments of which she learned while playing in Russian in London. She created the role of Esther in J. Hartley Manner's "House Next Door," and was also in the original cast of "Within the Law," scoring a great impression. She was Arnold Daly's leading woman for three seasons, appearing in all his successes, since which time she has devoted herself to the screen, being featured in many famous productions and successes.

SPECIAL MUSIC ON "BLACK CROOK."

"The Black Crook," Kalem's five-part picturization of the extravaganza of the same name, will have specially written musical accompaniment. The arrangement is now being made by Walter C. Simons, well known as a specialist in music for screen productions. Besides many original compositions, it will include the best known of the melodies that were a part of the famous stage production. Every foot of the screen offering will have its specially synchronized musical accompaniment. The score will be supplied to exhibitors at fifty cents.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard.

REMEMBER what a long run "The Great Divide" had and how popular it was everywhere? Remember the fine work of Henry Miller and Margaret Anglin, and how they held the attention of all? Well, when the picture playgoers see the filmed version believe me they will have a treat, for, in addition to the excellent work of House Peters as Stephen Ghent and of the supporting company, there is, best of all, real scenery, taking one right into Arizona, showing those wonderful cliffs in their natural formation. It must have been quite an effort for the actors to fit into the atmosphere as they did so well. It was my privilege to see this film at the V-L-S-E private run-off, as guest of George Balsdon. Another reel was shown, "A Daughter of the City," and it had a pretty good lesson for overambitious mothers bent on thrusting their young daughters into the limelight, hoping to corral someone beyond their station in life. Margaret Clayton's blonde beauty and youth fitted her for the part physically and she had a code of morals (lacking in the mother) and was able to resist her pursuer who, by the way, happened to be E. H. Calvert doing his best to be naughty. In contrast to the girl's mother, Calvert's wife was of another type and finally saved the girl, who was well worth while. I wonder why the directors do not pick out a manly and fairly good looking chap for such a girl to adore. This youth was a nervous, anemic, jerky sort, though possessed with a certain amount of stamina and won out. Well, Lubin and Essanay have given us something pretty good in these two and I hope "The Great Divide" will be seen by many young folks if only for the scenery in this our own country. It suggests the most picturesque section of the Garden of the Gods—but oh, that we might have the wonderful coloring of Colorado and Arizona!

To see some big star I go to the Modern—when I have the price—because it has always been the home of big productions and we are not inflicted with loud music, their organ being just right. So I was surprised the other day to have sandwiched between Mantell and Roberts one of the worst slapstick pictures yet seen, outclassing Chaplin and Dressler. It was called "Great While It Lasted," but it should be amended to "Rot," etc. Still, any number of persons roared and really thought it a comedy. I claim that there are real comedies minus vulgarity which might better be presented and which would cause as much laughter. Mantell's art is certainly being preserved in the films, but oh, the pitiless camera! Fortunately, the play, "The Unfaithful Wife," called for a middle-aged man and the white hair softened his lines wonderfully. The story is not wholesome and has such a tragic end! We hope to see him soon in another release. There was a wonderful child in it, Runa Hodges, and nothing finer has been done than the meeting between the father (Mantell) and this child. There was scarcely a dry eye in that large audience on gazing at the tear-stained face of that father in his agony. It was the acme of art.

On the same program was "Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo," with a fine company including Theodore Roberts, James Neill, Frank Elliott and that dashing Carlyle Blackwell who can put his work over so effectively, especially when playing a young American as in this play and in "The Puppet Crown." The men outshone the women in the cast as to good looks. As to the plot it was great, showing intrigues in our own time and illustrating how cleverly the spy system is worked. The yacht scene was certainly a thriller in the expose of the schemers and the clever checkmating by the Englishman and American. Such films are sure winners and appeal to both sexes.

The Film Club had an opportunity of showing courtesy to the stars and managers who remained over "The Next Day" (as the titles say), for we had several of them at the Brunswick Hotel for awhile, and having met them all at the ball it was a pleasure to see them at still closer range. It was my privilege to serve the league as one of the committee and to present Cissy Fitzgerald to our popular governor, who is a film fan and also an eligible bachelor. At the regular meeting of the club on Sunday last Mrs. Mary Maurice and Clara Kimball Young were made honorary members. Several active members were admitted. The meeting was addressed by the Rev. Charles Fleischer, a devotee of the films and a firm believer in the educational side of the pictures, predicting that in a short time the public schools will wake up to their value in teaching geography, history and other necessary things not to be got out of the printed book. It is he who went before the Massachusetts legislative committee and so ably defended "The Birth of a Nation," referring to the protest as "graded hysteria" on account of the many political leaders lining up with the "cullud pussons" whose votes are sometimes desirable.

I have ceased to make many notes of the errors seen on the titles, but one is recalled right here, accompanying a pretentious five-reeler, "Attention is detracted." Any excuse for that? What must the school children in front think! Another thing brought up at the Film Club by a member referred to the printed cast not being held long enough for us to see who is in it. These are matters easily remedied.

We are getting some excellent Paramount Newspictures (listed that way) showing us certain industries, events of current interest and geographical scenes. The nice little booming the films are giving South America ought to be effective, for they are "eye-openers" to those who think North America is quite "it." I fancy John Barrett, head of the Pan-American Bureau in Washington, D. C., is mightily pleased with all this free advertising for the countries he champions and rightly.

"The Fifth Commandment" proved to be an excellent World Film offering at the Exeter Street theatre on Sunday night and again introduced that sterling actor, Forrest Robinson, in a more pretentious part than hitherto seen in the films. Julius Steger was most artistic, and his pathetic career in late life caused many a moistened eye in front. The play has virility, pathos and a bit of tragedy in the untimely death of the wife. The company was especially well balanced. Other good things on the program were Wally Van in "The Fortune Hunter"; "Yardville Folks," an Edison offering introducing barnyard fowl, etc. Best of the short reels were the many scenes picturing Niagara Falls from different angles, in winter and summer—places the tourists rarely see, for the cameraman goes "where men and angels (usually) fear to tread." "The Bluffers" was funny enough, and for a change we had the irascible father with a change of front on observing the bluff of the young couple whom he had seemingly put out of his life.

Of course we are on the qui vive to see "A Price for Folly" with versatile Edith Storey and that capable actor, Antonio Moreno, for, according to the advance announcements, Miss Storey, who made a distinct hit at the ball here, will make us sit up and take notice. We hope she will escape our City Hall censor.

I dropped in to see Julia Dean in "Matrimony," a Triangle offering, and came out in love with that wonderful child, Viola Rossmore, as played by Thelma Slater. Nothing finer has been done than the scene where she dresses in her mother's clothes and adornments and apes her, even to the cigarette, the child having left her couch the night before to overlook a scene bordering on an orgy in which her parents took part. This so impressed itself on the mother (who really was only acting a part for a good purpose) that she came to her senses. The finale of that film with the three united made a beautiful picture for the eye and soul.

"Armstrong's Wife" again disclosed the conscientious work of Thomas Meighan playing opposite to Edna Goodrich. We liked "The Galley Slave" because it introduced us to Lillian Lorraine for the first time in the films. There is no more popular actress round here than this former leading woman at the Castle Square and later a Broadway success. She was a picture and wore her fine feathers well. It is good to know that her clever young daughter, Ethel Grey Terry, is such a screen success, and we are anticipating her here in "Bought."

I am telling everyone not to miss "The House of Tears," feeling sure that in Emily Stevens we have an artist of great merit. She made herself solid here in "The Soul of a Woman." Like her relative, Mrs. Fiske, she has temperament and genius combined. We congratulate the Metro Company on the personnel of its stars. According to what I hear, "The Yellow Streak," with Lionel Barrymore and handsome Irene Howley whom David Griffith early recognized as one to fill the bill, will be extremely likable.

Boston is soon to have another moving picture house in the Back Bay to be named the Fenway theater. It is well located in that thickly settled district—a marsh in 1875 and now made land. It will be another Triangle house.

I wonder if Anna Held in "Mme. La President" will be able to compete with Fanny Ward (who created the role for the speaking drama) in that undress scene. She certainly will fill the eye anyhow, and we trust Oliver Morosco to do the rest.

"A Broth of a Boy" is of the class for young folks to see and I hope it will have wide publicity for the wholesome lesson taught by the little hero and the big-hearted Irishman, Joseph Sullivan, who became interested in the lad when defending himself in a street row from a bully nearly twice his size and winning out.

Dustin Farnum is, to my mind, a big drawing card in any theater, so we enjoyed "The Gentleman from Indiana" hugely in all details. I cannot say the same about the Triangle film, "Stolen Magic," with Raymond Hitchcock releasing all those snakes. I was driven out by the awful sight, and many others left for the lobby. It was the most hideous infliction along snake lines ever seen here, and many condemned it and warned their friends in advance, for such a sight is unendurable and inexcusable.

Schools of Acting

One of the Meanest Forms of Fraud That Barnacles the Picture Business.

By Epes Winthrop Sargent.

EVERY business has its barnacles—parasites that attach themselves to its fabric and are carried along; and it is not surprising that the wonderful growth of the motion picture business should have brought into being a host of fraudulent attachments. The earliest form was the fake school for photoplay writing, but the most widespread now seems to be the school of acting.

It is comparatively recently that a man was sent to jail here in New York not for conducting a school but for making false statements about procuring positions for "graduates," and he is the same man who a couple of years ago told Edwin August that he could make a good actor out of him for $30.

In Denver, about a year ago, a professor of the art decamped, leaving behind a load of debts and a few young women in an unenviable frame of mind; and only lately a negro, for a time employed by the Lubin Company in its negro troupe, was gently but firmly persuaded to let go his grip on a school for colored players.

In Canada for a long time a film company advertised for players and not only charged for a school course but sought to sell stock in the enterprise to ambitious applicants.

In Los Angeles there are schools in plenty. These advertisements were all clipped from a single issue of the Los Angeles Times, the names being suppressed:

> WANTED—
> MOTION PICTURE ACTING
> successfully taught by able director; thorough training, facial expression, make-up, comedy and all requirements; have more pupils successfully playing parts in the picture than all other schools combined; no class instruction; strictest investigation invited.
> WANTED—LADIES AND GENTLEMEN TO JOIN classes in photo dramatic and camera work. The chance of a lifetime to become identified with the best paying industry in the world. We have our own studios. Terms reasonable when high standard of instruction is considered. Come in and talk it over.

The second advertisement is not that of a school, but a twin scheme. This was investigated in good faith by a correspondent, who writes:

> I "fell" for the one marked with star and soon I got a letter asking me to call. I did and met a man with chin whiskers and a waxed bunch of hair on his upper lip. He was very nice and asked me what I knew about moving pictures. I told him that I had sold a script or so and worked as an extra for two weeks. Then he stood me up in a corner and had me to show pleasure, horror, fear, anger and rage. He then said, "You're the very man I want; come here." He then asked me how I was fixed for money. I replied that I had some. He told me all about his play that he was going to produce. It would require some twenty people to put it on and would take five weeks to make and during that time I would have to work without pay. As soon as it was printed it was to be sold outright or was to be let out on the state right plan or which ever way the actors might desire. Next be told me that before I went to work I would have to put up $100 as a bond to hold me with him until the picture was finished and as soon as it was sold I was to get 3 per cent. of the net profits. I asked him where the studio was and found out that there was no studio, but he had two in sight. I told him that I would let him know Monday, and as I left the Broadway Central Building I said to myself, "Now, if I put in $100 with nineteen others that will make $2,000 and on the second day Frenchy will not show up at the studio nor the next, nor the day following."

A scheme of this sort to a person of sense is obviously fraudulent, but it is convincing to the uninformed and stage-struck aspirant, and many of the schools are said to work the same scheme.

In a Kentucky city there is a school which announces that it has obtained the consent of motion picture corporations to give its graduates "a priority in filling vacancies on their prospective staffs." The heavy type is our own, but since one of the officers of the school is connected with a local film company, which is not known to have made a release, it is probable that "prospective" is more in accordance with the facts than "respective," and yet the apparent error may be presented in proof of good intent should the post-office authorities become too curious. It is easy to name prospective staffs of perhaps companies than to tell real names. This school also makes the statement that "when a person has taken our course they are in no respect inferior in knowledge to the professional who has trod the board for years. They are not amateurs but actors." Setting aside all questions of grammar, the statement is a downright lie, even with the saving grace of that "in knowledge."

This is a departure entirely different from the correspondence schools of acting, mention of which has already been made. The instructors come into personal contact with the pupils, most of them young and impressionable women, and pupils are robbed not only of their money but their morals in many instances since these schools are manifestly fraudulent and maintained for the greater part by transient and unscrupulous adventurers.

It does no good to print the facts; it is of no avail to tell home truths. The novice may learn that the average stock salary is nearer $30 a week than $60. She is going to be a star like Mary Pickford and need not worry about the rank and file. It does not serve to tell of the hundreds of experienced actors who are unemployed. She has the same answer. She will be in demand. It does no good to say that only the experienced are desired. That is precisely why she goes to the school; not to learn acting, for she is certain that she is a better actress right now than Miss Pickford. All she needs is a little coaching in the usage of the stage.

And so the sharpers ply their schemes and cannot be molested until the commission of some statutory offense. Some women must be ruined before complaint may be made, and by that time the professor is gone. Some man must be robbed of his savings before a warrant can issue, and the sharper has keen perceptions of trouble. The law presupposes a man to be innocent. If he has a school, it does not matter what sort of a school he conducts so long as he does not make fraudulent promises for the sake of obtaining money. The buyer must beware, but the buyer does not, and so the schools increase. The authorities can do nothing until it is too late. But exhibitors can help by giving advice. It is up to them to explain that something more than an alleged professor with a soap-box camera is needed to win success.

MARIE DORO MARRIED.

Though a romance was long suspected by their many friends, the news has just been flashed across the continent from California that Marie Doro and Elliott Dexter are married. Mr. and Mrs. Dexter will reside at 11 East Fifty-fifth street, New York City, after Christmas, when Miss Doro returns to the east to star in the Famous Players Film Company's adaptation of Sardou's great drama, "Diplomacy."

BILLIE BURKE TRIUMPHS AS PEGGY.

Word comes from Los Angeles that at a private showing at the Majestic theater on December 16 of "Peggy," the KayBee-Triangle subject, in which Billie Burke was starred, the many persons present agreed that the stage star had triumphed in her screen debut. Mayor Sebastian and a large representation of the official and social life of the southern city congratulated Thomas H. Ince on the production.

Vitagraph Offerings

Several Interesting Subjects for Release in December and January.

THE Vitagraph program of releases announced for the week beginning December 27, is one that will close the old year in triumph and open the new one in a blaze of glory. The regular releases comprise two reels of comedy and a three-part drama. The "Personally Picked" program consists of a one-part comedy and a four-reel drama.

"He Got Himself a Wife," the first of these comedies, announced for release on Monday, December 27, is a delightful one-part laugh-getter that brings forth the efforts of the players from the Western Vitagraph studio. The story was written by Edwin Ray Coffin and produced by George Stanley with a cast including Mary Anderson, Webster Campbell, and Aileen Allen.

Scene from "The Making Over of Geoffrey Manning" (Vitagraph).

"The Making Over of Geoffrey Manning," the four-part drama for release with the "personally picked" program, was written in co-operation by Charles T. Dazey and William Addison Lathrop and produced under the direction of Harry Davenport, with an all star cast including such popular players as Harry T. Morey, L. Rogers Lytton, Ned Finley, Belle Bruce, Eulalie Jensen, Marion Henry, Tom Mills, Logan Paul and Jack Brown. The plot is written around the life of a young clubman brought up in idleness.

"The Pest Vamooser," which completes Monday's releases, is a one-part comedy written by C. Graham Baker and produced by C. Jay Williams. This side-splitting comedy brings before the public a cast of fun-makers notable among whom are Kate Price, Harry Fisher and Albert Roccardi.

For Friday, December 31, "By the Might of His Right," a one-part comedy featuring Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, is listed for release. The story was written by William B. Courtney and produced by Mr. Drew. This comedy deals with the wife's brother paying a visit. He thinks himself a puncher of ability and demonstrates his hooks and jabs on "friend husband." Such treatment goes along until hubby becomes vexed and makes up his mind to even things with brother. Assisting Mr. and Mrs. Drew, Donald MacBride will be seen at his best.

The three-part Broadway Star Feature announced for the close of the week and the start of the New Year is "Tried for His Own Murder," written by Agnes Johnston, and produced by Van Dyke Brooke. This heart interest drama is one that employs an acting cast of such stars as Maurice Costello, Leah Baird, Van Dyke Brooke, George Stevens, Harry Fisher and Mrs. Phillips.

For the Actor's Fund

All Branches of Picture Trade Asked to Assist—To Name a "Benefit Day."

AS THE needs of the million dollar endowment in behalf of the Actors' Fund of America to save it from disruption will require much co-operation, the Board of Trustees of the Fund have empowered its president, Daniel Frohman, to obtain the aid of the moving picture industry of this country. Mr. Frohman has, therefore, invited the assistance of all the big producers, the exchanges to participate, and will issue invitations to a meeting with the Board of Trustees a little later for a conference in which it is hoped that the co-operation of all these interests can be secured and that the results will produce at least $500,000.

The Fund takes care of all actors of the stage connected with the screen industry who become disabled through illness and other causes as well as stage professionals. Though this is a large sum, the burden, it is expected, will fall very lightly upon each company or theater. A special day in February is to be set to be called "The Actors' Fund Moving Picture Day," when it is expected that the 20,000 picture theaters will unite and send a small percentage of their day's receipts and that the other industries concerned will also help to make that day a memorable one.

The so-called "menace of the movies" against the prosperity of the theater will be somewhat offset if it should turn out that the moving picture industry has saved the Fund.

Thomas A. Edison has accepted the honorary chairmanship of the committee, which also has on its list the names of President Wilson, William H. Taft and Theodore Roosevelt. A meeting of all the heads of the picture departments will be called early in January to unite upon a settlement of a date for "Actors' Fund Movie Day."

Australian Notes.

DURING the last month, several fine features have been shown in Sydney. These include that remarkable photoplay "Hypocrites," which began an unlimited run at the Palace theater at prices equivalent to your 25, 50 and 75 cents. It is the highest priced picture ever shown here, the maximum price before being 2/6 (60 cents) when "Cabiria" was shown about eight months ago. The Palace theater was formerly a "legit" show house, and holds about 750 people. It is now crowded twice a day and advance bookings have been made for many weeks to come.

Other pictures shown include "The College Widow" (V-L-S-E), "John Glayde's Honour" (Frohman), "The Conspiracy" (F. P. F.), "The Ghost Breaker" (Lasky), "The Shulamite" (London) and several three-reelers. The Frohman feature was conceded to be extremely good. C. Aubrey Smith has only appeared in two pictures to date, but is already very popular. "Shanghaied," the latest Chaplin comedy, favorably impressed film critics here, as no vulgarity was apparent throughout its two reels. The Theater Magazine, a conservative publication here, has led an attack on Chaplin and his methods. They have also started a picture page in their paper, edited by a lady who knows no more about photoplays than the man in the moon. She should subscribe to the World for a period. It might teach her something.

Everyone here is looking forward to the new Triangle plays, though it is doubtful whether Griffith features will be shown here. Australian Films, Ltd., has the sole rights here for Keystone and Ince films. A new photoplay theater has been opened in Newtown, a suburb of Sydney. It has a capacity for 3,500 persons, and is one of the largest in Australia. Many others are in course of erection.

Pictures advertised for show next month include "Buckshot John" and "Wild Olive" (Morosco), "Midnight at Maxim's" (Kalem), "My Old Dutch" (Hepworth) and "The Crucible" (F. P. F.).

WILLIAM J. BUTLER WITH GAUMONT.

A face long familiar upon the screen in Biograph releases will now be seen in Gaumont Mutual Masterpictures, edition de luxe. William J. Butler, who has been six years with Biograph, has gone to the Gaumont winter quarters at Jacksonville to act under the direction of Richard Garrick. He is an actor of the old school, embodying in his methods the best traditions of his profession.

Selznick on Distribution

Vice-President and General Manager of the World Film Would Place Pictures at One-Fourth of Present Cost.

THERE are few in the motion picture business, on a big scale, today who have reduced the industry to quite such a scientific point as has Lewis J. Selznick, the vice-president and general manager of the World Film Corporation and the vice-president and advisory manager of the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation. Mr. Selznick's efforts are now bent toward the most vexed problem that has so far confronted manufacturers and distributors of film—namely, economical distribution.

"As I see it," said Mr. Selznick, "the most important question confronting film men in the coming year resolves itself down to the matter of distribution—on the most economical basis. I think I may say, without being thought egotistical, that I have in a measure 'blazed the trail,' so far as the distribution problem is concerned, for other manufacturers in the field. I started the Equitable, in fact, to prove that my theories in regard to distribution were sound and thorough.

"It may sound like a Utopian dream, but I am convinced that eventually pictures can be distributed for one-fourth the present cost. It is all a question of system and careful observation. So far the giant strides of the motion picture industry have so outstripped the capabilities of the producers to keep pace with the amazing growth of the industry that we are only just beginning to get facts and figures upon which we can base our future plans.

"It has ever been my careful study to concentrate upon this question of a distribution, for there, to my mind, lies the weak spot today in the motion picture industry. With more economical distribution we can furnish the exhibitor with better pictures at better prices than has been possible in the past. In fact, it is hardly too much to say that the exhibitor who first solves this problem will reap the cream of the harvest.

"The firm that solves the distribution problem will therefore be the firm that will attract the producers, lining them up for a solid program so that the exhibitor will only have to come to the one distributing firm to select a program from a list of amazing variety and merit. This is the crying need of every exhibitor today. As things are, with the exception of a few distributing centers the exhibitor doesn't know what he is getting.

"Concentration, economy, co-operation with the exhibitor—these are the watchwords of the World Film Corporation and the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation. I believe that I am not unduly optimistic in saying at this time that it is my belief that I have in a large measure solved the distribution problem, cutting the cost at least fifty per cent., a percentage which in the near future will be considerably lowered once my plans are put into effect and the organization in charge of them is running like a well-oiled machine."

D. W. Griffith's Flying Trip

In New York for Three Days on Business Connected With "The Mother and the Law."

D. W. GRIFFITH, the famous Triangle director, and most widely known as the producer of "The Birth of a Nation," arrived in New York Tuesday evening, December 14, accompanied by his secretary, A. E. Bidwell, and J. J. McCarthy. The object of Mr. Griffith's visit was, as he expressed it, "on business connected with my big new picture." Mr. Griffith came here direct from Indianapolis and he had been in Louisville but a few days previous for the obsequies of his lamented mother, Mrs. Jacob Wark Griffith.

While in the metropolis Mr. Griffith spent much time with H. E. Aitken, president of the Triangle Film Corporation, and in the executive offices of the Triangle at 71 West 23d street. He expressed himself as pleased with the way large numbers of new theaters are being signed up for the Triangle service. Among other things he remarked that "Don Quixote," starring De Wolf Hopper, was one of the best productions recently made by any of his sub-directors and he paid a high compliment to Edward Dillon who had charge of it. From the fact that "The Birth of a Nation" closes at the Liberty theater, New York, on January 8, to be followed by a musical comedy entitled "Sybil," it is thought that Mr. Griffith's new personal production, "The Mother and the Law," will not be disclosed here until spring. It is understood that further work will be done upon it on Griffith's return to the West Coast about December 22. The project of staging "The Holy Grail" by Mr. Griffith is only tentative as yet, he declared.

Refuse Insurance to Kalem's "Helen"

Action of California Company Teaches "Railroad Girl" That She Is Engaged in "Hazardous Pursuit."

HELEN GIBSON, the daring "railroad girl," learned last week that there is something in a name after all. About a month ago Miss Gibson made application for a large insurance policy and was wondering over the delay in securing it until she received a formal notification last week that her application had been rejected on the ground that she was engaged in an "extra hazardous pursuit," and was consequently "an unsound risk." As the series in which Miss Gibson is featured by Kalem is known as "The Hazards of Helen," the legal phraseology of the insurance firm seemed singularly appropriate.

The player's friends shrewdly suspect that during the month that the application was held in abeyance an investigator might have visited the studio of the company and watched the making of a picture without disclosing his identity. If this is so, then the decision of the company seems only natural. Miss Gibson was working during that period on "The Haunted Station," a coming release in which the climax of the action shows a drawbridge being elevated to allow a ship to pass. She is escaping from a demented telegrapher who climbs the rope after her and while the pair sway in midair a struggle follows that must have sent the insurance investigator back to his office with a few gray hairs as a memento of the occasion.

Another picture being made during that period shows Miss Gibson engaged in the sedentary occupation of allowing a train to run over her. This feat is performed in "When Seconds Count," scheduled for release in the series on January 8. The plucky Helen, lashed to a handcar, is sent speeding down grade in this episode, while a train is tearing along another stretch of track that diagonally crosses the one on which the handcar is running. Through perfect timing, the handcar passes between the rear and front wheels of the train, though it may be readily seen that had the handcar arrived at the intersection a second too soon or too late a frightful accident might have happened. The scene was rehearsed for a full morning with a handcar loaded with sandbags before Helen was allowed to attempt the feat.

Christmas Greetings From Selig

NOT only does the Selig Polyscope Company wish every man, woman and child in the film industry a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year, but William N. Selig, president of the company, in an interview, forecasts a daily continuation of merriment and prosperity for Filmland during the year 1916.

"I am of the opinion that the new year will be a momentous one for the motion picture industry," said Mr. Selig. "Advancement in every line of the industry will continue and the pictureplays will show more improvement, if that were possible, than has been noticeable for the past three or four years. The time has come when the manufacturers of motion pictures must put forth interesting and artistic material, and, in my opinion, all are striving for consistent improvement.

"The Selig Company will not be found wanting along the lines of artistic endeavor during the coming year. Every effort is being made to produce unusually good pictureplays, and no expense is being spared along lines which will result in highly meritorious productions. The best actors, the best stories, the best productions is the slogan for the Selig Company during 1916, and we feel that the trade in general will appreciate the force of this slogan when forthcoming releases are seen."

CAREWE COMPLETING "THE UPSTART."

Edwin Carewe, who is directing the new Metro feature production, "The Upstart," in which Marguerite Snow is starred and George Le Guere is featured, has returned from Savannah, Georgia, where he took his company of players to make about thirty exterior scenes. "The Upstart" is a comedy drama, and is a decided novelty in motion pictures. It is a picturization of the play of the same name by Thomas Barry which enjoyed a successful run at the Maxine Elliott theater in New York last season and afterward in Chicago. The comedy relief is broad satire, and a small but strong cast of prominent stage and screen artists is seen in the production. The interior scenes are now being photographed at the studio of the Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., the producing company releasing exclusively on the Metro program. "The Upstart" is scheduled for release in the Metro program January 24, 1916.

Universal City's New Head

H. O. Davis Outlines His Policies and Talks of Plans for the New Year.

H. O. DAVIS, formerly director general of the Panama-California Exposition at San Diego, and recently elected second vice-president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company at a meeting of the directors in New York, assumed a complete charge of the Pacific Coast studios of the company at Universal City on December 1.

Henry McRae, who has been the director general of the Universal company for the past six months and who has made many improvements at the motion picture city in the San Fernando Valley, and George E. Kann, business manager of the company, gave Mr. Davis a hearty welcome and spent the day in the company of the various directors and heads of departments of the institution.

H. O. Davis.

Later Mr. Davis said: "I have been especially gratified to find a perfect condition of harmony at Universal City. Wherever I went around the plant I found nothing but the heartiest co-operation. My coming to Universal City is not for the purpose of retrenchment by any manner of means. It costs money to make motion pictures of quality, and wherever it is necessary to spend money, the Universal company stands ready to do so. The increased demand for Universal pictures has made it necessary to reorganize this huge plant and to thoroughly systematize its numerous departments. The growth of this institution has been so fast and so remarkable and the demand for the output has been so great, that both the Eastern and the Western plants have found it almost impossible to keep up with that demand.

"Mr. Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal company, and the other officials of the company for some time have realized the necessity of reorganization and systematization, not alone at the Pacific Coast studios, but at the studios in New York and they have delegated to me the task of bringing about a satisfactory reorganization and installing such system throughout the entire institution as will result in an improvement of the quality of the product at both ends.

"President Laemmle, who has been closely studying the entire motion picture situation during the past year, has developed many new ideas which will soon be put into effect and I am certain will create a stir in the film world. A number of these ideas I am going to carry out in connection with my work. All of them I am certain will have a salutary effect."

Mr. Davis believes that many wonderful things can be done for the benefit of the public through the medium of the motion picture. He is a great believer in the educational film and he has already inaugurated plans which will result in the production of films of this character, entirely different from any that have thus far been made and which he believes will be heartily approved by educational leaders in this country.

"The remarkable support that has been given to photoplays by the public," said Mr. Davis, "entitles the public to the very best that can be made. I believe that no picture should be shown on the screen that is not perfect in every detail and henceforth such will be the policy of the Universal Company.

"In order to give the public the perfect picture, the directors must be accorded intelligent and hearty support by every part of the organization. The directors are the heart of the organization and their efforts, intelligently and energetically used, make for most satisfactory results. The directors are seeking the most perfect production of their pictures—pictures that will be satisfactory to and entirely beyond criticism by the public. To that end it is absolutely essential to assist the directors in every possible way, and the Universal company intends that its inexhaustible resources will be placed at the disposal of these men who direct the productions.

"Henry McRae is already busily engaged in making his plans for taking a company to the Orient in accordance with the desires of President Laemmle. Mr. Laemmle long has felt that China, Japan, India and the Philippine Islands offer a splendid field for the making of motion pictures that not alone will be of an interesting character but instructive to a large degree. The development of recent years of the countries of the Orient has been so remarkable and so little has been known of how these countries are progressing, that President Laemmle decided to send a company to the Far East to tell the rest of the world in motion pictures of the Orient's strides in advancement.

"In addition to picturing the life of the people of the various countries, elaborate photoplays in Oriental settings are to be made and no expense will be spared in producing these pictures.

"President Laemmle decided that the best man in the Universal service for this purpose," said Mr. Davis recently, "was Henry McRae, on account of his long experience as a theatrical manager and director. Mr. McRae will take a notable collection of stars with him on this trip, and his mission will keep him away for nearly a year."

Lena Viola Brown

IT IS the province of few girls in this old world to have had such a fascinating career as has had Lena Viola Brown, the popular comedienne, who plays leading feminine roles with the "Heine and Louie" comedies on the Pathe program. Miss Brown was born into a dramatic life. Both her father and mother were stage people, and her father was managing a stock company at the time of her birth. Up till the time Miss Brown was ten years old she played many children's parts in dramatic stock. Then her father decided to go into the circus business. This opened up a new outlook on life to the little girl. She was given a pony and taught how to ride. She was given a gun and taught how to shoot, and at eleven she was the youngest expert sharp shooter in the country. Her special feat was to shatter the bowl of a pipe held in the hand of an assistant. She never failed at the first shot.

At fifteen she abandoned the circus, and went into vaudeville as a dancer, being featured in Orpheum time. She soon left the vaudeville stage, however, and headed a stock company of her own, which visited all the principal cities of the East. Later she was with Harry Beresford in dramatic stock, in fact she was with him when an excellent opportunity came to go into the motion pictures.

Miss Brown has been with the Mittenthal Brothers, producers of "Heine and Louie" comedies for two years, and has appeared in both dramatic and comedy leads.

Aside from her artistic propensities and abilities, Miss Brown is a philosopher and a very delightful person to meet. Life, itself, has been her teacher. She has lived out of doors in the wilds of Canada. She has lived in cities. She has lived on the road. But her mind has always been open and she has picked up a fund of knowledge and an understanding of life which is possessed by few girls of her age.

Lena Viola Brown.

While she finds comedies most amusing, dramatic leads are her aim. Those who have seen "Heinie and Louie" comedies will remember her for her clever portrayals of the leading feminine roles.

Death of Popular Universal Exchangeman

Clarence G. Thompson, Manager of Victor Office in Cleveland, Succumbs After Sudden Illness.

IT IS with extreme regret that the Universal announces the loss by death of Clarence G. Thompson, who for the past eight years had acted as manager of the Victor Film Exchange in Cleveland, O., one of the largest exchanges owned by the organization. Mr. Thompson died on December 12, after an illness of but two days. He was twenty-eight years of age.

His death came as a severe blow to the moving picture industry, especially in Ohio, where he was known and respected by every exhibitor in the State. He died before many of his friends learned of his illness. His death was a shock to P. A. Powers, under whose guidance Mr. Thompson had been tutored in the film business, and who gave him his first position with the Powers company about ten years ago.

C. C. Thompson.

It seems that Mr. Thompson was taken ill on the Friday previous. He caught a severe cold a few days before, and thinking it but a trivial illness continued at his desk. Pneumonia set in and he died early Sunday morning. The body was taken to Toronto, where the interment took place.

The following resolutions have been drawn up by the exchangemen and exhibitors in Ohio:

Whereas, The grim messenger of death who respects neither age nor condition has removed from our midst Clarence G. Thompson in the prime of his manhood; and

Whereas, In his death we have lost a loyal worker and a faithful member; and

Whereas, The film industry has lost one of its great characters; a young man who started at the bottom of the ladder and climbed round by round until he stood a peer of any in his chosen work; one ever loyal to those for whose success he labored, yet who at all times was ready to help and assist those in trouble; one whose tireless energy and undaunted courage overcame every obstacle, who arose in a few years from the desk room and seven reels of pictures to one of the largest film exchanges in Ohio; one who was relentless toward his foes, yet ever ready to forgive and forget, loyal to his friends, proud yet haughty, ambitious but unselfish, willing to yield and sacrifice when in the wrong; one who, gifted with a clear conception and a power of analysis, was able to push forward every enterprise to which he bent his energy; and

Whereas, In his death the film industry has lost one of those rare characters who was ever ready to fight for the right, regardless of consequences and without compromise; therefore, be it

Resolved, by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America of the District of Northeastern Ohio, through its officers, extend the sympathy of said league to the wife and mother across the border of our land of peace, to brothers and sisters, relatives and friends; be it

Resolved, That we tender our sympathy in the full knowledge of the loss they have sustained; and be it further

Resolved, That we emulate his virtues and forget his faults, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, to the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and to the proper publications, and that a copy of these resolutions be spread upon our minutes.

BLIND SEE "THE BATTLE CRY OF PEACE."

One of the most remarkable instances of progress in the history of motion pictures was the "showing" of the Vitagraph patriotic masterpiece, "The Battle Cry of Peace," to a blind audience, recently. One thousand unfortunates, charges of the Massachusetts Commission for the Blind and the Perkins Institute in Boston, attended a showing of the film as guests of the management of the Majestic theater in Boston.

OCEAN FILM DINNER.

The Ocean Film Corporation, with its board of directors and officers as hosts, and with General Manager and Vice-President Jesse J. Goldburg departing from his usual role of "business creator" and masked under the guise of toastmaster, entertained their visiting exchangemen and representatives, who had been in attendance at the Ocean Film Corporation convention during all of Saturday, December 11, at dinner at the Hotel Astor in New York City. In attendance were President Dudley, Vice-President and General Manager Jesse J. Goldburg, Secretary George S. Brown; Francis R. Masters, Paul E. Rasor, William D. Judson and R. C. E. Brown of the board of directors; George De Carlton, manager of productions; Joe Farnham, director of exploitation; Joseph Smiley, director; Marshall Farnum, director, and George Fawcett, star of the Ocean Film Corporation; A. B. Laddick, representing Sol. Lesser of California and adjacent territory; Ben Friedman of the Western Kriterion Film Service of Minneapolis; Frank Frayne, representing the Greene's Feature Photoplays of the New York and New England territory; Joseph Friedman of the Celebrated Players Film Company of Chicago; Harry Schwalbe of the Electric Theater Supply Company of Philadelphia; W. C. Betts of the International Cinematograph Company, Ltd., of London; Robert Herring of the Quality Film Exchange of Pittsburgh; Philip Adler of the Alliance Film Exchange of Cleveland; James Lee of the American Feature Film Company of Boston, and Thomas Tristam of M. H. Blackwell Features of New York City, and George Gilbert of the Ocean Film Corporation staff.

Equitable Forecast

Good Outlook for Productions for Immediate and Future Release—Many Players and Directors at Work.

AS IS customary with a newly-formed company like the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, many changes were necessitated and have been made during the past month or since the recent announcement by President Spiegel of the forthcoming activities of his company. With the staff of directors now almost completed to the satisfaction of the concern, a sufficient number of stars and noted players under contract and option to safely carry the productional activities through an entire year, even if nothing further in the way of plays and stories were secured. The fact that Rachel Crothers, Harriet Ford, Russell Edgar Smith, Marc Edmond Jones, Richard Le Gallienne and C. Haddon Chambers are regular contributors of original material precludes the possibility of a shortage of fiction if the production department is enlarged.

Marie Empress.

The tentative program as issued a short while ago is now definitely rearranged. The long list of stars, embracing a great number of tried and proved players and a few who are debuting in film work, will be seen either at intervals or in one production specially suited to their particular personality and ability.

The list of players of stellar roles now either playing or already cast is: Gail Kane, Brandon Tynan, Marguerite Leslie, Carlyle Blackwell, Emmett Corrigan, Teddy Sampson, William Courtenay, Henry Kolker, Frank Sheridan, Thomas A. Wise, Lily Cahill, Muriel Ostriche, Molly McIntyre, Mary Boland, Clara Whipple, Howard Hall, Gerda Holmes, Cyril Scott, Marie Empress, Lillian Lorraine, Lenore Ulrich, Arthur Ashley and Julia Dean. Of these, a number have already appeared and are under contract for further productions.

Carlyle Blackwell.

Of the unannounced stars and plays, Frank Sheridan and Carlyle Blackwell in picturizations af virile dramatic documents, "The Struggle" and "The Clarion," lead in importance, as they will be in work within the week, Directors John Ince and James Durkin being busily engaged now in assembling the casts and selecting locations.

Marguerite Leslie, late leading woman with Sir Henry Irving, and other stars, will star in "The Pain Flower," a unique and picturesque romantic tale, which will be under the directorial auspices of Harry Handworth.

Julia Dean, last seen on Broadway in "The Law of the Land" and "Bought and Paid For," is completing "The Ransom" at the Triumph studio, and Marie Empress, late star of several Famous Players and Metro releases, will be seen in a sensational production entitled "Behind Closed Doors." Miss Empress will be supported by Marion Swayne, William Huntington, Paul Irving, Thomas Tracy and Regan Hughston. "Behind Closed Doors" is also a Triumph production and comes on the Equitable program January 10.

Emmett Corrigan, who recently renounced allegiance to the spoken stage in order that he could fulfill his contract with the Equitable, leaves for distant points in company with Frank Powell, the noted director, within the forthcoming fortnight. Mr. Corrigan will be seen in Le Gallienne's vivid and novel tale, "The Chain Invisible."

Gail Kane in her second Equitable picture, "Her God," is now at Eaco, Arizona, on the edge of the American desert, where E. Mason Hopper is gathering local color and atmosphere for the Equitable Girl series, of which Miss Kane is the star. "Her God" will be the regular Equitable release during one of the early February weeks.

Margarita Fischer, who completed "The Dragon" last week, under the supervision of Harry Pollard, will be on the program January 3. "The Dragon" is, without the shadow of a doubt, the most unusual picture yet released by Equitable and opens a wide avenue of possibilities in the unconventional.

Director S. E. V. Taylor is completing the final details of the first picture work of the popular Scotch star, Molly McIntyre, which will be a picturization of Mr. Taylor's original work, "The Story of Nan Perrine," but which has been retitled "One Night." Not a few strange and weird effects will characterize the first Taylor-McIntyre Equitable play. "One Night" will be released January 17.

"The Senator," in which the inimitable Charles J. Ross makes his initial bow on the Equitable program, will be seen December 17. The chief situation and principal scenes of this play were staged at Washington, D. C., with the cooperation of the federal government.

Thus the forthcoming four weeks will see eight stars in four serious plays of exceptional productional elaborateness and special blendings of stage and screen stars.

In the month to follow Mary Boland, Teddy Sampson, Gail Kane; Brandon Tynan, Julia Dean and Frank Sheridan will be seen in famous plays or novels or original material of greater force.

Changes in British Condition

Emile Wertheimer, of London, Well-Known Film Buyer, Here for the Fourth Time in Less Than Year.

EMILE WERTHEIMER, of London, a steady and generous buyer in the American film market, is in this city for the fourth time within less than a year. Mr. Wertheimer is staying at the Algonquin. He had much to say about the changes that have taken place in the British film market in the last few months.

"I am taking back fourteen American productions this time," said Mr. Wertheimer to a representative of The Moving Picture World. "I have bought scores of American films in the past and I have had a good measure of success with all of them. Ninety per cent. of our programs in Great Britain are of American origin. There have been some changes in our market across the water. We are beginning to feel the effects of over-production. While in the past a large number of prints could be sold today a sale of ten copies is considered good. The single reels and the two and three reelers are a thing of the past in Great Britain."

"What has been the effect of the duty on films?" Mr. Wertheimer was asked.

"It has not affected the import of good American films" was his ready reply. "Of course a duty of two cents per foot on positives and 16 cents per foot on negatives will keep away the cheap and inferior productions. Nobody in Great Britain is sorry about that."

Mr. Wertheimer declared that our conditions here are wholly different from the conditions in England.

"I won't take any man's 52 pictures for a year. It is too dangerous a gamble. It may be all right for the first three months, but how do I know whether the producer has the money in six months; as much money, I mean, as he ought to have to make first-class pictures. American methods of combination of producers are utterly distasteful to British sentiment and will absolutely not be tolerated. Within the past four weeks the British exhibitors have combined and they will not be dictated to by either producers or renters. Let me point out another thing: Any American producer who intends to educate our British public to an appreciation of 'spiciness' and to an acceptance of his peculiar business methods will find himself as you say here 'up against it.' The threatened invasion of one producer noted for his spicy films will be met by the censors and by the police authorities. If he escapes the Scylla of the censors he will rush right into the Charybdis of Scotland Yard. Recently the police have been rather active in dealing with indecent films. One of these films had been passed by the censors but had been summarily suppressed by the police.

Mr. Wertheimer expects to close a few more contracts, after which he will sail home.

Modern Theater Construction*

Pertaining to Medium-Sized Theaters Adaptable for Smaller and Better-Class Audiences.

By Edward Barnard Kinsila.

Article IV.

THE previous article on "Modern Theater Construction" treated of commodious theaters suitable for popular-priced audiences. The present article deals with houses of a smaller type intended for more select audiences; theaters adaptable for small cities or larger towns, where perhaps one playhouse serves for visiting attractions once or twice a week, showing motion pictures the remainder of the time.

Character of the Audience.

Here, also, much depends on the character of the audience. A select audience—and the audiences of small communities are far more discriminating than the mixed patrons of a popular-priced theater, requires smaller and more artistic housing, finer music and more polite attention. Here the manager may not appeal to the primitive senses by the portrayal of sad tears and coarse laughter. He must assail his audience by clever surprises, artful feints and realistic make-believe, produced by natural or forced situations replete with witty assaults and adroit flank movements. On such battlefields of conflicting emotions, tears mean conditional surrender, while in unrestrained laughter the audience surrenders unconditionally, and each auditor on departing experiences a pleasurable satisfied sensation.

Clean Stories Essential.

The nobler the sentiment appealed to, the more certain the triumph. Plays dealing with salacious subjects should never be presented to an intelligent gathering. In the history of the stage no play of a salacious nature has ever endured, and the same is true of the screen. Stories of human interest, dexterously treated in a decent manner, are far more certain of enduring appeal.

There is another bad feature about the presentation of foul plays. Already censor boards have been created in small communities for the local censorship of screen plays, because of the occasional appearance of sensational risque screen plays. Ambitious film manufacturers seem to forget that Americans are naturally prudish, particularly so in small communities where each one knows and criticises the actions of his neighbor. These smaller cities constitute the backbone of the film industry. The universal establishment of local boards of censors will be a severe blow to film manufacturers.

Mr. and Mrs. Livewell Visit the Theater.

Perhaps it might give a better impression of the effect of a visit to a modern theater of this class if we follow Mr. and Mrs. Livewell, an intelligent couple who live alone in a quiet neighborhood, on an imaginary trip to such a theater and note their impressions.

Mr. Livewell, having enjoyed a hearty dinner at home after a hard day's work in the office, leans back comfortably in his chair and, addressing his wife, inquires: "Well, my dear, what shall we do this evening? I feel like being entertained," to which she replies: "They have just built a new theater near the Boston Dry Goods store, why not go there, it is so handy?"

Mr. Livewell nods assent, and, donning their outer garments, they sally forth to attend the new theater, less than five minutes' walk distant. Approaching the theater, they comment on the chastity and beauty of its design. Mr. Livewell, who prides himself on his knowledge of architecture, extols the Doris order of its architecture, and Mrs. Livewell, ever practical, lauds the selection of so convenient a site: "It's so handy, you know. One never needs to specially prepare to attend the theater, as is the case when one visits the regular theater district." Impressed by the inviting and specious appearance of the theater lobby, Mr. Livewell proudly enters, to be confronted with fresh surprises. Courteous liveried attendants direct him to the cloak room, where a goodly number of polite maids assist the couple to divest their outer clothing. Madam's prized new hat and coat are safely and neatly put away. Mr. Livewell, unaccustomed to such conveniences at a theater, timidly asks about the charge for such service, and when told there is no charge, is in a contented frame of mind. Both then enter the auditorium with a happy smile upon their faces.

May Not Interrupt Those Already Seated.

Unfortunately they arrived while a picture is showing, and are asked to await an intermission. During the brief pause following the close of the picture, they are ushered to their seats. To their utter astonishment, it is not necessary for anyone in their row of seats to arise to permit their passage. This so pleasurably affects Mrs. Livewell, that when seated, she remarks to her husband: "What a comfort it is to feel that you have disturbed no one." He replies that he has read something about it in the papers; "that it is all accomplished by increasing the passage width between rows a mere trifle of four inches beyond the usual width, all of which is done at the small loss of two rows in the entire auditorium, something that should have been done long ago. The increased comfort will bring increased patronage that will more than offset the loss."

Appearance of Security Essential.

Mrs. Livewell nods approval and observes that the walls are of hewn stone, or are they clever imitation, relieved by the brightly-colored upholstery of the chairs and hangings. She observes to her better half: "That it certainly gives one a sense of security to feel that they are surrounded by walls built of stone. I shall enjoy the play with no thought of ever having to escape through fear of fire."

Good Music Necessary.

Mr. Livewell, a lover of good music, does not hear this remark. He is completely absorbed in the renditions of a string orchestra concealed in an orchestra pit beneath the first row of seats. He cannot even see the leader and wonders how that personage attunes his music so well to the action on the stage. He turns toward his wife and says: "By jove, that idea of hidden music is most entrancing. It gives an idea of music in the distance that is absolutely alluring. I hate these blatant brass bands that blow their music at you in chunks. In most picture theaters the bands are placed on the stage before your very eyes so as to constantly distract your view from the scenes on the stage."

A Receptive Mental Attitude Secured.

Before Mrs. Livewell can signify her approval, the curtain is up again, and their interest instantly shifts back to the action on the stage. Everything is metamorphosed into the precincts of a temple whose god is being worshiped in an unknown tongue. This captivated couple have the cachet of refinement, yet they appear to have left their critical faculties at home. Like children listening to an Arabian Nights tale, they are fascinated by everything they see or hear, so wonderful has been the effect of their unexpected good treatment.

A Reflected View of the Auditorium.

The act is too quickly over and the curtain again falls. A large silver mirrored ball, not unlike the huge glass balls so popular in European gardens, raises into view from the depths of the orchestra pit. With suppressed "awes" the audience appreciates that this bright object gives mirrored reflection of the entire auditorium and all that it contains. Mr. Livewell then realizes that this same ball must have served the musical conductor in seeing the action on the stage.

Concealed Lighting.

Simultaneously both discover that the auditorium is brilliantly lighted by some unseen source of light. There is no vestige of a fixture anywhere. They conclude that the light must come from special lamps concealed behind a cornice, the light rays being reflected by the curved cove above that looks so pure and brilliantly white. To this belief Mrs. Livewell expresses doubt, "because there are no light spots on the wall." She evidently refers to the extra lighted surface usually seen just behind a bulb that reflects light. Mr. Livewell, a student of technical magazines, explains that these light spots are obviated by using large tubular lamps with metallic filament extending through them, arranged in a continuous row. Pleased with his superior knowledge he further describes that these tubular lamps, made large to prevent overheating, are silvered on the inside to prevent dust accumulating on the reflective surface.

The Auditors Are Entranced.

The mirrored observation ball is lowered and the curtain again rises. Mr. and Mrs. Livewell are again plunged into the emotional witch-broth. Everything in the play to them pertains to magic. The elderly actors appear youthful, the callous sentimental, the stupid witty, the plain beautiful and the commonplace romantic. It is a world of illusion, depending entirely on psychological conditions. The appreciation of the events pictured are gauged by the mental barometer of the auditor. How astute this manager who has regulated everything to render the minds of his auditors sensitive to the slightest impression!

Our couple have both forgotten their slight inconvenience at waiting for an intermission before entering the theater, the absence of the glare of light, the blare of brass and the comfort of sitting without one's wraps, undisturbed by anyone, with everything calculated to fix their attention on the performances, has done its work better than any pen can describe. At the end of the play they leave the theater. A half dozen maids have distributed the belongings of all without vexatious waits, and Mr. and Mrs. Livewell walk homeward, arm in arm, delighted with their evening.

A Revolving Stage Has Good Effect.

Mr. Livewell states in his own authoritative way that there must have been a revolving platform fitted in that stage, similar to those employed in garages, for it to have so quickly and quietly changed the stage settings. They finally decide that one night a week shall be set aside to visit this playhouse.

Trusting that the visit of Mr. and Mrs. Livewell has fittingly illustrated all the merits of the theater that is herewith illustrated, we will close, promising next to illustrate a theater devised in a most original manner to hold about the same number of people and built on a plot that ordinarily would not permit of erecting a theater of more than three-fourths of this capacity.

A humorous incident that presented itself during the fire at 1600 Broadway was the way in which the many people in their excitement left the building. Christmas Greetings

True to its old custom the

once more wishes all its friends and readers

A Merry Christmas

This glad Season always will proclaim "The Good News," a message of cheer, a harbinger of human progress and a deathless renewal of hope and faith.

The Christmas Days of 1915 and the coming New Year have a special meaning. They remind us that the hopes of humanity are more than ever confided to "this new nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal."

The motion picture in the past year has grown in power. It has fairly met its moral responsibilities. It has increased its usefulness to humanity. It has cheered and helped greater multitudes than ever before. It is still on its upward course.

Let us hope it will ever grow and flourish.

Baby Jean Fraser

BABY JEAN FRASER possesses an unusually attractive screen personality. She is a native daughter of California, having been born in Los Angeles about two years ago. Her parents are non-professionals and have never been connected in any way with stage or motion picture work. A member of the Selig scenario staff lived in the same apartment house with Jean and was so impressed by her winsomeness that he wrote a story around the child and introduced her to the director who was to produce the picture, and since then she has seldom been idle.

Baby Jean Fraser.

Baby Jean Fraser is known to the Selig studio and her friends as "Steve," a name bestowed on her at birth by her father, who underwent a period of keen disappointment when he found the newly-arrived infant was not a boy. He remarked philosophically, "Well, I'm going to call her 'Steve' anyway," and "Steve" it is to this day. It is doubtful if her associates at the Selig plant know her by any other name.

Her first appearance in motion pictures was in "Tiger Bait," in which she worked with a ferocious Bengal tiger and talked lovingly to the animal, calling the beast "my big kittie." Jean is absolutely fearless and has played in a number of animal pictures. Her eyes are blue; she has a wealth of sunny golden hair and an enchanting smile. Some of the later Selig pictureplays she has appeared in include "Jungle Lovers," "Orders," "The Baby and the Leopard," and she scored a hit in the Selig Red Seal play, "Sweet Alyssum," released through V-L-S-E. She is exclusively engaged by the Selig Company.

ANN MURDOCK IN "CAPTAIN JINKS."

Ann Murdock, one of the best-known actresses of the American stage, lately leading woman in "A Pair of Sixes," and before that in leading roles in some of the most successful comedy triumphs of recent years, will appear as Trentoni, the feminine lead in "Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines" with Richard C. Travers, who has the title role in Essanay's film version of Clyde Fitch's historic comedy which is now in production at the Chicago studio under the direction of Fred E. Wright.

"Captain Jinks" was first produced in 1900 and was the first starring vehicle of Ethel Barrymore who appeared in the role in the play which Miss Murdock will fill in the photoplay version. The scene of the story is laid in New York in 1872 at the time of the campaign of Horace Greeley and General Ulysses S. Grant.

Many of the first scenes of the play are laid in the Republican Club in New York City, and an exact replica of that famous structure is now being built under the eye of Mr. Wright who has several photographs and ground plans in his possession.

Costumes of the period call for the slightly hooped skirts with the big bustle in the women's dresses and the tight trousers, cutaway coats and black and white stocks for the men. These were made especially for the picture.

BESSIE LEARN GOES TO MIRROR FILMS.

Bessie Learn, after a long association with the Edison Company as a star, has left that organization and joined the Mirror Films. She will appear in five-reel features after the first of the year and be one of the most featured members of the company.

New Industrial Studio

W. R. Rothacker's Company Builds Finely Equipped Home for Its Purposes in Chicago.

THE accompanying photograph shows building construction on the laboratory and studios now being erected by the Industrial Moving Picture Company which expects to occupy the new premises about February 1, 1916. The building is 124 by 129 feet, two stories, and fireproof throughout. It contains a vault capable of safely holding more than 2,000,000 feet of film. The studio will be able to comfortably and efficiently handle six sets at one time and will be equipped with swimming pool and the most modern of lighting equipments. The carpenter shop and paint shops will be models of their kind. Ample provision has been made for property and dressing-rooms.

Adjoining the building proper is an outside yard of 124 by 48 feet which will be enclosed in an eight-foot concrete fence. This area will be used for garaging and for storage tanks. The roof has been built so as to carry a very heavy live load, and the electric elevator runs up to the roof so that in the event of an extraordinarily large set being used an outdoor studio can be arranged on the roof and by light diffusion a setting can be made of more than 150 feet in length.

Unquestionably the plans of the Industrial Moving Picture Company call for one of the finest, most modern and most completely equipped laboratory and studios in this country. As Watterson R. Rothacker, general manager of the Industrial Moving Picture Company, states, the present factory of that concern will be kept in full operation until the new plant is "hitting on four," so that there will be absolutely no interruption of business. Detailed description of the new place will be given to the public some time in January.

WILLIAM WEST, EDISON, DEAD.

William L. West, the veteran Edison character man, died Thursday, December 9, at the age of 62 years. While Mr. West had not been in rugged health for some little while, his end came rather unexpectedly, as he persisted, almost to the last, in appearing at the studio as he had for over six years. His last appearance was in the Kleine-Edison five-part feature, "The Magic Skin," as the old family servant and friend, a character he always did capitally.

Born in Wheeling, W. Va., and raised in Camden, N. J., Mr. West spent thirty-two active years in theatricals. Before he went to Edison, he was for a number of years in stock with Mrs. Spooner in Brooklyn. Previously he was for five years in "The Danger Signal" with Rosabel Morrison. He left a wife and two sons, Director Langdon West and Forrest West of Philadelphia. Mr. West was considered one of the best old men actors in the business and was loved both in the studio and on the screen for his gentleness and amiability.

BLANCHE SWEET RE-ENGAGED BY LASKY.

The Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company has re-engaged Blanche Sweet for a long term, according to announcement made this week by Samuel Goldfish, executive head of the company, on the eve of his starting for the Lasky studios at Hollywood, California.

Miss Sweet has just finished her latest Lasky photoplay, "The Ragamuffin," written and produced by William C. De Mille. It will be released through Paramount Pictures Corporation on January 17, and will reveal Miss Sweet in the role of an urchin girl whose regeneration forms the basis of the theme.

Making Animal Photoplays

Raymond L. Ditmars, Curator of the Greatest Zoo in the World, Talks of Films Produced for Paramount Newspictures.

By Tarleton Winchester

WHEN an animated motion picture newspaper starts out as a "Celluloid Magazine," as the Paramount Newspicture feature was the first to do, it is not hard for the journalist to imagine the difficulties its editor will meet with in obtaining interesting and amusing stories. Nevertheless, John A. Sleicher, Roger W. Babson, J. R. Bray, and other national figures are among those who have joined Paramount lately, and now it is announced that Raymond L. Ditmars, curator of the greatest Zoo in the world, at Bronx Park, New York, and most famous expert on animals, has also become associated with the big company, and will produce "Zoo Pictures" to be booked solely through Paramount.

As associate editor of Paramount Newspictures in charge of the Natural History department, Mr. Ditmars will produce films of entertainment value for this new Paramount addition. Aside from this, another arrangement is likely to be made which will give still more of his work to the motion picture public in a manner that will prove of intense interest.

Just what Mr. Ditmars is doing with regard to animal pictures can best be gleaned from a talk the writer had with him at his special studio at Scarsdale, New York, where, according to him, the Ditmars School of Dramatic Arts for Animals is now open.

"Our pictures will be produced through an arrangement which will give the exclusive use of the Bronx Park Zoo to us. We believe that our films will be a great boon to grown-ups and children who see them in the best motion picture theaters. Our students have been gathered from the four corners of the world, but their attendance is not voluntary. I am the director and my stage manager is Charlie Snyder, head keeper and lover of reptiles and animals. The star of the school is not one of the monkeys, as might be expected, but a sober-faced old porcupine, who can portray every emotion of the animal world, and on the Rialto would be called a born actor.

"In taking our pictures, it is necessary to exercise great patience, for it is mostly a waiting game until the right moment comes and the camera gets into action. After waiting the best part of a week to get a few feet of film showing several monkeys playing a royal game of hide and seek, we figured out that it would be much better to spend the time wasted in waiting, in teaching the animals to do just what was wanted.

"Meeting with success in teaching monkeys several easy tricks, we decided upon a more serious effort; in widening the scope of the teaching, we also admitted other species to the classes. The next were the trumpeter birds. It took two weeks before 'Trumpeter's Romance' was rehearsed well enough to start the camera. The scenario for this playlet was written by Snyder, though designed would be a better descriptive word. The scene represented a living room. In a chair at a table sat the husky trumpeter. (Husky is part of its real name.) In a rocking chair was the white-backed trumpeter.

"Mr. Trumpeter, that is, Husky, yawned and registered, leaving a good home to go out to the club. Exit Husky. There comes a knock at the door, and Mrs. Trumpeter flops out of the chair to the door. Enter the Canadian goose, who represents, to quote Snyder, 'some Villain.' The goose registers entertaining conversation, and when Mrs. Trumpeter turns her head, slyly steals a necklace from a drawer. The bird opposite sees the theft, and demands that the goose return the jewels. There is an attempt at flight, but the trumpeter holds on until the arrival of Husky. Then the curtain.

"To make these birds go over their parts time after time required work from the wings, and coaching was more exercise than coaching in a world's series game. Heretofore such animal scenes have always been spoiled by the obvious fact that the animals were being shoved about, and on and off, by the use of poles. This we are avoiding. In filming the subject, the stage ranges from a twelve-foot platform, to a base the size of a postage stamp.

"One of the first experiments was with impersonations by monkeys to register moods of the human race—mirth, rage, despair, and sorrow. These have been filmed to portray such enormous faces that to the spectators looking at the screen the effect will be much as the ogre appeared to the youth in 'Jack the Giant Killer.'

"But the monkeys have progressed in rehearsals, and in the porcupine we have found a real film star. In monkey drama, we have taken real scenes, and the principals have flirted, held hands, and spooned in the most approved fashion. We even tried 'Cinderella,' but that was too much of an attempt in the present state of the art in the Zoo.

"The second successful play put on at Bronx Park was 'The Great Marathon.' It showed the exciting scenes attending the arrival of the smaller animals for the great jungle race. For this scene, most elaborate scenery was prepared and much care had to be taken in teaching the animals what not to do, as well as what to do. For instance, it took a week to teach the blue fur monkey that it must not try to climb the scenery.

"Along the course were side shows, refreshment stations, and the other adjuncts of a county fair. Fully 100 varied participants in the scene struggled furiously for victory. In this connection, it is well to state that not even the stage manager was able to prevent the excitement on the scene from communicating to the audience in the grandstand, and toward the end the more excited spectators would climb the grandstand railing and enter the race.

"Two great difficulties had to be overcome in this scene," said Mr. Ditmars. "One was to get all the contestants off when the monkey started firing the gun, and the other to distribute handicaps so skillfully that the swiftest would not race ahead of the less speedy. Each detail had to be worked out, and each animal having a 'speaking' part, had to be trained. It required four months' steady work before the camera man was called in.

"This scene required a stage of forty feet. The next most difficult performance required a stage the size of a postage stamp. Upon this performed the star of the fly juggling troupe. This fly rides into the arena in a chair upon the back of a beetle. It juggles dumb-bells.

"The children will be delighted with what has been recently done," said the new associate editor of the novel Paramount Celluloid Magazine. "While the work of my Dramatic School is not strictly scientific, it will be of great value in promoting an interest in animals among children, to say nothing of grown-up folk. I am attempting to do with the actual subjects what Kipling did in the 'Jungle Tales,' for the benefit of the enormous motion picture public."

Snyder waited until Mr. Ditmars walked away. "Gee!" he said. "Ain't the Professor great? Why, he's that much in earnest that he tried for a week to get the peacock to take the part of Cleopatra. These are great days in the park with the dramatic bug flying about. Who knows, he may ask the keepers to play blood hounds while a chipmunk Eliza escapes over the ice. Say! Art is great."

Hearst-Vitagraph News Editor

He Is Ray Hall and Had Come to New York to Build the New Photo News Reels.

RAY HALL, news editor of the Hearst-Vitagraph News Pictorial and motion picture technician for the Hearst film interests, has arrived to establish the offices of the new weekly in Flatbush.

Mr. Hall, for many years in the general newspaper and news service field, including important assignments for the United Press and International News Service in various capacities from coast to coast, was made editor of the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial when it was founded in Chicago two years ago.

The newspaper head style of titles for motion picture topicals was invented by Mr. Hall, together with the slogan made famous by the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial—"The World Before Your Eyes."

It was due to Mr. Hall's enterprise that the Hearst News Pictorial carried the famous scoop on the Eastland disaster at Chicago, shipping prints to every exchange receiving the service within seven hours after the great lake ship settled at her dock.

Mr. Hall is known the country over among newspaper men. His last big news assignment was covering the national conventions of 1912 for the International News Service. Notable among his newspaper performances was the Hearst scoop on the confession of the McNamaras at Los Angeles. He chanced to be hanging around the courtroom when it happened.

Mr. Hall's offices will be at the Vitagraph plant in Brooklyn.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

TWO very important decisions have been handed down by courts in New York and Pennsylvania which recall some of the agencies at one time used by the grafters. In the New York case, the court ruled that anyone who pays the required admission fee to an open air event may take all the pictures he pleases notwithstanding it is shown that the management gave, by contract, the exclusive privilege for taking pictures. The case hinged upon an application by the party holding the privilege to restrain a company from exhibiting pictures which their representative took without even the formality of asking permission to do so. This is the first time the question has been passed upon by a court, although it has been frequently discussed. It presents many novel phases which do not appear to have been passed upon in the case just decided and it would not be surprising if, on the strength of the decision just rendered, some very interesting litigations should follow other open air events. It was claimed that the ticket of admission simply licensed the photographer who did not have the photographic privileges to enter the grounds as a spectator and in taking the pictures he violated his implied contract with the management as a spectator, but the court rejected this contention. For several years the managements of open air affairs have been reaping a revenue that has materially aided them in meeting expenses by farming out exclusive privileges to photographers. This eventually led to a system of graft. In some instances, people related to or intimately acquainted with influential members of the companies promoting the affairs would offer photographing companies exclusive privileges for a certain price and a bonus to the party making the overtures for his influence in securing a contract. A number of cases arose in which the photographers were made dupes. In some of the affairs, picture men were mulcted for additional payments on technical grounds. In others, the events proved so inferior that the pictures were valueless. Promoters of prize fights became particularly active in reaching out for this kind of graft when it became known that moving pictures of such events were money makers. This was before the Interstate Commerce law affected them. But they became so aggressive in "the chase for the coin" that they disgusted not only the picture people but the whole sporting world. It became a glaring fact that prize fights and boxing matches were arranged solely for revenue from the motion pictures. The grafters had become so daring in their operations that when the Interstate Commerce law was presented to Congress many of the most prominent and influential supporters of the boxing game went to Washington to urge its passage. But the boxers and their backers were not alone in reaching out for such graft. Schemers became busy in all parts of the country playing one picture company against another to raise the prices for exclusive privileges for such advertised events and for a time many concerns allowed themselves to be victimized.

While the court decision on the exclusive privilege question comes too late to be of the value it would have been a few years ago as a rebuke to people who manipulated such privileges for graft, it serves as a reminder to such that the operations cannot be renewed by them with profit because they cannot satisfy any careful photographer of protection under his contract. If, as the New York court says, any one who pays for admission may use his camera, then exclusive privileges are absolutely valueless. This recalls a noteworthy event which took place a few years ago when a company purchased the exclusive photographing privileges. The price was a big one and the company paying it was not disposed to part with the money until it was satisfied that the management would see that no other concern had an opportunity to get the pictures. A number of companies had openly declared their intention to get the picture by fair or foul means. The company having the privilege was assured that everything would be all right because if anyone else attempted to operate machines, an injunction would be served. This was not satisfactory because, it was claimed, the infringers would take and get away with sufficient pictures before the injunction could be obtained from the court. The management then promised to have papers ready for completion and a judge upon the grounds to sign them as soon as anyone other than the privileged company should attempt to take pictures. Still the contract holders were not satisfied. "Well, what in thunder do you want?" asked the management. The answer came on the day the event took place. Representatives of the management were numerously scattered about and on the grounds and none but the exclusive privilege people were allowed to take cameras into the place (moving picture cameras) and those who protested against the order were "persuaded" to the idea of safety first.

This brings to a point which the New York decision does not reach. If one who has a camera and pays his admission to an open air event may take all the pictures he chooses, can the man with a camera offer his admission fee and demand admittance? It is very evident that on account of the New York ruling and a failure for an adjudication on appeal the next step to protect the exclusive privileges will be to try and prevent people taking cameras into the places. This phase was discussed by an amusement manager who claimed that a notice: "No moving picture cameras allowed, except by permission of the management," would justify refusing admission. "Well," asked a listener, "suppose a man got into the grounds and afterwards got hold of a camera, having paid his admission fee, what would be his standing under the decision?" Another said be thought the legal status of the whole question hinged on due notice. If a management makes a contract to convey exclusive motion picture privileges, it can legally protect that contract with notice that photographic and all other rights are reserved before admission to the grounds are made." Speaking from a manager's standpoint, I would say that such a notice would become a part of the contract between the purchaser and the company selling the ticket and if, after entering the grounds the spectator attempted to take pictures, he could be required to give up the camera until ready to leave, or be obliged to leave the premises the same as a disorderly person. Such a case differs materially from the one in which the decision was made. I believe every company has a right to make rules regarding the admission and conduct of patrons, and I do not think the case decided kills the exclusive privilege idea. In the case decided, no action was taken until after the event and no question of personal rights was involved, except hinging upon the license to be enjoyed by the ticket purchasers. No issue was made on the question of private property, which could only be raised by the management of the park, which was not involved in the suit. Zoological gardens, art and other galleries have rules prohibiting the use of cameras and there is no reason why managers of private places should not make and enforce such rules if they wish to do so. But if timely action is not taken, there can be no complaint.

Which reminds us of an incident in which the late John Bunny figured a short time before his death. A photographer was about to "snap" him on a public street. Bunny rushed forward exclaiming, "Don't you dare snap me. My face is my stock in trade. It is copyrighted. You steal a snap of it, you steal my personal property and stand ready to answer for it." The photographer desisted with an apology.

A decision rendered in Philadelphia holds that under an order of the State Fire Marshal only licensed operators are allowed to enter motion picture booths from which pictures are being projected. The manager of a house refused to allow an inspector for the Board of Censors to enter the booth while the machine was being operated. He was prosecuted on a charge of interfering with the inspector and fined $25 by the lower court, but on appeal the fine was remitted and the judge ruled that inspectors must call for the certificates of approval issued by the Board of Censors. And so another exhibitor with backbone enough to stand by his rights has curbed the arbitrary methods adopted by the official censorship boards. The rule that the operator is master of the booth has proved beneficial to both operator and manager. Before it was made the booth was the one place sought by grafting members of the various municipal departments whose visits were frequently made for the chief purpose of manufacturing some excuse for extorting money or favor from the house. It was while the operator was busy that a bullying inspector found the best opportunity to work his game. Such rules were put in force to prevent fires by not having the operator's attention diverted by visitors or others. Many operators at first felt aggrieved, but have since joined with the managers in exchange of congratulations that the rules had an effect some of the promoters did not anticipate. An old operator tells a story of an experience he had with a manager shortly after the rule went into effect in New York. The manager was one who kept unnecessarily running to the booth with orders and suggestions. One night the operator said to him: "You must not come in here. I am liable to prosecution. I am a licensed operator and you are not." The manager resented the rebuke and told the operator his services would not be required after the show, but acknowledged his error when the operator replied: "If that is the case, I shall be obliged to notify the authorities that you persist in violating the fire ordinances regarding the booths. You are the boss of the show, but I am the boss of the booth while working in it."

Bernhardt Now Partly American

Actress Takes Unto Herself an Artificial Leg Created by an American Craftsman—Already Had Twenty-four Others.

THE leg which Sarah Bernhardt wears in the Universal production of "Jeanne Dore" is an American model of 1915, according to the circumstantial account of its architect, John R. Clarke, who has just returned from Paris, where he has an atelier for artificial limbs. Mr. Clarke is an artist; he has temperament, and when he speaks of his work his face brightens. He has but one leg of flesh and bone, and is fitted by experience for his vocation.

With the member created from fabrics brought from this country and modeled by American craftsmen, the distinguished actress may be able to walk through "Camille," except in the last act; that is, as Mr. Clarke said to-day, if she practices sufficiently.

President Carl Laemmle, of the Universal Film Manufacing Company, has stated that in his opinion Mme. Bernhardt makes her last public appearance in the film production of "Jeanne Dore," the play in which she was appearing before the operation. But Mr. Clarke seems to think that such a wonderful woman, with muscles of wire and a will of iron, will be able to show the very spring of youth in her step. Now that she is partly American, he thinks she will again reveal the very goddess in her gait. All the twenty-four other artificial legs in Mme. Bernhardt's wardrobe are French, and in that fair land of France the making of wooden legs is not yet an art.

PETROVA WITH POPULAR PLAYERS.

Announcement is made this week that Lawrence Weber, president of the Popular Plays and Players, has signed a long time contract with Mme. Petrova to appear exclusively in Metro feature productions. Under the new arrangements Mme. Petrova will practically abandon the speaking stage entirely and devote all her time to the making of motion pictures.

Mme. Petrova has met with remarkable success since she made her debut in the silent drama. Critics have declared her to be even better in motion pictures than she was on the spoken stage. The Petrova pictures have proved to be among the most attractive productions on the Metro program, and there is an ever increasing demand for them.

Mme. Petrova is now working in the big five-part feature, "What Will People Say?" which will be the next release in which this inimitable emotional actress is starred. Among some of the big Mme. Petrova features released on the Metro program, are: "My Madonna," "The Vampire," and "The Heart of a Painted Woman."

MARGARET GIBSON ON LONG CONTRACT.

In recognition of past performances David Horsley has placed Margaret Gibson under a long term contract, one of the clauses of which is that she is to be the featured feminine player in all productions for which she is cast. Miss Gibson joined Mr. Horsley last September. Her first picture was "The Protest," a three-reel Centaur Star Feature with Crane Wilbur. Following this she appeared in "Could a Man Do More?" another Centaur Star Feature with Mr. Wilbur. In both of these her work was of such a high class nature that Mr. Horsley tendered her a contract so flattering in its terms that Miss Gibson readily accepted.

BRITISH NOTES

LONDON exhibitors are contemplating the emulation of the praiseworthy scheme initiated in Liverpool last week of a Kinema Managers' Benevolent Society. Apart from the primary object, viz., the practical assisting of necessitous cases, the Liverpool society intends to embrace an informal social club for its members, employment bureau, and independent reports of current releases.

The Union Jack Film Company has opened its career as a productive unit with a half reel pantomimic subject, entitled "Harlequinade," release at Christmas. Davison's Film Agency is handling this line here along with a new brand about to be released by the British and Colonial Company under the trade-mark "Pall Mall Films." The first, written and produced by its old director, Harold Westen, is entitled "Motherhood."

Topicality is an element irrepressible in some producers, and upon the few occasions when it lends itself to proper pictureplay construction it proves doubly attractive. The Phoenix Film Company, in collaboration with Edgar Wallace, is shortly releasing a most successful and convincing illustration of this precept, one which deals concretely but reverently with the passing of Nurse Cavell. It was shown to the trade on Sunday under the title of "Nurse and Martyr." Its freedom from caricature of military methods on either side was a noticeable feature of the piece.

Larry Trimble, whose recent successes, "My Old Dutch," "Caste" and "Far from the Madding Crowd," have been among the British produced events of the year, is "bringing out" next week his assistant producer, Henry Edwards. Edwards makes his debut in Turner Films with the "The Welsh Singer," a three-reel drama.

The British Government, it is freely stated among renters and exchangemen this week, seriously contemplates the total exclusion from the English market of films produced in Denmark.

George L. Tucker is being credited by the reviewers with having produced a new masterpiece for his company—the London Film Company—in the shape of a screen version of Hall Caine's play, "The Christian."

The Exhibitors' Association is still on the aggressive against the Essanay Company—is daily exhorting its members to maintain the boycott policy. Doubtless with the object of rounding up the hundreds of exhibitors who are determined to have Chaplins at any cost, a new manifesto is issued by the committee today (November 24). The following extract may interest American manufacturers: "By reason of the fact that American manufacturers produce primarily for the American market (out of which they are able to make a substantial profit), they are able to sell in this country at a much lower price than the British or Continental manufacturer, who is practically excluded from the American market. This state of affairs was beneficial to the exhibitor and would continue to be, so long as a large proportion of these films were on the open market and the exhibitor, through his renter, was able to pick and choose, but a large and increasing number of these subjects are now being handled in this country as exclusives and at a lower price than those of British or European manufacturers."

FREE TO EXHIBITORS.

The Moving Picture World will send free of charge to any exhibitor who asks for it, its literature on the censorship question and its brochure on the Sunday law. Sooner or later every exhibitor will have use for either the one or the other and, in most cases, probably he will need the two pamphlets. We haye distributed a large number and we want every exhibitor to have this extra service which goes free to all readers and subscribers of the Moving Picture World. SEND FOR THIS USEFUL LITTLE LIBRARY TO-DAY.

VALUABLE WILD LIFE PICTURES FROM OREGON.

The Oregon State Naturalist Photographs Birds, Animals and Fishes for Use in Educational Kinematography.

THIS new series is fully equal, and in some points perhaps superior, to many films of a similar character. Mr. William L. Finley, Naturalist of the state of Oregon, is to be congratulated upon producing such an excellent series of pictures taking up some 25,000 feet of film.

Humming Bird Nesting.

While the primary object of this great work is the educational value of the films in their illustrative and teaching power, there is a most worthy secondary object in the desire to protect these birds and animals from ruthless hunting and destruction.

The protection of ali these wild creatures is one of the most noteworthy character, and the attractive and educational nature of these films will go further to secure these ends than either state laws or Audubon societies can possibly do. Although enthusiastic in his work as a naturalist, Mr. Finley is no less enthusiastic in his use of the moving picture camera as a perfect means of securing and recording details of animal and bird life, and in showing them to the public. The bird films, from which the illustrations on this page are taken, are very wide in their scope, also most elaborate in detail; it is easily noticeable that, to secure these results, time, skill and patience have been used to a valuable degree.

Humming Bird Nestlings.

Colony of Murres, or Guillemots, Taken Off the Oregon Coast.

Among the birds filmed will be found great colonies of murres or guillemots, the huge-billed puffins or sea-parrots,

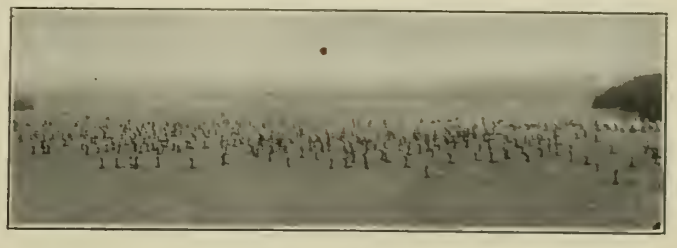
A Colony of Gulls in Flight Taken in Northern California.

A Cougar Kitten, Central Oregon.

gaunt cormorants and white-winged gulls with their mottled chicks; all photographed with great difficulty from the barnacled rocks of the Oregon coast. Of the inland birds there are the shy water fowl and wading birds of the southern Oregon swamps, jack-snipe creeping through the grass and sitting on their eggs, ducks, geese, terns, herons, pelicans, grebes and many other unfamiliar birds of this wild country, which are never seen by the ordinary person, making their appearance in life upon the screen of great interest.

One phase of Mr. Finley's work which he considers of great importance is that in which he seeks to interest children in the love and protection of our song birds. His reels showing children of the "Junior Audubon Societies" building bird houses are exceptional from an educational standpoint, as are also those of children mothering orphan bluebirds and thrushes, after their parents had been killed by a cat. Later these same birds are seen bathing and feeding from the hands of the children after they are full grown and able to fly—forming a most intelligent and instructive humane film.

A Wild Cat or Lynx Treed for the Cameraman.



Cormorants, Pelicans and Gulls on Lower Klamath Lake in Southern Oregon.

Of the animal series Mr. Finley has many of a most remarkable nature, chief of which is the home life of the wild antelope, in the desert regions of southern Oregon.

Chickadee Feeding Her Young.

Having discovered a water-hole where these animals were accustomed to drink, Mr. Finley and his companions built a "blind" of sage brush in which to hide the camera. Entering the "blind" before daybreak, they spent four days in these cramped quarters, photographing the wary animals as they came within range. By this means good pictures of herds of them were secured, as were also those of hundreds of sage grouse which came daily to the water-hole to drink. The lamentable fact is that through long and cruel hunting the antelope has been nearly on the verge of extinction. This picture will undoubtedly tend to secure their preservation as being one of the most beautiful of American animals.

Humming Bird Getting His Dinner.

Mr. Finley has added a splendid and valuable addition to the growing series of natural history films, thereby increasing the greater value of educational kinematography which will be highly appreciated everywhere; it will be impossible to show these pictures without causing interest to become enthusiasm.

OPINIONS OF AN IOWA PEDAGOGUE.

"Incessant seeking of an 'emotional jag,' or 'a chance to laugh,' has just about eliminated thought from the motion pictures of today and the teachers of Iowa must do something to stop the downward trend," says Harry E. Downer, superintendent of Friendly House at Davenport, in a letter of appeal sent out to over 200 Iowa county and city superintendents of schools.

Mr. Downer urged that the matter be taken up at the next meeting of the Iowa State Teachers' Association. "Most of the reels being turned out are frankly appeals to the pneumatic delight of sobs and the diaphragmatic calisthenic, cachinnation," he says.

"Do you know," he continues, "that the output of motion pictures with thought in them has almost ceased and that the teachers of America are to blame for this condition?

"The producers of motion pictures have done their part. The men who conduct picture theatres have tried out educational reels and done their part. The public who look only for emotional jags and a chance to laugh will have none of the seriousness of mental improvement. Surely not. As well expect them to storm the library for the non-fiction or invade the school buildings to pore over the textbooks garnered there. A picture with a lesson is the opportunity for those whose business it is to teach.

"The latest issued volume of proceedings of the National Educational Association containing the last word of the teaching profession of America on every phase of education—a volume of almost 1,000 pages—devotes five pages to motion pictures, an instructing force of such power that its neglect by the leaders in education is incomprehensible.

"In the latest issue of the Moving Picture World, 759 reels are listed as released during the current six weeks. Of this number, 19 are pictured current events, informational surely, educational, perhaps; 12 are educational, also perhaps, and 728 are frank appeals to the pneumatic delights of the sobs and the diaphragmatic calisthenic, cachinnation.

"It cannot be expected that a producer of pictures, skillful as he may be in the technique of his calling could undertake the fabrication of a course of study with its due proportion of the subjects which give knowledge and power. That is the school-master's job. He has done it for the education of books. He must also do it for the education of pictures.

"The motion picture people long since showed their ability and willingness, their self forgetfulness in pioneering in the new art, their devotion to ideals. It is the school-master's turn to do something. The cards were dealt to him long ago. It is his play.

"It is possible to set on foot at the coming meeting of Iowa teachers the buildings of a visual curriculum. Should each department of the state organization representing instruction in Iowa schools from kindergarten to university select a committee to receive suggestions as to the films needed to brighten and point instruction in the studies of that department; should these suggestions be classified by branches and the results of all the committees be gathered in one schedule of progression, Iowa would have done that which has not been done anywhere in the world—form an adjutant curriculum of visual instruction. It would be incomplete of course, but a course of study is a matter of growth and constant change.

"A presentation by teachers to producers of a list of motion pictures in orderly and scientific sequence would bring order out of chaos—the present condition of the educational branch of motion pictures. It would give the producers expert suggestion as to the subjects to be filmed. It would take from the dusty corners of storehouses pictures of wonderful value in education, pictures which have been misused or not used at all. The schools would benefit by this orderly use of material already at hand. The producers would finally gain some earned returns from investments so far disappointing.

"It is easy for the Iowa army of education to continue its march forward with backward gaze fixed upon Herbert, and Comenius. But let us this year call in the scouting party ahead of the general army, Edison, Pathe, Gaumont, Kleine and the rest, and see what they have found in the sunshiny land of the Cinematographs."

GOVERNMENTAL.

Having fully realized the supreme value of the pictures, the United States Government is not only helping forward every possible educational use, but is also encouraging the proper setting of pictures intended only for pleasure giving purposes. Recently the Secretary of the Navy has allowed the use of a battleship and also a submarine for a perfect and truthful representation of even an amusing incident. In this connection perhaps one of the strangest suggested use of the screen is to instruct election officers in their duties, and thus secure a purity of the ballot system. Both the army and navy are making films descriptive of life in the government service, and are arranging for travelling exhibitions wherever a suitable outdoor spot can be used, hoping thereby to familiarize and attract young men to the varied benefits offered in each branch of the nation's service. Under authoritative supervision, a film company is being organized to portray every phase of country life, from the standpoint of agricultural work, which will turn labor's former drudgery into attractive, profitable and ambitious occupation. The Chicago Livestock World, declares that even the most advanced and practical farmer is going to school again with the moving picture as the instructor. Already the demand is greater than the government can meet.

WHAT AND WHERE NEXT?

As an educator it most certainly seems that the moving picture has been universally adopted. To imagine in what way, or where it can find new channels of usefulness, seems beyond the human mind. There is, judging from reports and appearances, no avenue of instructive thought in which the projected illustration has not either already entered, or making preparation to enter. When it was predicted that cinematography was destined to become a great auxiliary to pedagogical work, the most sanguine mind never contemplated that the field of its activities could possibly become world wide and unlimited. In school work of all kinds, secular or religious, the teaching power of the moving picture is an established fact, making the time not far distant when any lack in its use will amount to a culpable negligence. In the larger world of all other activities the greater growth of the value of the picture is daily being demonstrated.

Ventilation for the Small Theater

Some Helpful Suggestions When the Question of Proper Ventilation Has Been Overlooked.

WE outline here the usual methods employed to ventilate the small theater. It is readily possible to install such equipment after the theater has been built, but in most large houses the ventilating system is usually designed by an architect or by a heating and ventilating engineer and is installed when the building is erected. Necessary ventilation should receive careful study, no matter how small the theater. When considering this subject, ventilating fans must not be confused with wall fans which create drafts more or less pleasing to the audience, but which in no manner improve the air in the theater. Real ventilating fans either remove foul air or supply fresh air.

In ventilating there are two main processes; first, removing foul air, second, supplying fresh air. For removing foul air in a small theater propeller fans will usually be found satisfactory. These are installed in the wall, window or ceiling, a hole being cut and the fan being bolted in place. These fans should generally be installed as near the ceiling as possible, where the heated and foul air rises and where the fans can accomplish greater results in drawing off the impure air and thereby increasing the volume of fresh air drawn in through doors, windows or ventilators.

Propeller Fan.

Where it is impossible to use this type of fan, the foul air may be removed by centrifugal fans in connection with wall openings and ducts. The air escapes from the room through registers in wall or ceiling and passes to the fan inlet through galvanized iron ducts and is discharged out of doors. In most small theaters the foul air is removed, but no fresh air is supplied to take its place. This must leak in through doors, windows or other openings.

Where fresh air supply is desired the outlet of the fan is connected with a source of air and ducts are run from the fan outlet to various registers through which fresh air is forced into the room. To make this arrangement satisfactory in the winter time, it is necessary to install steam heating coils over which the air passes. This, of course, complicates the installation and adds to the expense. It is adopted, however, in all theaters of any size.

In all buildings where a sufficient supply of fresh, pure air is being secured, additional comfort is afforded to patrons by wall fans, which circulate the air. Care should be exercised in placing all fans so that the currents of air are not directed against any part of the person, but considerably over the heads of all people, either standing or sitting.

RILEY HATCH WITH WHARTON, INC.

Riley Hatch, whose stage experience numbers over thirty years, has returned to the financial lure of the pictures and joined the Wharton Incorporated Company, at Ithaca, N. Y., who release through Pathe. He will star as "Dunstan Kirke," in "Hazel Kirke," for his first feature, which will be Wharton, Inc., Company's first "Gold Rooster" picture. His stage career embraces many huge successes. Among them Taby-wan-a, the Indian in "The Squaw Man," for which he was especially engaged for the London production, supporting the recently deceased Lewis Waller. Mr. Hatch played the entire London run of the play of eight and one-half months at the Lyric theater, London, England. He returned to America to take up the splendid role of Capt. Williams in the New York production of "Paid in Full," playing for two years in New York. He was then especially engaged for the character leads with Mr. Wm. Gillette in his farewell tour of all his plays, playing nineteen weeks at the Empire and Criterion theaters, New York, and runs in Chicago, Philadelphia and Boston; then followed as Capt. Hatch in "The Bird of Paradise" at the Maxine Elliott theater, with Laurette Taylor for the New York run. The following season he played John Blount in "The Master Mind" at the Harris theater, New York. In the pictures he has many notable successes in the feature production, some of them being the title role of "The Plunderer," "Bully Presby," with William Farnum (Fox Feature); Donovan, the trainer, with Lillian Russell in "Wildfire"; Captain Williams in "Paid in Full," All Star Company; Martin Berry in "Shore Acres," in which he and Charles Stevenson were starred, another All Star Feature; Luke Martin in "Lady Audley's Secret," supporting Theda Bara; Galbraith in "Pierre of the Plains," All Star Company; Bob Dow in "The Little Gypsy" (Fox Film Feature); George Rand in "The City," a Shubert release, etc., etc.

"THE BELOVED VAGABOND," PATHE.

In "The Beloved Vagabond," the five-part Pathe Gold Rooster release of December 17, Edwin Arden, the distinguished actor, adds another success to those of his brief picture career in an entirely different type of characterization.

This time he plays the role of Paragot, the vagabond, the delightful, human, faltering Paragot of William J. Locke's romantic novel. Before he had appeared in "Simon the Jester," and in "The New Exploits of Elaine."

With the Pathe production of "The Beloved Vagabond," Mr. Edwin Arden is permitted to create for the screen one of the most dearly loved characters of modern fiction. The pictures allow settings for the life of vagabondia, real outdoor settings along the road, which could never be seen on the legitimate stage.

"The Beloved Vagabond" tells the story of how Paragot, disappointed in love, loses himself to his life of luxury and becomes a vagabond. With his fiddle, and Blanquette and Asticot, players of the zither and tambourine, they go forth on the highway. When at length Paragot learns that his disappointment has been a mistake he goes back to his early life, but not for long. The simple life calls him and he returns to the broad highways.

"The Beloved Vagabond" has been very ably handled by the director, Edward Jose, and enjoys the distinction of being the first Gold Rooster play to be colored. It is a notably beautiful picture in story, acting, settings, and above all, the readiness with which it lends itself to the incomparable Pathe color.

UNIVERSAL DOING A BRET HARTE STORY.

Under the direction of Lloyd Carleton, Hobart Bosworth is at work in the stellar role of a film version of Bret Harte's play, "Two Men of Sandy Bar." The picture will be complete in five reels. Olga Printzlau is the author of the scenario and in its production Hobart Bosworth, Emory Johnson, Frank MacQuarrie, Charles Hickman, William Mong, A. E. Whitting, Jack Curtis, Jean Taylor, Yona Landowska and Gretchen Lederer play the principal roles. It is one of the finest companies the Universal has ever gathered for one feature.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Come On, All You Fellows.

LET'S start something, or rather let's permit Leon T. Osborn take the first crack at the ball. In a recent issue Rex W. Midgley, of the Franklin, Oakland, Cal., writes he was getting out the first paper published by an exhibitor. Taking "publish" in the sense of to print for himself, we told Mr. Midgley a few things. Comes Leon T. Osborn, now of the Balboa forces, to accept the statement in the sense of "issue" rather than print, and he sends in some of the early issues of the lamented Isis News of Trinidad, Col., to prove that he was first. The initial issue is dated January 6th, 1913. The paper, after a few issues, passed to Jack Nash, who took over the house and who later seems to have contracted a chronic case of writer's cramp in both hands and feet. His stenographer has it, too, apparently. Anyhow Mr. Osborn writes:

> I claim the distinction of being the first in this country to adopt a regular weekly paper devoted solely to my house interests, which has since been used by many others; Grand Junction for one.

Now then, all together:

Who Was the First??

Under date of December 11, 1911, this department says:

> Saxe Amusement Guide, published by the Saxe Amusement Enterprises, Milwaukee, in behalf of its numerous ventures, is something more than a program booklet. It's a theatrical newspaper. * * * The Amusement Guide gives the current attractions and several pages of well edited news items about acts to come, acts which have played the houses and just acts.

This was partly a theatrical paper as well as a picture sheet and was put out in the interest of a circuit and not a single house. A week later Emil Kehrlein speaks of his bulletin and tells of an ambition to make it sixteen pages and on January 6th, 1912, we speak of a sixteen-page sheet gotten out by the Hulsey theaters, and the next week the Liberty, Salt Lake City (then managed by Mr. Midgley), sends in a six-teen-pager with comment as well as film stories. None of these are precisely a weekly paper, properly speaking, but the difference is not very great. On January 27th, the Saxe publication is again reported, showing continuous publication.

It is interesting, by the way to note that Mr. Midgley cut down his sheet to a folder twice a week along in March and then wrote that he thought the folder had it all over the weekly program for results.

Time does not permit us to go through the files to get the record of the first paper in the semblance of a weekly issue, and it may be that the palm will go to Mr. Osborn, after all, but we think that some of the earlier issues will turn up. Certainly no one will seek to traverse the claim of Edmund G. Reid, then of Milledgeville, Ga., to having issued the first daily paper in the interest of a picture theater.

If you had a regular weekly paper prior to 1913, send in the first issue. It will be returned to you, if you desire. It would be interesting to know just who was the first to change from the straight program to the chat weekly issue.

Returns to Programs.

The Iris, Salisbury, N. C., has returned to the program style of program, using a Hennegan cover and an eight-page insert. They carry two pages of foreign advertising and keep the rest for house use, but they do not make any marked difference between their own advertisements and the outside announcements. They should adopt a more distinctive form of house announcement and give a page or a part of a page, preferably the third or fifth, to the entire program for the week. At present they use from a half to a double page for each attraction, but without any semblance of complete program form. They make a good selection of clip matter and use a little good house stuff. They should have a chat with the printer and see how they can make their advertising distinctive from the notices of the tradesmen.

"Rotten."

Sometime ago we said that J. W. Llewellyn, then of the Vaudette, West Point, Ga., had done a good thing for the business in teaching his patrons to say that a film did not appeal to them instead of pronouncing it "rotten." Along the same line we clip this from Reel-ism, the house organ of the Orpheum, Nampa, Idaho:

> Because one person does not like a thing is it necessarily no good or "rotten"? This question was brought forcibly to our attention a few days ago by the divergent opinions expressed by two Nampa business men in regard to one of last week's attractions.
> One man said, "that was undoubtedly the rottenest show I ever witnessed at your theater." Another man, as he went out after the performance, stopped to inquire if the same show would be repeated the next night. If it was he said that he wanted to "come and bring his family, as it was one of the best he had ever seen."
> Who was right? We ourselves thought the offering was "fair," someone else thought it "rotten" and still another thought it "one of the best he had ever seen." Maybe Solomon in all his wisdom could have decided the question, but we doubt it. This is only one instance of what the theater manager is up against when he tries to please everybody. In the words of Shakespeare it would seem that "it can't be did."
> In any event, however, would it not have been better if, instead of saying that the show was "rotten," if the first man had said "it did not appeal to me."
> This would be a funny world if we all liked the same things and "it did not appeal to me" certainly sounds better and MIGHT sometimes be more nearly correct than just plain "rotten!"

Try this in your own program. No film ever pleased all classes of persons or even all persons of one class. Teach them to realize this. This paragraph merely puts into printable form Mr. Llewellyn's policy, but it is so well put that it will stand reprinting.

Very Neat.

If we lived in Baltimore and received in the mail the postcard program of the Parkway theater, we would plan to attend the performance, if for no other reason than that the program is so attractively gotten up we would argue that similar good taste had been shown in other departments of management.

And yet the program is not at all elaborate, nor is it costly above the regular job. It is merely that it is neat and well prepared, the rule work and panels are light and separate the facts each to its own compartment, there is not too much type and what there is, is well balanced. Any printer should be able to do as good a job if he is driven to it.

But the face of the card bears a "booster" stamp; a "Boom Baltimore" poster stamp. We do not know what the post office ruling now is, but it used to be that anything pasted to the front of the card rendered it liable to letter postage and it would be embarrassing in the extreme if the entire batch of postals should be delivered, each with a further decoration in the shape of a one-cent due stamp to be collected from the recipients. There was no due stamp on this card, but more than once we have had to dig for a penny for a card we did not particularly want.

Jusso.

A Philadelphia correspondent sends in some advertising for the Arcadia and the Ridge Avenue. Of the former he says:

> The Arcadia program is curious in that it looks cheaper than anything I've seen in a long time—and the Arcadia really is the classiest motion picture house in town.

That is what probably impressed others. The "program," if it is intended to be a program, is cheap and nasty, and not at all typical of the house. It is in black, printed on one side and that in a black that might be better. It is largely the stock that offends, however; a cheap card in a dead, billious yellow that cracks if it is bent or folded. Good paper stock probably could have been had at the same price, but the card is anything but effective.

The other samples are for the Ridge Avenue and show Jay Emanuel to be investing in two-color printing and colored heralds. He sticks to his regular form—which is a good form—a sheet 4½ by 10, and he does not yet date his days, though he has been asked to. If he doesn't pretty soon——!

Doesn't Match.

In a recent issue of the Orpheum Herald, Aberdeen, S. D., Editor Walker announces that "on account of limited space, a number of newsy items have been left out of this issue. You can look for something good next week." That being the case he should have fired the printer's devil who took nearly two columns on the back page for a lot of second-hand jokes, which are not as good for the sheet as newsy items by a whole lot.

Positively No.

An exhibitor, who may be writing in good faith, suggests "Photies" as a substitute for "Movies." Don't let's.

Not Often, But—

It is not often that we get stuff from the Kehrleins, but when we do it is certain to be good. Oliver Kehrlein sends in a four page folder for Carmen that is a treat. It is to be regretted that red and yellow are so nearly alike in photographic values that the front page will not reproduce, for they make a most effective use of red, yellow and black on the front page, which shows Carmen and the bullfighter, a horse's head and shoulders in black being introduced to hold the figures apart, and the horse's eyes are blindfolded, a touch of accuracy that many would overlook. On page two is a pasted reproduction of Miss Farrar as she appears in the role and a few words of explanation, the third page announces the first showing simultaneously in Boston and Fresno, and the back page gives the condensed story. And though they run the color form for both sides of the sheet, they do not overload the pages with color. That is a characteristic Kehrlein touch. Just one eighteen point band on the inside pages and an eighteen and a six on the back. If you use two colors, employ the brighter merely to "touch up" the darker instead of so overloading the page that the rest is obscured. It may seem hard to pay for a color run and then get so little of it, but it pays.

Likes the Change.

In sending in some card programs, Carol A. Nathan, of the Actograph, Sacramento, Cal., writes.

> We are in receipt of your advice that we will receive THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD on Mondays instead of Wednesdays and assure you that this is good news to us. We cannot begin to tell you how handy your critieisms are in composing our newspaper publicity.

The change in publication date is one that is decidedly helpful to all users of early dated film; which is why the change is made.

The programs are a French gray stock three by five inehes, printed in green and well printed in that somewhat difficult ink. The back carries the same printing, which should he changed weekly, unless, as is probably the ease, the cards are printed upon the hack in long runs, sufficient for several weeks. This saves money, as once the press is prepared the additional impressions do not add much to the eost of the run, but a change should be made each time a fresh supply of backs is printed up. The front carries the program for the week, three changes, with dated days and a two-point dash between the days, which is sufficient in so small a card. A cut heading gives individuality to the card, about 16,000 of which are distributed each week. About the only suggestion to be offered is that the title of each weekly feature be set in eight or ten point display instead of machine work. A slightly fancy letter would make a decided difference in the general appearance of the eard and three display lines will add little to the cost of the joh and bring much in return.

A New Wrinkle.

For its anniversary week, the Claremont theater, New York, used the film book marks inventcd by an English exhibitor and described in this department a couple of years ago. But Fred J. Dollinger worked a new wrinkle when he required a coupon to be filled out with name and address by those who wished the film. Of course most persons did want a book mark, and equally of course Mr. Dollinger bas a real mailing list. The text is adapted from that in Picture Theater Advertising, but the mailing list feature is Mr. Dollinger's own. If you have a copy of the book (and you should have), paste this coupon at page 157.

WOULD YOU LIKE SOME MOVING PICTURE FILM FOR A SOUVENIR?

> At considerable expense the management of the Claremont theater has secured a lot of moving picture film to present as souvenirs to patrons of this theater. If you would like a piece of this film, which is not only unique as a souvenir, but which will make an excellent book-mark, fill in the coupon below and send it to us.

The program, which is sixteen pages, brown ink on cream stock, is nicely done and is suited to the screen of the cuts used, which makes it look still better.

Had a Lot.

Lately Sharp and Vahl, of the Orpheum, Nampa, Idaho, spoke of a competitor who gave away dinner sets. W. J. Howell, who runs the Unique, writes:

> In a recent issue I noticed an article in answer to comment from my competitors, Sharp and Vahl, of the Orpheum, regarding the idea of giving out dinner sets one night each week. During the latter part of July, when business was at its lowest ebh, I contracted for a car load of dishes direct from the pottery, an exhibitor in a neighboring town taking half, the dishes being of a quality that retail for from nine to ten dollars here in Nampa. Once a week I distribute a set and pack my house to capacity, drawing people who have become regular patrons. My pictures are good, projection and music first class and the ahove stunt brings in people on the gift nights who appreciate the performance and come again.

Half a carload is a big order, but if it makes business for Mr. Howell it is good business, though he should get a copy of Picture Theater Advertising, both to read up on premiums and to resd about drawings. Presents should bc used only when they must he used to get the business, and now that the people are coming a new scheme of distribution should be adopted.

Mr. Howell sends in a copy of his house program. He should write more house stuff and elip less film stuff. It is the house talk that makes such an issue really worth while.

Bigger and Better.

Out in Seattle Tom North has hoosted the size of the page of his Pals, then added four more pages, and now he is talking about second-class entry. That's going some. He has about half a column of stunts in the last issue that sre good enough to print. All over we note a disposition on the part of exchange organs to urge their patrons to advertise. You have to these days if you want to pay your exchange and other bills, and now the exchanges are helping, following the lesd of George Editor Carpenter, who was talking advertising when other house organs were talking about film. You cannot just open a picture theater. You must keep it open, and the best way to get the trade is to advertise what you have to sell so attractively that it sells.

A One Side V. P.

Ben S. Meyer, of the Queen, Tyler, Texas, sends in some vest pockets and this note:

> Enclosed herewith we hand you a vest pocket program, which we consider is meritable to the extent of occupying space in your department. We will he pleased to have you review the good points and the bad, and make any suggestion for the improvement of the advertising matter.
> We realize that your department is to help exhibitors, and there is no man in the exhibition business that can thoroughly understand the kinks of all the phases of the business. A suggestion from a fellow exhibitor or a man who reviews ad matter far and wide is more in a position to understand wherein improvements could be made.

That Frank Richardson is trying to argue that his department is a full half of the paper. This must be the other half, perhaps. At that we have our own opinion as to which is the upper half, but you have to take a lot from a man who owns a motorcycle. When he can work up to a Ford there will be no living with him.

Anyhow, we appreciate this letter as we do any that show an appreciation of our desire to help. We cannot help Mr. Meyer much, other than to talk of colors, for his program arrangement is excellent for a small issue. But he seems to have the usual trouble in getting cheap stock of a good color. He has an excellent red, but the pink looks so washy that we think that some people will pass over the program on account of the color, which is no way to do and yet the way a lot of people do do. If you cannot get a good colored stock in the grade you want, use white until you can. Do not use sick looking colors.

The program is straight six point, thirteen em column, on a card 2⅞ by 3½. It is a handy pocket size. The top carries two trade mark cuts, one on either side of the type name, and one date to cover the entire program. As this is straight machine work, it will cost no more to date the dates. It would pay to have the hours of performance and the prices also appear. Cutting out four lines will do it nicely. The program should be something more than the announcement of the coming hill and it would pay to turn this over and print the other side. If the two pages are printed on a sheet at one time, and then cut apart, the impression cost will be no more than it is at present and the composition not very heavy. That will give the opportunity to use some house talk that will make more business than the extra composition costs. For one sheet stuff this printing as a two page form will save money and is a trick most printers know. You get stock double width but only half as many sheets. You print A. and B. on say 500 sheets. Then turn over and feed again so that you now print A. on the back of B, and B on the back of A. Then cut apart and have a thousand sheets, printed on two sides with only one thousand impressions instead of two.

Copy, Please.

The Movie News, of the Majestic, Grand Junction, Colorado, republishes comment from this psper on censorship and the attitude of churches toward the pictures. Do you follow suit in your progrsm now and then? You should, for there is no telling when some wild eyed reformer with a hyena voice will rise up in your town and proceed to make trouble for you while he makes an ass of himself. Beat him to it by educating your patrons in advance.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. Mr. Sargent tells all he knows and this includes what several hundred successful exhibitors have told him. More than 100 examples. An introduction and then 299 pages of solid text. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. Handsome clothboard binding. By mail, postpaid, $2.00

Inquiries.

Questions concerning the writing (but NOT the marketing of) photoplays will be replied to without charge if addressed to the Photoplaywright Department and accompanied by a fully addressed stamped envelope. Questions must be typewritten or written with pen and ink.

Questions as to the financial standing of concerns or the probable markets for specific or certain styles of stories cannot be answered.

In no case and under no circumstance will any manuscript or synopsis be handled and if sent will be returned without reply.

A list of addresses of producing companies will be sent if the request is made direct to the publication office, but not where request is made to this department.

Boobs.

CURIOUSLY enough, two letters come in one mail. In one a correspondent wants to know what a boob is and in the other the writer argues that the word is offensive. It is. So is a boob. To a real writer a boob is about the most offensive thing there is so long as he or she keeps on being a boob, and most always they persist in their boohishness.

In the first place a boob is a person who is not an author and in all probability never will be. A boob is a person who wants to buy a book or a course and right off he an author by virtue of the investment. A boob may not even invest so much as a dime and still insist on being an author. He writes a script, doesn't sell it and declares all studios dens of thieves and all others connected with the business stool pigeons. A boob does not know how to play the game and would not play the game if he knew. He thinks that some one asked him to get rich quick writing plays and if he does not sell all he writes he knows that it is because there is a plot in the business to get good stories—his good stories—free.

If he writes a bromide and a company hard put for stuff uses a story on the same lines, he knows that they stole his story. If some other company puts out a story that is even a tenth cousin once removed to his own brilliant plot, the boob throws stones at the local picture theater and tells every one that his story was stolen and passed along to another company to divert suspicion.

A boob demands that editors and other authors teach him the business of writing, but he does not want to study. He wants the instructor to make some mystic passes and mumble some strange words so he can go right out and get a hundred a reel. He does not want to be told that work is the only way to win. He does not want to pass an initiation. He wants to have the degrees communicated instead of conferred.

A hooh, too, is not grateful for good advice. He doesn't want advice; he wants to write plays, but he doesn't want to write plays badly enough to study. He knows that there is a short cut and his advisor could tell him, if he would, what this short cut is, and he writes the prize winner of contests and any one else whose name he sees mentioned. He values sample scripts above text books and he eagerly follows the form, but does not look back of the form to see the thought that makes the form of value. If he uses one style of writing and finds another, he tries that because this may be what the matter is. If you tell him that his scripts will not sell unless they are indented ten spaces with five lines of space hetween scenes, he will thank you and believe you. If you tell him that his scripts will not sell unless his plots are good, he will know you for a liar, because his plots are good. He knows it and his friends have upheld him in his belief. They all say they are hetter than the stories on the screen.

Another sign of boobism is that he cannot understand that any one but be can think a certain thought. If he thinks of a story that Adam told Eve and if some one else thinks of the same story and gives it a new twist, he knows that it is his stolen story "spoiled in the changing" because he knows that no one else could think of the same story or one so good.

The boob would be harmless and even, at times, slightly amusing were it not that he harmed others. It is he who loads the studios down with scripts. It is he who ahuses the editors when they offer advice and makes them wonder what is the use of trying to help people. It is he who steals copyrighted stuff and offers it as his own, causing editors to grow suspicious of all contributions not from known authors. It is he who sends from five to fifteen scripts of all sorts and descriptions to editors who venture to remark that they are in the market for five-reel features, and so editors seldom make announcements and the man who might be able to sell does not hear of the opportunity. The boob is a dog in the manger who cannot succeed in writing and who does his best to make success impossible to others. He writes technique instead of plots, he seeks pull instead of push and is a clog and a detriment generally. He cannot help it, hut he must not complain if now and then we express our dislike for him.

Comfort Pays.

You may not be able to afford a workshop of your own, but you can at least plan to work under the most favorable conditions possible. It will pay.

If you have a desk and chair that do not mate you cannot expect to do the hest possihle work, for you cannot typewrite with ease if your position is wrong. If you put your machine on a tahle and sit in a common chair your arms will be too low and the physical discomfort of writing "uphill," as it were, will find a reflection in your work. When you are seated before the machine with the forearm resting on the top bank of keys on your machine, your elbows should not be lower than the top of your hand. If the chair is too low, build it up. In newspaper offices there are few desk chairs. Either the reporters build up regular chairs with a pile of newspapers or use little platforms to set under the chair and raise it to the proper height.

In the same way have your first and second sheets handy that time may be saved in changing paper when genius burns. Have the little conveniences that make for comfort or your story will suffer. Be comfortable and you can do better work and more of it.

Studying Scripts.

Approaching the question from a new angle, an inquirer wants to know if study of photoplay scripts will help her to advance. As a rule they will not, unless read in quantities. The study of a single well-prepared script will be interesting as showing the form in which to write. A deeper study will show the manner in which one writer has handled certain problems. Could a sufficient numher of scripts be obtained and studied to cover all of the problems of photoplay, then the reader would he in possesion of a one-sided solution of those problems, but even then this would not be enough, for a dozen authors approaching a single plot may resolve those problems in as many different fashions, and another dozen might get still other results.

William Lord Wright, and not without reason, declaims against letting the novice see any script on the ground that it encourages a slavish following of the model and this, unfortunately, is too often true. The essence of writing is to evolve your own individual style of handling plays. It is this which makes you a hetter writer than another, or one less competent.

For another thing, professional scripts rarely follow exactly the precise rules of tecbnique, and wbat is really a fall from grace may be regarded by the student as a fixed and rigid rule.

Study the rules of technique in a hook and not from play scripts, then develop your own rules for handling situation and you will have scripts with a personality. In the long run it will he the style of treatment of a story tbat will determine a sale, plot values being equal, and this is something tbat must arise from within.

How to Sell.

William Farmer, who is an Essanay prize winner, gives this concise history of himself:

> Just a word as to my experience whlch may be interesting to you. Two and one-half years' work and study. Two hundred and sixty-four rejection slips in my collection. One hundred and seventy-two complete scripts in my morgue. Not a single sale until August 16th, this year. And that was the prize winner ($100.00) in Essanay Contest. Two doubles since at $50.00 each. Although the last five scripts I have produced are now under consideration and have heen out for several weeks with good companies. I just commence to feel that I am getting started in the right path. I never sold a single story until I buried my ego and listened to the eternal hammering of Epes Sargent, to get away from the beaten path. I tumbled at last, the result, I am selling my scripts.

One hundred and seventy-two scripts without a sale seems a lot, but we'll venture the prediction that Mr. Farmer will find that the writing of these was of greater value than his $200 worth of sales, for the knowledge thus gained will enahle him to sell many times two hundred dollars' worth if he continues to keep his ego in proper subjection. That was the real lesson to learn: that it is not what seems good to you, hut what seems good to the editor that sells, and that only the unusual seems good to him. Hundreds of you who think your are writing great stuff are grinding out rot and do not yet know it. When you do, you will improve the grade of your work, if it is in you, and then you'll sell.

Changing.

Lately Roy McCardell got all "het up" because his stuff was hutchered in the studio. We don't hlame him. We have been "improved" almost to the point of extermination, hut we expected it. At the same time Mr. McCardell calls attention to the greatest evil in the business, tbe unwarranted changes in a script without consultation with the author. Some directors have a passion for improving and cannot and will not leave a story alone. Almost all of them overproduce footage. This has to be trimmed off, but generally the cutting is done hy means of the excision of entire scenes. This sometlmes completely alters the story or merely leaves it unintelligible. Not very long ago a reviewer remarked of one of our stories that perhaps we knew what it was all about, but that he didn't. He could not be charged with lack of understanding, either, for two one-reel stories had been trimmed down to let a third subject into the reel, and we could not tell what it was all about, either.

As to footage, it is seldom that a subject is made within the limits unless it is very weak. A one-reel story will run from 1,200 to 1,500 feet and will either he trimmed to about 900 to let in the leaders or will he padded to get a two-reel story that must be draggy. It is not so long ago that we overheard a director remark that with nine scenes still to make he already had 1,200 feet, and as though that were not enough, he was planning a new development that would add another 300 feet.

Until producing conditions are altered there can be good stories only by accident. We are sorry for Mr. McCardell—but misery loves company, and we welcome him to our midst.

Moved.

If you have been so foolish as to submit stuff to the Story Revision Co., and can obtain no action from them, note that they have moved over into New York State.

"At Usual Rates."

An author submits two plays to a wildcat concern at usual rates. Some time later he is offered five dollars each. He replies offering to sell them for $25 each and is made a counter proposition of $15 each to which he replies offering the two for $40. To this no reply is received. The author then discovers that the plays have been made and released. He wants to know if submission at regular rates makes it necessary to accept the nominal price or whether he should sue and for what sum.

It is customary, in submitting at usual rates, to accept whatever the studio offers, within reason, but five dollars per reel is not regarded as a usual rate for photoplays, and an author cannot be required to accept so absurd a sum. He is advised that he can sue, but for not more than $40 which is his price of record.

Agreed.

Asa Steele writes regarding some of the systems recently described in this department. He seemingly overlooks our own suggestion that all this bookkeeping takes time that might profitably be spent on practice work and asks if this does not have a tendency to introduce too much routine into the work. He adds:

> I started off by gathering a large bulk of newspaper clippings and notes. For years I have taken from newspapers or actual life notes of unusual, touching vividly dramatic incidents and suggestions. Then I passed through the experiences of actor, critic and writer for the stage to find that notes were only indirectly valuable; so abstract that I seriously question if they do not represent too much wasted time. Drama and photoplays must be organic and the more there is in them of cohesion and the less they contain of patchwork, the more likely they are to hang together and satisfy the auditor or spectator. This may sound trite and yet it is frequently the pitfall of the author. I found my notes invaluable to suggest a theme, to stimulate the imagination and to furnish a few of the incidents, but once the theme is decided upon and the plotting begins, very little can go into the notes that is not directly related to the theme. Even the numerous elaborations can be cut out as lacking significance, or as being redundant.

All of this is precisely what we have said. It is given to few men to have lived such a varied life that of their own experiences they can construct innumerable romances and the closer these experiences relate to themselves the less available they are. It is necessary, then, to acquire a part of the experience and knowledge at second hand and for this reason some form of note keeping is invaluable, but this should never be permitted to overshadow the greater art of imagination; of transmuting the scraps into a homogenous whole, nor should bookkeeping be permitted to occupy the time of the novice writer to the exclusion of his practice work.

The most valuable feature of note bookkeeping is that the mere act of entering will impress the fact upon the mind, from whence it may be drawn with reference to the carefully collated notes, and we believe that the generality of practical writers keep note books, but seldom refer to them and then employ them as nothing more than a stimulus to the imagination and not to suply the want of imagination.

All good devices may be carried to an excess and it is well ever to remember that nothing can supplant the necessity for originality of thought. On the other band we cannot all work alike. and while Mr. Steele may hold his note books lightly in esteem, it may be that the author of the scheme trains his imagination through his seemingly routine work. It is for this reason that in this department all methods are mentioned and discussed. Mr. Steele, however, sounds a note of warning that may be timely. He might go further and urge against carrying any scheme to excess until its merit, as applied to the particular individual, has been tested and found efficient.

Using Names.

A Washington correspondent with a name well known in literature makes a kick on the use of names from a new angle. He complains that a recent story of his was well received, but that none of the trade papers mentioned his name as author. He thinks that this is unfair and that the company making the story should have seen to it that the papers were supplied with the author's name, as this is a source of advertisement to him.

We can sympathize with him in one sense, for we know the value of an established name, but did he sell his story to the company for the advertising he would obtain or for a check? The advertising columns of all the papers are open to him if he desires advertisement, but it scarcely would appear that the editors are under any particular obligation to give free advertising to authors. In the present case the author's name has a definite advertising value, and it is to be presumed that the company was liberal in its payment for the use of the name, but if the company does not feature the name there seems to be no reason why the papers should carry credit.

Deeds, Not Words.

Don't sit in the theater and tell yourself that you can write a better story than the one you are looking at. Don't sit there. GO RIGHT HOME AND DO IT.

Similar.

If you went into a grocery store to purchase a pound of lard and the grocer had none, would you buy a quart of sweet pickles you didn't want just for the sake of buying something?

Then why do you send one-reel stories to a company that advertises that it does not want anything but three to five-reel stuff?

Your Library.

Build up a little library of working books if you are going to stick in the game, but spend your money judiciously. Try and see a book in the library and decide upon its value before you order a copy. A man may have a reputation as a writer and still be unable to communicate his methods to others and he may lack utterly the teaching quality. Most standard books are stocked by the public libraries, and you can see them there.

And do not merely get photoplay books. Get a Thesarus to enlarge your vocabulary, get a good dictionary, a geography or better still, a good atlas, a couple of books on story writing and one or more on the drama as an art. Build up slowly and carefully, and presently you'll have a shelf of books that will help you and will not merely represent money spent for junk.

Titles.

Some day when ideas will positively not come and you don't know what to do to occupy your time, take a few pounds of back numbers and sit down and read the manufacturers' advertisements. See the titles they use and how they use them. See how nicely a short title can be worked up in the advertising. See how another is too long. See how catchy this one is and how dead and uninteresting its companion may be. First thing you know the day will be gone and you'll have an entirely new idea of title writing as an art. If titles do not interest you, you can better understand that perhaps your titles may not interest editors and so will cost you sales. A good title, not a "cute" one or a "clever" one but a good one, will set the editor reading your synopsis more than half persuaded that he wants to buy the story.

Maybe, too, the study of titles will suggest some plot ideas to you. It certainly will not be time wasted.

Making Action Work.

Don't get the idea that any old action that tells your story is good enough action. Get the best, for that is apt to be none too good. Each scene is supposed to advance the story one point, but you can tell this point in action that will have also a direct relation to things to come and bolster up or emphasize what has already happened. Write each scene, not once but many times, using practice paper, before you select that version that will give you the fullest value without adding to the footage.

Comedy.

Don't think that your story is going to be funny just because you have written a lot of funny leaders. Make the action amusing, the action of the players and the action of the plot, and you will not require so many leaders and your written play will look less like the manuscript of a book.

Heavens! No.

Lots of times we have had to tell authors it will not aid them to study photoplay acting, but here is something yet again. A correspondent wants to know if we think that the purchase of a picture camera selling for $15 will help him to understand camera limitations.

It will in a way. He will find that the camera mentioned has more limitations than even Carl Gregory ever heard of, but to try and run one of those boxes is more apt to qualify the operator for the insane asylum than authorship. If you pay from $50 to $200 for a box you will, in the course of a few years, learn three or four things that will be useful from the writing end, but those toys are not going to help in the least.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

By mail postpaid. Add ten cents if registration is desired.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed, or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles have been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 117.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high-class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What is the ideal shutter? What test would you apply to determine whether or not the outside shutter of your new machine was of the right proportion? Is shutter proportion altered by local conditions? How would you proceed to determine the best place to place the outside shutter—how far from the lens?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 111.

The Roll of Honor on Question 111 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Tex.; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, New York; C. A. Dann, Toronto, Canada; Ray Ogden, New Albany, Ind.; T. C. Shipley, Lincoln, Neb.; J. R. Andrews, Burlington, Vt.; Phil Casper, Erie, Penn., and John Griswold, St. Louis, Mo.

I have selected the reply of Brother Griswold as best suited for publication.

Reply to Question No. 111.

By John Griswold, St. Louis, Mo.

The Question:

What do you understand by "undercut" sprocket teeth? What do you understand by the intermittent movement? By momentum? What effect have these two on projector construction? What are the effects of undercut and hooked intermittent sprocket teeth?

The Answer:

"Undercut" sprocket teeth means that the film has cut a groove at the base of the sprocket teeth on the side which comes in contact with the film. If this wear is allowed to continue long enough it will gradually wear the metal away until the tooth becomes "hooked," or, in other words, has somewhat the form of a rather straight hook. Put another way, the side of the tooth next to the film becomes curved, the amount of the curve depending upon the amount of wear. I understand the term "intermittent movement" to comprise those parts most intimately connected with imparting movement to the strip of film between the two loops, viz., the star and cam, their shafts and the intermittent sprocket. In some cases the oil well and casting upon which the parts are assembled must also be included. Inertia is the application of the law which says that a body continues in a state of rest or in uniform motion in a straight line until compelled to change that condition by some outside force. Applied in practice to the intermittent movement this means that inertia represents or is equal to the force expended in starting the intermittent sprocket, star and shaft, and bringing them up to full speed (neglecting the item friction). Momentum is known as the "quantity" of motion, and is measured by the product of the mass of the body and its velocity. Applied to the intermittent movement it would mean the tendency of the intermittent sprocket and the various moving parts to continue moving. The flywheel produces steadiness of movement by reason of the fact that it has momentum. The intermittent sprocket has momentum, and as applied to the intermittent movement this momentum represents the force, including friction, expended in bringing the intermittent sprocket and the film to rest.

The effect of the two on projector construction is that a balance wheel of comparatively large mass must be connected with the cam shaft in order that the inertia of this heavier mass will tend to maintain the mechanism in uniform, even motion, with the least possible amount of unsteadiness. But for the fly wheel, due to the alternate inertia and momentum of the intermittent movement, the motion would be very unsteady. Another practical effect is that it compels the construction of an intermittent sprocket with the least possible amount of weight consistent with rigidity.

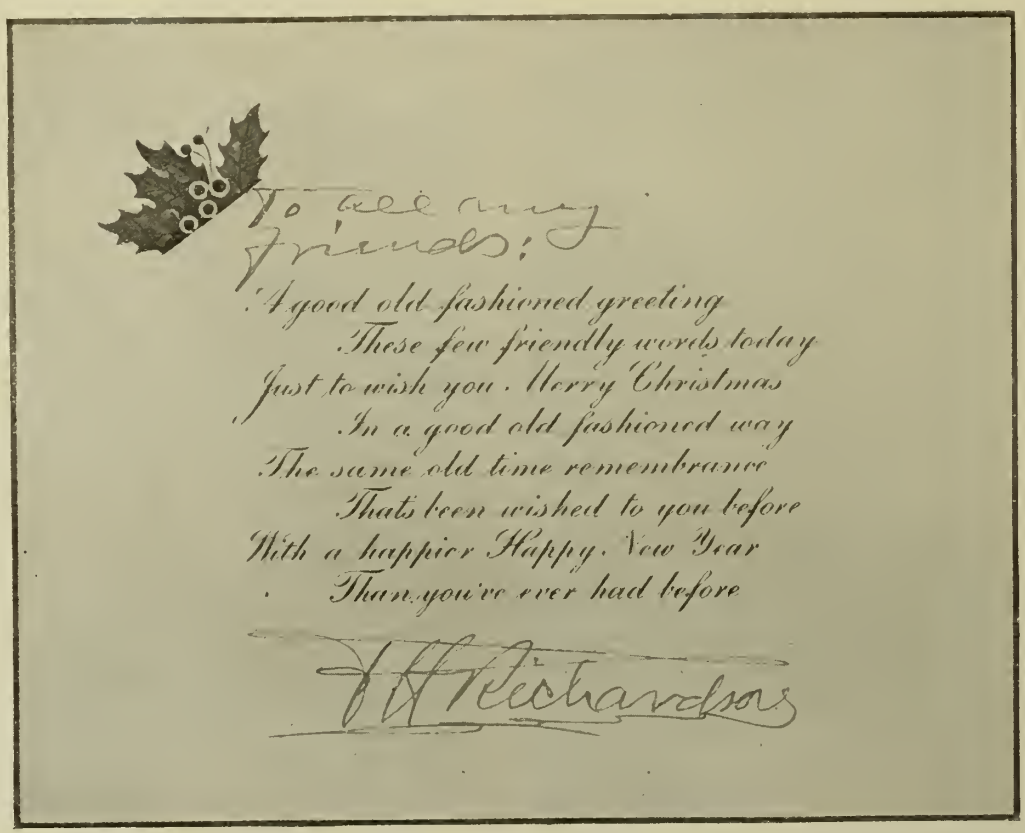
The practical effect of undercut and hooked sprocket teeth is unnecessary wear on the sprocket holes of the film, probable unsteady picture, and to create a tendency for the sprocket teeth to climb out of the sprocket holes, and thus lose one of the loops.

New Automatic Stop.

D. D. Daniels, Richmond, Virginia, has presented to the department an invention of his own, designed to automatically break the motor circuit of motor driven machines, and to automatically cut off the light from the aperture should anything go wrong with the film.

Mr. Daniels does not want the device shown in illustrated form at this time. However, I have carefully examined the device, which is remarkably simple and quite positive in its action. It will instantly operate should anything happen, such as the breaking of the take-up belt to cause slackening of the film between the lower magazine and the lower sprocket, or should the film break or stop by reason of ripped sprockets.

This department has had at least twenty-five inventions of this character presented to it during the past six years, but that of Mr. Daniels' is the "shining example" in the item of extreme simplicity and positiveness of action. We recommend it to the fraternity, and trust that a little later on we will be able to show you through drawings and photographs, exactly how the thing operates.



To all my friends:
A good old fashioned greeting
These few friendly words today
Just to wish you Merry Christmas
In a good old fashioned way
The same old time remembrance
That's been wished to you before
With a happier Happy New Year
Than you've ever had before

Projection in St. Louis.

Verner Hicks, Marion, Illinois, says:

Some weeks ago I visited St. Louis and, knowing that you like to have reports on projection, here is what I saw. On my first visit to the Lyric, a nice little picture house, there was brown light at the bottom of the picture, which kept creeping up until it reached almost midway of the picture, whereupon the operator would feed his carbons. This not only happened once but several times. (Blame it on the manager.—Ed.) I was in this same house again later and found projection to be much better, but they had two breaks in one reel. The pictures were run in something like thirteen or fourteen minutes per reel. (Much too fast.—Ed.) The curtain seemed to be in very bad condition. At the Strand I found better projection, with a fair curtain, and the speed approximately seventeen minutes. The Grand Opera House has one machine, a Simplex, and runs vaudeville and pictures. The machine was located at the back of the upper gallery, and barring the keystone effect, they had a very good picture, though small. At the Grand Central was about the best all round projection I viewed in St. Louis. The light was handled well and the speed was correct. The New Grand Dutchess, formerly the Hippodrome, was running ten reels for five cents. There was some kind of labor trouble and they were using I. B. E. W. men. (Sad commentary on the I. B. E. W.—Ed.) These men were, however, doing good work, except that they ran the pictures in about fifteen minutes, or considerably faster than they should be run; two Power's Six A machines. The men at the St. Charles were producing the goods; projection was excellent. At the Broadway, a little five cent house, the operator himself seems to be all right, but he stood in need of a new machine or a lot of repairs, or at least that is what the picture and racket indicated. Nevertheless after visiting a number of St. Louis theaters and observing the work, I did not find a single one of them where I felt I would like to transfer the picture to my own screen here in Marion. Of course that sounds egotistical, but it is not meant that way. It is just a statement of fact. As far as the projection department is concerned it is the first thing I turn to when the World arrives, and I have been reading it for more than five years.

I hardly think the report can be fairly said to represent the conditions in St. Louis, even broadly, because I don't believe the houses mentioned are representative St. Louis theaters. St. Louis is one of the foremost cities in the country and, while this is the first direct report on the work there, still I have no reason to suppose that projection in that city is not up to the average. The St. Louis men are, I understand, pretty thoroughly organized, and I also understand that conditions are fairly good, but, up to date, outside of letters from individual operators making inquiries concerning trouble, St. Louis has stayed carefully in her hole and has kept the entrance thereto plugged up. Don't know whether they are unable to talk or write, or just too darned lazy to do it. How about it, Kavanaugh?

New Ordinance Introduced.

On December 7th the following ordinance was introduced in the Board of Aldermen, New York City:

"AN ORDINANCE to provide for license fees for license to operate any moving picture apparatus and its connections in The City of New York.

"Be it Ordained by the Board of Aldermen of The City of New York as follows:

"Section 1. Any person applying for a license to operate any moving picture apparatus and its connections in The City of New York shall, at the time of his application, pay to the officer authorized by law to examine the applicant and to issue the license, an examination fee of two dollars and fifty cents ($2.50), and if after such examination a license be granted, the applicant shall pay in addition, upon the issue of such license, a license fee of two dollars and fifty cents ($2.50). The fee of two dollars and fifty cents ($2.50) paid by the applicant before taking the examination shall be retained by the officer authorized by law to conduct examinations of applicants, whether the said applicant passed the examination or not.

"Sec. 2. Every licensed operator of any moving picture apparatus and its connections in The City of New York shall pay an annual renewal fee of one dollar ($1) for each annual renewal of his license.

"Sec. 3. All fees received by the officer authorized by law to conduct examinations of applicants under this ordinance shall be returned to the Comptroller at the end of each month, and by the said Comptroller paid into the City Treasury to the credit of the general fund for the reduction of taxation.

"Sec. 4. This ordinance shall take effect immediately."

This ordinance was prepared by Commissioner Williams of the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity, and was accompanied by a letter, from which the following is an extract:

"Under date of April 6, 1914, I submitted to the President of the Board of Aldermen a proposed ordinance to provide for fees for examination and licensing of moving picture operators. These duties are imposed upon me by Section 429A of the Charter, but no provisions are made therein for cost of the service.

"The proposed ordinance, which I now resubmit, failed of passage, perhaps because its purport was not clearly understood. The work itself is mandatory, and cost the city some $6,000 or $7,000 per annum. We license each year from 1,500 to 1,800 persons. In addition we examine over 1,700 applicants who are rejected because they fail to prove their competency. Many of these are non-residents of the State.

"If we are permitted to collect the fees now proposed we may make our work of examining and licensing self-supporting.

"The operators are quite generally in favor of the plan I propose, and the only serious objection may be expected from those who wish to be at liberty to take examination after examination at the city's expense in the hope of ultimately securing a license."

This department believes that the position of the Commissioner is correct, and that the proposed fees are, under the conditions, reasonable. As has already been pointed out, we would prefer an ordinance which placed all the cost, except the renewal, on the incompetent, but that, I am told, would be impossible to bring about at this time.

No More Books Needed.

J. H. Marchand, Baton Rouge, Louisiana, sends stamps for the last question booklet, and says:

Hurry up the new Handbook! Can you refer me to some good electrical works? I have Hawkins' Guide and the Handbook. Have been operating for almost three years in the same house, after serving one year as assistant. Have charge of an 18 h. p. engine with a 12 K. W. direct connected generator, and I believe I may say that I understand both thoroughly. I think I have been doing what many others have, viz.: letting the other guy answer the questions. The department is great, and the M. P. World a great aid to the whole theater.

Yes, I can recommend lots of works on electricity, but, in my judgment, the Hawkins' books (send and get volume No. 9, just out; price, $1.00) and the third edition of the Handbook, which we are rushing along as fast as we can, will meet mighty nearly all the real requirements of the operator.

From Lincoln, Neb.

T. C. Shipley, Lincoln, Nebraska, writes:

There seems to be a general shaking up down here. Two of the houses have been remodeled and redecorated, and one has installed two modern projectors. Projection is, as a rule, good, and in two of the houses it is excellent. Is it not true that a great many operators overdo the matter of circumferential play in the intermittent sprocket? I have noticed that many have a continually jumping picture, and when asked why they don't tighten their eccentric bushings they reply the sprocket should have circumferential play. I have always kept them set pretty close and have never experienced any wear above the ordinary; also have been perfectly satisfied with the resultant steadiness. I believe an operator cannot pay too close attention to his intermittent movement. I thoroughly appreciate your attitude with reference to high class projection, for not until the operator is classed and looked upon as an expert, who is skilled in his line, will we get really satisfactory conditions and high class results, or the best possible monetary return. The operator should have not only a good working knowledge of his machine, but also of photography, electricity, optics, physics, and mechanics.

Yes, it is entirely possible to overdo the matter of circumferential play in the intermittent sprocket, and doubtless a great many operators do that very thing. The intermittent sprocket should have a LITTLE circumferential play, but only enough so that when the machine is cold you can just barely feel the movement of the sprocket when it is on the lock and you try to rock it with your finger. If you set it up tight when the machine is cold, the expansion of the parts as the machine warms up will produce undue friction. It does not necessarily follow, however, that circumferential play in the intermittent sprocket will produce an unsteady picture, but it "leans in that direction," and will do so if the tension is the least bit slack.

Labor Day Parade.

Local Union No. 173, I. A. T. S. E., Toronto, Ontario, sends in the accompanying photograph of the local taken on Labor Day. The photograph representing the turn-out they made in the parade—a very creditable one. It will be noticed that the banner bears the names of ten members who have exchanged the crank of a moving picture machine for the crank of a machine gun—in other words have gone to war.

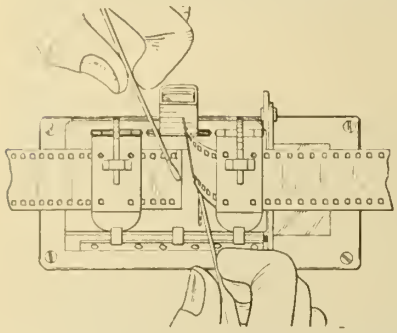
Film Mender.

Mr. Wiliam Kunert, Minneapolis, Minnesota, has presented to the department for examination and test one of his film splicing devices, which is herewith illustrated.



This little device is, I am told, to sell for $5.00. The splicer is entirely practical, and certainly would enable the operator to make a far better splice than is ordinarily made by the fingers. At the end is a knife with which the operator may trim the stub end to the proper length. The scraping is then done over the lower knife, and the whole thing is ready to make the splice just right as to width. Taken altogether the mender is compact, practical, and one which will, I believe, appeal to the operator. Made in quantities, Friend Kunert should be able to sell them very reasonable, and that, in the past, has been the trouble with most film menders—they cost too much money.

Right You Are.

San Francisco, California, requests the department to place him in communication with a dealer who can supply him with high grade lenses, as his manager has instructed him to get the best there is, with cost a secondary consideration. He also says:

> Yes, a piece of inflammable film placed between N.I., using ordinary cement, will hold for several days. With regard to the projection department, why when the public schools, the libraries and colleges close, I then expect to advise closing the department also. We can no more stop work of the kind you are doing than we could stop other educational works, nor should we wish to. Only fools know it all, or think they do and want us to go back to the dark ages method of doing things. Go as far as you like with this letter, as I must deliver the goods or look for a new job, and I surely need the $37.50 per week the manager hands me.

I have not given this brother's name because, whereas the projection department has a great many warm friends in San Francisco, still I am told there are a few, even in that city, who still hold to the narrow-minded view, and object to the dissemination of knowledge pertaining to projection, therefore as I don't wish to involve the correspondent in any possible controversy the name is suppressed, and names from that city will continue to be suppressed, unless I am specifically instructed to use them. I have an abiding admiration for the San Francisco local, because it has "done things." I am glad to have the friendship of such men as Woods, Dolliver, Boyle, Preddy, and many other men of the City of the Golden Gate. I would like to be able to call every single member of Local 162 my friend, and some day I have not the least bit of doubt but that I will be able to.

From the Town a Certain Thing Made Famous.

Identifying the title a little more clearly, from Wisconsin comes the following notes with regard to projection.

> "Majestic," Grand Avenue, runs vaudeville, with one reel of pictures to start. It has excessively oblique projection from the upper gallery which makes objects on the screen appear abnormally tall; also a portion of the picture is out of focus, and a chorus slide must be focussed as the song is sung. The light is good, and the picture steady, though occasionally out of frame too long. Prices, 25, 35, 50 and 75 cents. "Orpheum," Wells and Third streets, runs vaudeville and pictures. Has excessively oblique projection, but a good light and a fairly sharp picture, considering the steep angle. Prices, 10 and 25 cents. The "Alhambra," Grand avenue and Fourth, has oblique but good projection. Uses a string of announcement slides for this and other theaters in the circuit. The screen movements are well timed. Excellent music, consisting of an orchestra and pipe organ. Price 10 cents. Tried 10 and 20 cents a year ago, but soon went back to ten. The "Strand,' Fifth and Grand, has fine projection, with the exception of an occasional racing of the film (five reels in 58 minutes). Good orchestra and pipe organ, although of late the orchestra is somewhat remiss on quick cue, and at times too loud. Admission 10 cents. "Vaudette," on Third, is a long, narrow house with fine projection, and good music; the "Sound Man" is half the show. The "Move to the Wall" theater, beautiful square front with scintillating lights, the finest in the city. Admission 5 cents. "Princess," Third street, opposite the "Vaudette," has the machine square with screen. Projection good and good music, but fan arms in outer row near screen partially obstructs the view. Prices 5 and 10 cents. The "American" is long and narrow, projection being from upper right hand corner, which produces an oblique keystone effect. The results are, nevertheless, good, as is also the music. Five-cent house. The "Toy," Second street, is owned by a Chinaman. It is long, narrow and well ventilated. Has a good, rather sombre oriental effect, and is cozy. Good square projection and music. Operating room ports, however, are vertical, instead of horizontal. Fifty cents from 8.30 P. M., which will soon be changed to 20 cents from noon to 11 P. M. The "Jackson," Jackson street and Ogden avenue, seats 800. Its manager was, for twenty years, manager of the Pabst theater. Good square projection; professional piano player, but somewhat lacking in martial music and quick cuing. Its rotary converter, or whatever it is, can be heard by the audience much of the time. A rather long string of announcement slides. Price, 10 cents. The "Butterfly," Grand avenue, has good projection. Of late there has been an improvement in the light. Good music, orchestra and pipe organ. Front now being renovated. Price 10 cents. The "Theotorium," Grand avenue, is one of the oldest houses, having good projection and good music. Prices 5 and 10 cents. The "Liberty," 27th street, has a very cozy interior for an 800 seat house. It is one of the best managed theaters in the city. Good square projection and a fine three piece lady orchestra. This house has set the pace for many of the M. P.'s in this part of the city. Admission 5 and 10 cents. The "Colonial," 15th street, is also a cozy 800 seat house with good projection, though the light might be somewhat improved. It has good music, but none too much of it, and a little off on cue at times. Prices 5 and 10 cents. The "Comet," on North avenue, has good projection, good music, and is one of the most cozy houses in town. It is well managed. Prices 5 and 10 cents. The "Violet," 24th street, has good projection and good music. Running a race with the Liberty. On the whole there is good light and good projection in all the downtown theaters, but they all race the films many times of late, making marching columns step like puppets. Average time of reel 12 minutes. Later on I will send some commcnts of the theaters on the north and south sides.

The foregoing sounds like a very fair statement of conditions, and aside from the racing of the films it is distinctly creditable to projection in the mysterious city made famous through a liquid process.

Good Conditions.

William Swetzer, Syracuse, New York, says:

> Dear Old Friend of the Operator: It is about a year since I last wrote, but here I am again. Since that time things have improved wonderfully for the Syracuse operators. We are organized, Local 376, M. P. M. O., I. A. T. S. E., and are getting good wages. I believe we are all pleased with our scale, hours of work, etc.—at least I know I am. As a result of the bettered conditions projection is improving, which is but natural, since a fellow takes more interest in his work when he feels he is being treated fairly. Have just overhauled one of our Powers Six machines, and it is running fine. Want to get one of the new Handbooks as soon as they are published. We have our old one yet, but I hope the new one will soon be off the press. Don't see any answers to the questions from Syracuse, so I see I will have to get busy.

Go as far as you like brother—with regard to the questions, I mean. I am very glad indeed to know that Syracuse operators are enjoying good conditions. Was up there two or three months ago, but did not have time to get around much. My compliments to the members of your local. If at any time the department can help them they have but to let the fact be known. Come again when the spirit moves you. We are rushing the book as fast as possible. It's going to be SOME book.

Union School.

M. Nosti, Tampa, Florida, sends in card which is self-explanatory. Many thanks for the editor's name on card No. 1. On the back of the card is the following notation, written in ink: "Lessons from Mr. F. H. Richardson's Motion Picture Handbook and the Hawkins' Electrical Guide."

This is a good stunt—the union school, I mean. Presumably the punch marks represent attendance.

Brother Nosti asks: "Can you recommend other books besides the Handbook and Hawkins' Guides? Almost every member of our local is equipped with both these, and are ready to buy others if you can recommend them."

No, I cannot. I have looked the field over very, very thoroughly, and while it may sound egotistical, still I don't mean it that way, but merely as a statement of fact that the third edition of my Handbook and the Hawkins' Electrical Guide cover the field of the moving picture machine operator's work very thoroughly.

In addition to this, "Optic Projection," by Simon Henry and Henry Phelps Gage, is an excellent work, in that it contains a great deal that is of more than passing interest, but it is not a work which would help the operator to any considerable extent in his practical every day work.

Many Thanks.

We are in receipt of a fine large package of pecans and the following letter from Sherman, Texas:

> The operators of this city (Local No. 280, I. A. T. S. E.) have sent you a dose of pecans by Wells, Fargo Express. Get the Mrs. to build you a good fire in the fireplace and present you with a little pecan cracker (Whoops my dear! no fireplaces in N. Y.—Ed.), and rest easy for a few cool evenings thinking of the boys of 280, who are all waiting for the new edition of the Handbook. Everything is progressing nicely with the men of Sherman, being 100 per cent organized. We wish both yourself and the department the greatest possible measure of success.

> Merle Willson, Queen Theatre,
> E. L. Darnell, Topic Theatre,
> Ray Smith, Lyric Theatre,
> O. J. Parker, Gem Theatre,
> James Shipton, Jr.
> Eugene Key.

For all of which accept the editor's most sincere thanks. The pecans are good, but what is worth to me at least a thousand times as much is the spirit of good will, friendship, and appreciation which prompted the men of local 280 to send them. You boys don't and can't know or realize how hard I have worked, or the opposition and even abuse I have withstood in the effort to try to benefit the craft, but such things as this go far toward re-establishing my faith in the common sense and good judgment of operators as a whole.

As to the new Handbook I am mighty proud of it, but I fear it is going to cost considerable more than I wanted it to. The manuscript and cuts begin to look like eight hundred pages at the very least, and I don't see where I can cut anything down without doing injury to the work as a whole, and that I won't do. However, I think even the most skeptical will have to admit that, if it takes from eight to nine hundred pages to cover the subject of projection and the things allied thereto, then projection really must be quite some proposition after all.

What Nonsense!

From the Sterling Camera & Film Company, New York City, comes a letter signed "Hasco." It reads as follows:

> In a recent issue of your department the question of speed of the projection machine was referred to by an operator. All modern projectors are geared for standard action, and nothing has ever been said about variation of speed. (Guess you don't read the department or the Handbook very closely.—Ed.) There is and always has been a simplified standard of speed regulated by the action of the hand crank, but the motor arrangements are adjusted for almost any speed. All pictures are made to be projected at this standard speed, there being no change of speed for action at any time, no matter what the action of the picture may call for. The motion picture camerman judges the action of the subject by varying the speed of his camera so that when projected to the screen at standard speed perfect results are developed. The average speed of the camerman when photographing is 104 turns of the camera crank to 52 feet of negative, two turns of the camera handle being equal to one foot of film, or eight pictures to the turn. Perhaps you have noticed on the screen the rapid movements of some of the objects in a comedy when people almost fly. The speed of the projection machine has nothing to do with this, it being supposed to be run at standard speed. There seems to be too much of this projection machine operator trying to regulate the action of the picture, and in many cases they completely spoil the effect. Let the projection machine operator study and stick to the profession of projection, and use standard speed and the picture will always screen all right. If the light, focus, lenses, and condensers are O. K. there will be less flicker.

Well, I have given this letter space, although it is sadly jumbled, and written by one who, however well acquainted with camera practice, has a world of things yet to learn about projection. I am not going to comment, but leave Friend "Hasco" to the tender mercies of our correspondents, who will, I am sure, "fix his clock" for him good and plenty. I will, however, say that the operator is very much "sticking to the profession of projection" when he regulates speed, and thus at least, to some extent, helping to eliminate the mistakes of cameramen.

Inspect Your Apparatus.

J. Schach, Jr., Whiting, Indiana, says:

> Referring to inspection of operating room apparatus, ambitious and energetic operators realize it is important, but there are, nevertheless, others who apparently work under the impression that a little oil now and then will do, until finally the apparatus bucks. Recently, I made a test of the electrical equipment in an operating room and found the leads of one lamp to be heating, while those to the other, though of the same size and carrying the same amperage, were not. This heating was later found to be due to a loose connection at the auto-transformer. After tightening the connection the leads no longer showed excessive heating. This is only one case where inspection could have prevented the trouble. I believe every operator should make periodical inspection of all his apparatus. If this were done break-downs would be reduced, and the efficiency of the service greatly increased. I think anything you can suggest along these lines will be appreciated by operators.

Well, Brother Schach, I have suggested this same thing to these many times, but once more probably won't do any harm. Certainly operators should look their apparatus over carefully at stated periods, and those periods ought to be not longer than twice a week where the show runs from eight to ten hours a day. I was rather amused at your statement about operators not using enough oil. Possibly some of them don't, but I think for every one who does not, there are six who use something like five times too much. There is a happy medium in the matter of oil, and that medium is one drop on a projector bearing, and that drop repeated (assuming good oil to be used) for about every three hours' run.

What Would I Suggest?

Fred Smith, Toledo, Ohio, says:

> Using 60 amperes A.C. through Fort Wayne compensarc; 3¼ Bio carbons; 5¾ E.F. objective lens (makers name not on it) and two 7½-inch plano-convex condensers; 18 inches between front condenser and film. My conditions do not jibe with Table No. 1 in October 16th issue, because the effective opening in my objective is 1⅜ inches, and its back focus 4 11/32 inches. What would you suggest in a case of this kind? I have one of your Handbooks; it has been a great help to me.

Why, my brother, the answer is obvious. Put a sheet of white paper inside the mechanism 4 11/32 inches from the aperture and see how much of the light that little sawed-off lens is getting. That will be your answer—an objective of larger diameter and I would suggest not less than 2¾ and preferably a 2½-inch opening, which latter the Gundlach-Manhattan 5¾ E.F. lens has—I am not sure about the Bosch & Lomb. If the old Handbook has been a great help to you, the new one ought to help you five times as much.

Coghlan an Operator.

Joseph Coghlan, a member of the New York City Examining Board, who does a large share of the actual examining of candidates for licensing, is an electrician. I have just discovered, however, much to my surprise, that not only is Friend Coghlan an electrician, but he is also a moving picture machine operator, being first licensed in New York City in the year 1908—even before the days of the license card. His original license was written on the Department letterhead and signed and sealed by Mr. Wynkoop. It bears the date November 5, 1908. Mr. Coghlan was at that time employed by the Cameraphone Company, demonstrating their machines. He has, as I understand it, done some operating in theatres.

Motion Picture Photography for the Operator.

MOST projection operators are, I believe, interested in one way or another in motion picture photography. I have met many operators who were very much interested in photography and the work they have shown me has almost invariably been of a very high grade. Especially fine has been some of the lantern slides which I have seen turned out by operators who are amateur photographers. Many of them were artistically toned or colored by the men themselves, and generally depicted places or events of local interest, which they had exhibited in their shows as added attractions.

Many operators have purchased motion picture cameras for themselves and have added materially to their income by filming local events for exhibition in the theatres of their home town. All of the topical or news weeklies are ready to purchase negative films of subjects of national interest and, while we do not all live in localities where pictures of such events may be obtained, except at very long intervals, yet many ingenious camera men have discovered common things in their own territory which, when carefully taken and titled proved of general interest and saleable to some of the big producing concerns. Beautiful scenery and places of historic interest are in greater demand than ever before. The European war has cut down the supply of available foreign scenic stuff and awakened an interest in the American public to the beauties of its own country. "See America First" is a slogan that should stir a thrill of real patriotism in the breast of every American citizen, and the motion picture is pre-eminently the medium of showing to the great masses of our people who, for one reason or another, are not able to travel, the almost unknown grandeur of our own United States.

Even those people who have had the good fortune to see the wonders of America enjoy the many memories recalled to them by a picture of their past travels.

Motion picture cameras are costly pieces of apparatus, it is true, but the operator who wishes to begin modestly and is willing to start with a camera that, while being a long ways from a professional studio camera, is still capable of doing remarkably good work, can purchase one of those amateur instruments for less than a hundred dollars.

It is not necessary that the owner of a camera should develop and print his own pictures, although, doubtless, many of the ingeniously and mechanically inclined among you would be highly interested in doing your own work. If you can take and finish pictures with an ordinary camera, you can do the same with a motion camera.

You may say that the motion camera is a mystery to you and that you do not know where to get the necessary instructions. If you are a conscientious operator, you must read some of the leading trade periodicals. They carry advertisements of motion picture cameras and apparatus, and the Moving Picture World publishes each week this page devoted to motion picture photography. That department is devoted to the advancement of the art of cinematography and the instruction of its devotees. It is not intended as a school to train aspirants for camera jobs; the field of work for professional camera operators is a very small one, comparatively, and calls for men of highly specialized training and unusual ability. But there is, however, a big and broadening field for local talent that need not in any way conflict with that of the strictly professional studio camera man.

The enormous development of the motion picture industry has aroused the interest of millions of people and there are thousands of subjects of purely local or sectional interest which, while they are entirely outside the range of work of the big studio or factory, yet would be a profitable employment for the man who has the preliminary training that the motion picture operator must have acquired.

If your town has an event such as a celebration, a cornerstone laying, a football or baseball game, anything that brings out masses of people to see and hear men of great local importance, arrange to take a picture and let the local theater use it for a stated sum, or, better yet, in certain instances, play it for a certain percentage of the box office receipts. Get as many of the local people in the picture as possible; most of them will come to see how they look on the screen.

Some camera owners have been very successful in making arrangements with local papers to conduct a popularity contest, after which the winners were used in staging a little play in local surroundings. The interest aroused by the advertising will bring out a large crowd to see the picture on the screen, and a local theatre could well afford to charge a small aditional entrance fee and give a good percentage of the box office receipts for the privilege of running it. Often the local theatre and local paper can be induced to work in conjunction on a contest of this kind, stimulating interest by throwing slide pictures of the contestants and the progress of the voting upon the screen.

Another source of revenue from a picture of this kind is that of advertising various merchants and industries, by using them for backgrounds in the story and charging a reasonable price for this publicity.

For work of this kind it is, of course, almost imperative that you use a camera of professional grade.

There are many manufacturers who would like to have motion pictures made of their factory processes, or of the workings of their products. The Ford and Studebaker automobile factories have had motion pictures made of the manufacture of their cars, showing all the details of manufacture from the raw ore to the finished car. The Heinze pickle people have had pictures made, showing the sanitary methods of making and packing preserves and the final consumption of the goods by the consumer. Many industrial processes of general interest have been regularly released by the big manufacturers of motion pictures, such as big gun forging and machining and testing; the manufacture of fountain pens; safety devices used by large corporations for protection of their workmen; the manufacture of salt, borax, soap and dozens of other staple articles; mining of coal, iron, copper, zinc, lead, etc.; engineering projects, such as dams, spillways, power plants, viaducts, canals, bridges, etc.

There are dozens of commercial studios where negative developing and printing are done at reasonable rates. The ambitious amateur can construct much of his own apparatus if he so wishes. He can fix his camera so that he can use it for a printing machine, or he can make a printer from an old projection head. His tanks, racks, drying drums or frames can all be made at home by anyone who is handy with carpenter tools. I even know of two or three experienced operators who were good mechanics who made their own cameras.

These men, of course, were exceptions, and, while I would not as a rule advise everyone to try to make his own camera, I don't see why any operator who is a good mechanic and who knows something of photography should not derive a lot of satisfaction and have a lot of fun out of the construction of his first camera.

An old projection head is generally too much worn and much too heavy to use for the mechanism of a camera. Besides the weight and difficulty of making over and changing the shutter, etc., the Maltese cross of Geneva movement is not suitable for the production of negatives.

In making industrial films, bear in mind that they must be of general interest unless they are being made to show only the parties interested in that particular industry. Show the interesting points, its magnitude, its great stocks of raw material, the various processes of manufacture and, most important of all, the proper use and application of the products. Get all the action possible. Don't show one thing or scene for more than fifteen or twenty feet—ten feet is sometimes enough. Do not show the same process more than once, unless from a different viewpoint to explain it more clearly, and avoid all monotonous repetitions. Don't let the manufacturer mislead you as to what is interesting. His business can never be as interesting to another as to himself.

I know two young fellows whose hobbies are scientific; one is interested in small animals and the other in insects—one lives in California and the other in a small town in New York State. Each of them has fitted up for himself a small studio, and they are both turning out negatives on the subjects embraced by their pet hobbies and selling them to big companies to be used to fill out split reels or for educational subjects.

If you like photography and mechanics, go in for motion picture photography. You may not make any money out of it, because you've a lot to learn and quite a bit of money to put out first, but I'll guarantee full returns in experience and satisfaction in self-achievement.

Lens and Shutter Questions.

W. B., Springfield, Ill., writes:

> "(1) I understand that in a recent issue of the 'World' it stated that all cameras, regardless of the make of lens, will give the same exposure when using the 'F' system of stops. Please explain if this is not a mistake.
> "(2) Also explain the method used or how a shutter can be measured; that is, whether same be what is called a 50 per cent. shutter opening or of a different size or speed."

1. Any lens used at the same F number and the same shutter speed will give the same exposure.

2. Most cinematograph camera shutters are circular in form. A circle is 360 degrees; the opening in the shutter expressed in degrees will give the per cent. shutter opening when divided by 360. A half opening shutter is 180 degrees open; 180/360 equals .50, or 50 per cent. shutter opening.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by S. M. BERG.

A Word of Warning

By S. M. Berg.

IT WOULD indeed be fitting at this time to approach a topic that is without doubt of utmost concern to a great many musicians who are earning their livelihood by playing for the film. It is entirely safe to say that the majority of these are unaware of the fact that they have been "marking time" since they entered into their present profession and that the opportunities which are theirs for the taking will have ceased to exist unless they break away from the lines of least resistance which they have been following. It is to this majority that a word of warning must be directed.

Conditions in the United States for the past five years have not been very good for musicians in general and many turned in desperation to motion pictures, realizing that, although the salaries were small and the hours of service long, the positions were fairly steady. Many of the foremost orchestra directors playing in the largest motion picture theaters of today are from those pioneers who years ago swallowed their pride and took up a work they had previously despised, bringing to the picture some of that experience learned in the hard school of the olden melodramatic days. It is not to such men that this warning is addressed, however, but to the younger generation.

Music for the motion picture has opened up an enormous field of opportunities to the musician who will attempt to adapt himself to its requirements as he is not limited to one character of composition, such as might be the case were he playing at some mediocre restaurant, cafe or dance hall. In a musical score lately prepared for an important feature film there was incorporated part of the Dvorak New World Symphony, a movement from Tschaikowsky's Pathetique Symphony, Il Guarany overture by Gomez, etc. For the successful execution of such a work qualified musicians must be engaged or the result will be disastrous. How many musicians at present leave their instruments at the theater at the end of the day's work or when they do carry them home never open the case until they return next day? Let these men be warned. The day is past when a person just able to touch an instrument can find a job in a picture theater orchestra. Continued study will be needed on his part to fit himself for this work, and if he will concentrate his efforts no difficulty will be found in securing a satisfactory position. Musicians must realize that in this day of mechanical players and reproducing instruments everyone is acquiring a knowledge of the highest grade of musical compositions and how they should be interpreted. In every audience there is always a large percentage of patrons that are acquainted with some of the numbers played and will express their dissatisfaction if they are crudely rendered.

There has been lately released a film dramatization of "Carmen," for which the operatic score of Bizet was rearranged and adapted. But when a certain theatre's orchestra, which we shall not name, attempted to perform the same they found it was beyond them, and something easier, but inappropriate, had to be substituted. The result was, of course, that the entire orchestra was discharged, though this combination played certain music with which they were acquainted fairly well and with expression and at times handled a picture with some taste. Proving conclusively they had experience in the work, and if they but had the forethought to attempt to improve themselves technically, their positions would have been permanent and secure. No theater manager or proprietor desires to make changes in his staff, as he appreciates the difficulty in breaking in new men.

Just as the architect of today incorporates the artistic ideals of the ancient Greeks and Romans in his work to suit modern taste and requirements so must the musician who would keep in the vanguard of the rapidly-rising standards of moving pictures study to become proficient in the intelligent interpretation of the works of the masters.

Musical Setting for "Rosemary"

Released December 20 by the Metro Pictures Corporation—Suggestions Prepared by S. M. Berg by Special Arrangements with G. Schirmer, Inc., Music Publishers, New York.

This "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is intended as a partial solution of the problem of what to play for the picture and to assist in overcoming that chaotic condition encountered when the film is not available until almost the hour of showing, resulting in the first performance being a mere rehearsal.

For the benefit of those readers of the Moving Picture World who are exhibitors of Metro films, the following suggestions for an accompaniment to "Rosemary" were prepared by the photoplay department of the New York music publishing house of G. Schirmer, Inc. This advance publication will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film story he is to portray with his orchestra.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will assist the leader in anticipating the various cues, which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or by a described action (marked D).

Further inquiries concerning any phase of the work of the orchestra leader in a photoplay theater may be addressed to the Moving Picture World, and the answers of Mr. Berg will appear in a Question and Answer Department, which will be a regular feature of our Music Page.

Dorothy Cruikshank is secretly in love with Captain Westwood, so they plan to elope, but get caught in a storm and take shelter with Sir Jasper Thorndike, who falls in love with Dorothy. Realizing their disparity in age, he gains the parents' consent to the eloping couple's marriage. Years later, Sir Jasper finds in an Inn a page of Dorothy's diary, and a sprig of Rosemary, which he had secreted there long before. The period of action is old English. A pleasing love story with several scenes of comedy.

Note particularly: Two comedy struggles between two aggressive old men at 8¼ and 36. Storm scenes from 17¼ to 29¾. Coach Galop at 47¾. Fire scenes from 62¼ to 66½.

Scheduled Time: five reels (about 4,900 feet), 72¼ minutes.

The theme selected is "Rosemary for Remembrance"—Lady Arthur Hill.

Time.		Sub-title or Descriptive Cues.	Music.
O	D	Opening. (Piano only).	Rosemary for Remembrance. (Ballad) (Theme) —Lady Arthur Hill

72½	T	The End.

Note: For the convenience of readers of the Moving Picture World a price-list of the numbers suggested in the above cue-sheet, is to be found in G. Schirmer's advertisement on page 2465.

New Publications and Their Adaptabilities to the Screen.

"Puccliniana," by Ricordi :—A collection of gems from the operas of Giacomo Puccini, including La Tosca, La Boheme, Manon Lescaut, Girl of the Golden West, etc., so arranged that it can be played in two parts. Could be used in a neutral dramatic picture.

"Whispering Willows," by Victor Herbert (Witmark) :—A pleasing intermezzo in Victor Herbert's best style. Tempo: moderato grazioso. Very useful for society scenes or light action.

"Estelleta," by Victor Herbert (Witmark) :—Valse pathetique. Particularly useful if played in slow tempo for dramatic situations in domestic dramas.

"The Tempest," by Lake (Carl Fischer) :—A descriptive fantasia depicting the approach and bursting of a storm, with occasional lulls and varying moods, finally a terrific storm in all its glory.

"Trot de Cavalcrie," by Anton Rubinstein (Carl Fischer) :—As the title implies, it is useful for cavalry or trot military scenes, etc. Is arranged in the form of patrol. Also has a Coda Fine. Tempo: Allegro Vivace.

"Twilight," by Theo. Bendix (Chappell) :—A reverie. A pleasing composition arranged for violin, cello or ensemble. Tempo: Allegretto agitato, changing to valse lento poetico.

"Arabian Screnade," by Otto Langey (Schirmer) :—A young Arab singing a serenade to his lady-love is interrupted by the sounds of a Turkish band in the distance. He resumes; his adored one occasionally joins the song. The band passes the house. The sounds die away and also the serenade in the evening breeze. Tempo: Allegretto quasi andantino.

"Meditation," by Drumm (Schirmer) :—Together with Arabian Serenade, a splendid pathetic number well arranged for small combination. Tempo: Andante cantable, Larghetto and finishing andante appaissionato.

"Intermezzo," by Arensky (Schirmer) :—Well suited for fast action or leading to hurry or agitato, also adapted for patrol. Tempo: Presto.

"Pagliacci," by Leoncavallo (Schirmer) :—A well selected Grand Fantasia from the opera, arranged by Ross Jungnickel, playable for any combination from violin and piano to grand orchestra. So adapted that any theme can be played separately.

MATTY ROUBERT, BOY STAR OF "THE WAIF."

If the right kind of a start means anything, Matty Roubert, the nine-year-old boy who is featured in "The Waif," the Aurora Film Plays Corporation's first offering in the motion picture field, should go far. Matty got his start in the same play that so many famous actors look back to as the one which gave them their first opportunity. Matty, at the mature age of two, made his bow to motion picture audiences through the medium of "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

According to those who recall that Vitagraph three-reeler, it was some "Uncle Tom's Cabin," and those who made up the cast have gone far in their chosen field. Fred Thompson directed the production; Billy Philips played Uncle Tom; Adele De Garde played Little Eva; Taft Johnson was Simon Legree; Mary Fuller played Eliza, and Matty had the part of Little Harry. Others in the cast were Carlyle Blackwell and Julia Swayne Gordon.

Since leaving the Vitagraph players, Matty Roubert has made his best bid for fame as the "Universal Boy." In this serial, which ran for twenty-two installments, Matty met all the notables, from the President down, and the serial itself is said to have attracted greater crowds than any other single-reel installment feature ever released.

DANIELS SIGNS WITH VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

Frank Daniels, for years one of the foremost comic opera comedians on the American stage, has signed a contract to appear exclusively in motion pictures for the Vitagraph Company of America. Arrangements have been completed to make the best use of Mr. Daniels' versatile talents as a fun-maker, and to present him before the motion picture public in vehicles that are expected to win for him in motion pictures the reputation he now enjoys in comic opera.

A series of shorter comedies for the comedian have been selected by the Vitagraph Company, for the purpose of letting the public see Daniels more often and in a greater variety of humorous situations. He will be under the direction of C. Jay Williams, one of the foremost comedy directors of the Vitagraph, who directed Daniels' two other films. Mr. Williams understands the capabilities of the comedians and is well able to bring forth the high lights in the actor's equipment of funmaking.

MOTHER OF GEORGE MILLER DEAD.

Mamie Conway (Mrs. George D. Melville), very well known some years back as leading lady with "Babes in the Woods," "Twelve Temptations" and the famous Salvini, was stricken with heart trouble Tuesday while on the way to the theater, and died a short time later at the Polyclinic Hospital. Miss Conway in private life was the wife of George D. Melville, formerly equestrian director of the Hippodrome, and the mother of George Miller who looks after city publicity for Pathe.

Heavy Work for Two Stars

Thornton Fisher Does His Best with Two Heavy Problems Which Bother Essanay Players.

By Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN CASE you don't believe it, the wild-eyed young woman sitting in the box car in the accompanying cut is Edna Mayo, trying to relieve a weighty situation after a manner suggested by the artist. The young lady has lost none of her piquant charm at the pen hand of Mr. Fisher, but she has, as you will see, assumed the expression of a hunted fawn, and there's a reason.

Between New York and Chicago stretch several hundreds of miles. At one end of the road lies the Essanay studio and the director endeavoring to produce a "second to none" film edition of "The Strange Case of Mary Page," while at the other end is Miss Mayo's modiste demanding the young actress's appearance at the Lucile establishment every Friday, come what may. Lady Duff Gordon "waits for no man" or woman either; and so Director J. Charles Haydon from Thursday until Monday of each week for the next month must be content to cultivate the virtue of patience, while his leading woman and the New York modiste confer at the far end of the trail as to the style and fit of the gowns to be worn in this particular production. And what of Miss Mayo? The problem would be impossible save for the clever suggestion herein illustrated and conceived by Thornton Fisher.

Problem No. 2 is of even a more aggressive type and bids fair to baffle all the scientific remedies that in the accompanying illustration sometimes in tears and sometimes in wonderment confess their inability to be of use to the suffering leading man whose name you will easily guess, even through the haggard lines of worry.

Why such a task should be imposed upon the "Little Colonel" no one knows, except perhaps the author who designed that in the same production that occasions the wild and woolly chase for Miss Mayo he should appear in the first part of the play with the smooth lip of a bashful boy, with a "presto" change to a full-fledged and mustached attorney in the latter part of the story. Of course, there is always the artificial to be resorted to; but Henry Walthal scowls at the idea, and wagers against heavy odds to have the real article in harness two weeks after he has stepped from the threshold of budding manhood.

CANADIAN EXHIBITORS VISIT UNIVERSAL CITY.

Thomas Morris and W. J. Liscombe, owners of theaters in Toronto, Canada, spent several days at Universal City recently and were greatly interested in the making of the pictures.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE.

Quality of Program, Not Prizes, Must Count.

IN THE ISSUE of "V-L-S-E Pals" of December 11, edited by Tom North, the live-wire manager of the Seattle office of V-L-S-E, Inc., I have noticed on page 6 that the old "country store" plan of increasing attendance (in a new garb) is advocated by Manager Maysmith, of the Columbia theater, Victoria, B. C. Mr. Maysmith explains his plan as follows:

> Instead of having the usual drawing of numbers and using coupon tickets, we insert forty orders in the programs which are handed out at the door and those securing the winning orders come on the stage to get their prizes.
> The advantage of this system is that it does away with the lottery, saves time and does not keep the people in the house thinking their number may be called at the second show. Otherwise the store is the same as usual.

This is a copy of the order:

> The management of the Columbia theater will present to the bearer of this order one article from their Country Store. Good only on date of .....

Then follows the name of the theater and underneath the name of the manager.

It has now been several years since it was necessary to stamp such a plan as the foregoing as being distinctly against the standing of the moving picture. No legitimate amusement attraction requires to be bolstered up by such methods; and surely least of all does the V-L-S-E product need such means to commend it to patrons of moving picture theaters. To me such methods of securing business are degrading to moving picture entertainment, which at the present time is being offered at admission prices far below its real value.

Such expedients as this, and the "Night Program" scheme, also advocated by Manager Maysmith in the same issue of "Pals," should be severely left alone. They are undignified and unnecessary, since "quality" of the program is the only thing that counts for permanence. Besides, this method of competition never fails to bring its just aftermath. No matter how good the program may be, when such offers are made intelligent patrons they immediately begin to suspect that all is not right.

If the exhibitor has such money to spare, let him by all means put it into his service. That is the best place to invest it, as has been proven thousands of times.

Exhibitions of "Non-Inflammable" Films in Churches, Schools and Homes by Unlicensed Operators in Chicago Barred by Ordinance.

An ordinance intended to permit the use of non-inflammable films in churches, schools and homes in Chicago was shelved by the City Council Buildings Committee on Friday, December 17. The measure was defeated by a vote of 8 to 4.

Organized labor took a hand in the discussion of the proposed ordinance, in the persons of John Fitzpatrick, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor, and E. D. Miller, business agent for the Chicago Moving Picture Machine Operators, Local 110, I. A. T. S. E.

It was argued against the ordinance that the "non-inflammable" films are not non-inflammable, and that they would not bear using for any extended length of time as they are non-pliant and break easily. On the other side, ministers asserted that tests had shown them perfectly safe, and advocated that their use by unlicensed operators should be allowed, to further the cause of education.

Alderman Dempsey moved an amendment to the ordinance to strike out "homes" as a place where such films could be used. It was held that moving pictures at home would tend to ruin the business of some of the smaller theaters. The amendment was carried by a vote of 6 to 5.

John C. McDonnell, chief of the Fire Prevention Bureau, voiced the opinion that the "non-inflammable" films were safe, and suggested that hotels should be added to the list of places mentioned in the proposed ordinance, since they are now violating the present ordinance, as they are not employing licensed operators nor using properly constructed booths.

Business Agent Miller said that the "non-inflammable" films were expensive in the first place and would become still more expensive, because of their short life. He also made the statement that on account of this churches and schools would soon be slipping in the regular inflammable films in their shows.

The Rev. Mr. Williams then said that something must be done to make possible the use of films for educational purposes. He stated that he represented an organization of over 500,000 people.

Under the ordinance just passed only licensed operators will be permitted to operate in Chicago.

Universal Commends New "Bluebird" Brand of Features.

On Friday evening, December 17, in the Hotel Sherman, I chanced to meet M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Universal exchanges; Rex O. Lawhead, manager of the Universal booking offices in Chicago; C. R. Plough, manager of Laemmle's Anti-Trust Film Exchange, this city, and R. C. Cropper, manager of the Universal office in Kansas City.

I learned from Mr. Hoffman that he left New York December 10 on a ten-day tour of Canada and of eastern and middle western territory in the United States in the interests of a new brand of films that will be known as "Bluebird" photoplays. The object of his trip was to secure the co-operation of Universal booking offices with the offices of the "Bluebird" product, which are being established throughout the territory mentioned and all over the United States.

Mr. Hoffman was careful to explain that the "Bluebird" product, while backed by the directors of the Universal, is not a Universal organization. The policy of Universal in co-operating with the producers of "Bluebird" films is only carrying out President Laemmle's expressed wish to "Give the exhibitor what he wants."

Mr. Hoffman felt disinclined to give further particulars at the present time, as the first release of "Bluebird" films will not be made until Monday, January 24. He stated that the "Bluebird" product will consist of strictly high-class dramatic features, of five reels or more.

Mr. Hoffman left for Buffalo, on his way to New York, on Saturday, December 18.

"The Birth of a Nation" Will Close Its Chicago Run on January 15, After 452 Presentations.

In the suit brought by the Epoch Producing Corporation against the Mayor of Chicago, Chief of Police Healy and Second Deputy Funkhouser for a writ of mandamus to permit the showing of "The Birth of a Nation" to minors, Judge Foell of the Superior Court held that the film owners' petition was in error and dismissed the suit; but he granted permission to the film owners' counsel to file an amended petition for unrestricted privileges.

Charles J. Trainor, counsel for the film owners, informed the court that a new petition would be ready on the following day.

Clifford G. Roe, Assistant Corporation Counsel, whose contention was upheld by the court's ruling, stated that he believed the city would be able to score a decisive victory at the next hearing.

The 400th presentation in Chicago of "The Birth of a Nation" will be given at Monday's matinee, December 20, and Manager George Bowles will commemorate the event by giving handsome souvenirs to all who attend. The souvenir is an artistic bas-relief plaque of the head of Abraham Lincoln, with the inscription "The Great Heart."

It has been announced by the management of the great spectacle that the Chicago run will end Saturday night, January 15, 1916, after 452 consecutive presentations.

Who Are These Offending Exhibitors?

The Chicago Tribune exposed last week a crooked game in which land promoters, collaborating with certain owners of moving picture theaters in outlying districts, are fleecing, or trying to fleece, unwary investors.

The scheme is the "lot" game, in which the prospective property owner is "presented" with a lot—away up somewhere in the wilds of Michigan, almost inaccessible. But the pleased recipient of the gift lot finds in the end that he pays for it many times over. "The little pleasure ground," as the lot is tenderly called by the wily promoters of the scheme, would cost more to pay it a visit than any of the purchasers could afford to spend during a vacation.

A number of these land companies are now flourishing in Chicago, but the Michigan Developing Company, through its exploitations, has brought more inquiries and complaints to the Tribune than any of the others.

At quite a number of outlying moving picture houses it is charged that when the plot is thickest the following announcement is flashed on the screen with great frequency:

"We are distributing valuable lots. Preserve your coupon. You may be a winner."

The coupon is a neatly printed pasteboard, which is procured at the box office, and the holder is instructed to fill out the blanks with his name and address. The following day an agent visits the holder's address and informs him or her that the coupon has won "a valuable lot," and all that is required in order to be given possession is to present the coupon at the company's office in the Reaper Block. In the bliss created by his good luck the coupon holder is pressed by the agent to buy the "adjoining lot" at a bargain of $25 or $50.

Three obliging gentlemen in the Reaper Block form the land company, which, by the way, is not incorporated. As the lucky coupon holder comes into their presence he is congratulated on having won a "beautiful summer resort." They tell him that the land is his, and then show artfully that a string is tied to the valuable lot and the beautiful summer resort, in this fashion:

"Now, we have gone to a vast expense in surveying and platting the property, making out and recording the deeds and completing the road work, but the operating expenses—rent for this suite of offices, etc.—are heavy and we are obliged to ask you to contribute your share of the actual cost. The lots that we give you are all your own for a small sum of $8.60. You pay $1.60 down and the balance in installments of $1 each, or you can pay the whole $8.60 down, or within ten days."

The offending exhibitors in this fleecing game are a disgrace to the moving picture business. It is to the interest of every reputable, clean man in the exhibiting end of the business that the offenders be exposed. They have evidently nothing to lose except their freedom, and that is in imminent danger, if they persist in their practices.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Plans have been completed at the Chicago offices of the Selig Polyscope Company for the release of "The Ne'er Do Well" early in the new year. The production is approximately ten reels in length, and it is expected that it will prove a strong successor to "The Spoilers." "The Ne'er Do Well," like "The Spoilers," will be released on the state rights plan. H. C. Hoagland, assistant general manager of the Selig Polyscope Company, advises me that the sales are already under way. Sol. Lesser has purchased the rights for California, Nevada and New Mexico, and there is a probability that he will increase his territory. M. Rosenberg has purchased the rights for Washington, Oregon, Montana and Idaho. It will be remembered that William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, escorted a company of his players to the Panama Canal Zone some time ago, where scenes giving the proper atmosphere to the story were filmed. Kathlyn Williams, Wheeler Oakman and about nine other actors and actresses from the Los Angeles studios engaged in the Zone scenes. It will be remembered that the stories of "The Ne'er Do Well" and "The Spoilers" were written by Rex Beach, and those who have read both stories have little choice as to which is the better. Colin Campbell, who directed "The Spoilers," has also directed "The Ne'er Do Well," and many of the favorite players in the former appear in prominent roles in the latter.

At the last regular meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Illinois, held Friday, December 10, in their hall in the Masonic Temple, this city, the following resolution was unanimously passed: "That the motion picture exhibitors of Illinois desire to go on record as unalterably opposed to the contemplated charge of tax on gross receipts of moving picture theaters." To me it seems unjust that the tax should be made on the basis mentioned, as the gross receipts would have to be guessed at. No matter how honest an exhibitor might be, he would be liable to state figures that would be either above or below the actual receipts for the year under consideration. It is obvious that the better plan would be to base the tax on the number of seats and on the admission prices charged.

Richard C. Travers, Essanay's popular leading man, has decided to go into the mountains of Canada for the holidays. He has given out that he will either bring back a mountain sheep as a trophy, or stay there a year. Mr. Travers has tried several times before to perform this difficult feat, but this year he is starting out with a good chance of success. A personal friend of Mr. Travers, a well-known guide in western Canada, wrote him recently that he has located two sheep, and Mr. Travers will try his best to get at least one of them before he returns.

Information has been received at the Chicago offices of the Selig Polyscope Company that "The Rosary" showed to 20,000 paid admissions in two days at the American theater, Bellingham, Wash. The theater has a seating capacity of 2,000. The total population of Bellingham is 30,000. This shows that two-thirds of the whole population of the city saw the picture, and establishes a new record for the percentage-of-population attendance at a moving picture theater, so far as known at present.

A United Press dispatch from Rochester, N. Y., states that the directors of the Eastman Kodak Company have declared a wage dividend of nearly $1,000,000, payable to all employees who have worked for them a year or more. Payment will be made on the basis of 3½ per cent. of a year's salary multiplied by the number of years, not exceeding five, each employee has been with the company. The maximum dividend, therefore, amounts to 17½ per cent., or approximately nine weeks' salary. The distribution will be made July 1, 1916. The company employs nearly 11,000 people. Of these almost 8,000 will be entitled to participate in the wage dividend of 3½ per cent. or more. Only those who will have been in the employ of the company at least a year on January 1, 1916, are included in this year's dividend.

All is not peaceful in the village of Winnetka at the present time. The autocratic action of the one hundred members of the Winnetka Women's Club, about a month ago, in securing the passage of an ordinance prohibiting the licensing of all forms of amusement which are for profit, has raised a storm of opposition among the other residents. The opposition is circulating fifteen petitions, to which six hundred names have been signed, asking the village board to issue a special permit for the erection of a moving picture theater. The petitions will be brought before the Council at a meeting in the near future, when it is expected that justice will be done to the great majority of residents in the little burgh. Let us hope they will succeed.

Schumann-Heink attended the Pickford one evening specially to hear little Marian, and was so pleased with the child's efforts that she presented her with a beautiful bouquet of American Beauty roses. Marian is preserving with great care the card which she found attached to the bouquet, on which is written in the opera star's handwriting, "To my little colleague, with best wishes." Marian is a pretty and attractive child and expresses the hope that she will be a moving picture star some day. She is the daughter of D. E. and Mrs. Bertha Rice. The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Illinois at a recent meeting announced that the members had no connection whatever with the New Year's Eve ball to be given at the Coliseum under the auspices of the Screeners' Club, a fraternal organization, in no way associated with the moving picture business. The exploiters of the ball have been busy since my last letter in trying to get advertising for their program from firms connected with moving pictures and accessories, but without success, as far as I can learn. All moving picture stars are advised to take no part in this purely money-making scheme by outsiders.

Marguerite Courtot Joins Gaumont

PRETTY little Marguerite Courtot has become a Gaumont star. She leaves New York Christmas day for the winter quarters of this company at Jacksonville, Fla., carrying with her a long time contract as a star in feature productions.

Miss Courtot will star in one of the companies which Gaumont will keep at work making five-reel feature productions on the Mutual Program, to be released as Mutual Masterpictures, edition de luxe.

Marguerite Courtot.

For her company, since Miss Courtot is of French descent, General Manager F. G. Bradford of the Gaumont Company has secured both a French director and a French cameraman. Her photoplays will be directed by Henry J. Vernot and the camera will be handled by Andre Balatier.

It is an old saying that the "happiest nations are those which have no history." If the same applies to individuals then little can be said of Miss Courtot. Her Gaumont engagement is only the second she has had in motion pictures. Miss Courtot, who is still in her teens, was born in Summit, N. J. Her father was born in France, and her mother in a French canton in Switzerland. To this day in the family all conversation is carried on in French. As a child Miss Courtot spent some time at school in Lauzanne, Switzerland.

Even before leaving high school her beauty and her winsome manner had attracted the attention of the Kalem Company. Miss Courtot was not interested in pictures at that time and only after most urgent solicitation did she consent to join the Kalem Company. Here she remained for three years, severing her connection this month to become a Gaumont star.

Special scenarios are now being prepared, which will display to the utmost Miss Courtot's charm. It is expected that the first release in which she will be featured will be shown on the screen in February.

TO AVOID CONFUSION OF NAMES.

Caryl S. Fleming, formerly assistant chief-director of the Dra-Ko Film Co., Inc., wishes to announce that he is in no way related or connected with any other person of a similar name now engaged in the motion picture or theatrical business in the east. Henceforth he wishes to be known by his friends and business acquaintances as C. Stacy Fleming. He does this in order to obviate any further confusion which might be caused by the peculiar similarity in names.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By G. P. VON HARLEMAN and CLARKE IRVINE

CENSOR'S END IS APPROACHING.

Abolishment of all Local Censor Boards Predicted.

THAT the moving picture art will soon be as free from local interference as the newspaper and book publishing industries and the stage, is the outlook from Los Angeles, for this week the last shot fired was in the long battle against local censorship.

All that we have heard here for the past eight weeks or so have been arguments against the unnecessary and foolish expense of maintaining a local censor body to throw out what some other city might use, allowing a man in John's City to see a twenty-foot flash of a man kissing a woman, while the poor chap across the state line in James City has to be satisfied with seeing the same thing in two feet or else not at all. If local censors were given their walking papers and one man appointed to see that the proper eliminations were made, as ordered by the National Board, everyone would be treated alike, and considerable expense would be saved the smaller city governments.

Resume of Local Fight.

The Los Angeles situation, at a glance, is this. Some two months ago J. A. Quinn booked "Damaged Goods," was refused permission to run it; asked for a reconsideration, was refused; meantime the president of the local censor board, and his secretary were fired upon, and their resignations requested, the remaining members fleeing as if they had been guilty of doing something that they should not have done. Then, in the absence of the board, Quinn ran the picture. He was backed up by the best people in town, and the film is in its fifth week. Now the agitation against a permanent local board, inaugurated by slow and persistent work on the part of Quinn and his associates, is under way. Many prominent persons signed a petition to the council asking that no board be maintained and that one man be on salary to see that the proper cuts were made as ordered by the National Board. That matter is still hanging fire.

This week, at a luncheon of the Traffic Association, Thomas Dixon, noted author, told in a few pointed remarks, why the city of Los Angeles should be the first to set an example to the country by totally eliminating its board, and substituting one man, as aforesaid. Considerable interest was manifested by moving picture people in the talk and, also in what Cranston Brenton, chairman of the National Board, said.

Mr. Dixon's talk was brimming with true interest, and his argument for free films, which went to the root of the matter, was as follows:

Free Speech?

The principle is the same as that for which patriots in all ages have been contending. When Gutenberg invented his press and the world was furnished at last with a means of multiplying ideas on pieces of parchment, the tyrants, large and small, of that age cried out, "This shall not be." They saw in it their ruin and they were successful for many years in suppressing it.

For the right of free speech and a free press our forefathers came to America and revolutions disturbed the peace of Europe. But the freedom of expression was won at last in nearly every civilized nation of the world, most notably of all in the United States.

Books Never Censored.

If I write a book, no censorship board goes to my publisher and asks to see the proofs. If I convert the same ideas into a play and keep within the bounds of decency provided by the common law, no censor can interpose his "I forbid." Book, play or lecture is safe by the inalienable rights of a free people, but just wait until I make these over into a moving picture.

Censors Bugaboo.

The theory is the same for book or picture. The parchment is exposed to a slightly different process and instead of the written word the living light and the mountains, the sea, the sky and humanity itself are imprinted upon it. Yet a board of seven passes on this and is the last court of appeal.

Get rid of the bugaboo and realize the brilliant future that in all right should lie before you.

Cranston Brenton, chairman of the National Board of Censorship, arrived in Los Angeles this week and immediately got in touch with the World office. He was present at the luncheon, at which Mr. Dixon made this interesting speech. He is here, as has already been announced, to look over the film situation, and also, as he says, "to bring about a closer feeling of co-operation between producer, exhibitor and censors, in an effort to gain for the industry of motion picture projection a recognized position as one of the finest of fine arts—that is the purpose of my visit to this coast."

Dr. Brenton is visting the nearby cities, while making his headquarters in Los Angeles and working along with the local exhibitors and the Freedom League. He made a visit to Pasadena with Dr. W. B. Taylor, chairman of the board of that city. The two heads of the boards were visitors to Manager J. C. Neilson, of Clune's theater in that city, who knows a great deal about the exhibiting end of the industry.

Mr. Brenton said that "the criticism has been made that wherever local city or county boards of censorship have been established, an unhealthy spirit of warfare between the exhibitors and censors has arisen, which resulted in many cases in the expulsion of really valuable films on purely personal and prejudicial grounds. It is to obviate this condition that the large board is constantly working. We believe that type of board to be entirely superfluous."

"Do not misunderstand me," he continues, "I am not for the total abolishment of local boards. My idea of a local board is one which will work in co-operation with the national board in seeing that all ordered eliminations of objectionable films are made. In the other types of board, which will not accept criticism or suggestions, I have absolutely no faith and will be glad to see them legislated out of existence."

"There is being carried to a successful culmination in Los Angeles a new fight of the people," says the Out West Magazine, and continues: "It is a parallel of the centuries-old contention for freedom of speech and freedom of the press and will go on and on until the quack who instinctively fears that which he cannot understand, and therefore considers the films an insidious evil, has been drowned in a deluge of popular opinion. This is but the beginning of the fight for free films and elimination of local censorship everywhere. The film manufacturers, because it is to their financial advantage, have been fighting censorship in the courts; but now the American people are beginning to realize that censorship of the screen is an infringement upon their rights as individuals. And when enough of our people realize this truth there will be an end to censorship," which is very well spoken and the truth.

The censor situation is culled down to the one thought, "What will Los Angeles do?" True most of the big things come West, but it looks as if the censor situation would start something here and work East, and if the fight is maintained as strongly and as persistently as it has been waged here for the past two months, the near future should bring forth something very material in the way of total abolition of the unnecessary local board and bring about the ultimate freedom of the films.

MAKES LONG TOUR UP COAST.

Guy Price, whose name is well known to every film man up and down the Pacific coast, has just returned from a two thousand mile automobile hike to San Francisco in his big car. Mr. Price writes a moving picture page in the Evening Herald, and his sayings are known to the actor, producer and exhibitor.

The trip was for business and pleasure. He reports the showing end of the film industry along the coast towns as being very good, with features predominating most everywhere. In Santa Barbara, he says, the American company is very busy, and in Palo Alto the film men were turning out much work. San Francisco itself was a busy place and the showmen are doing wonderfully well.

The machine covered exactly 2,050 miles and not a puncture or mishap marred the journey which was made in fairly good time, considering that all the mountains and resorts and side and by ways were gone over. Two rivers were forded at night.

LOS ANGELES LABOR ORGANIZATION TO PROTEST.

The Los Angeles Labor Council will be asked to protest against motion pictures which show laboring men as drunkards.

It has been noted that many moving pictures depicting scenes of drunkenness and excesses, show their principal characters in such scenes as workingmen and toilers.

The labor council will be asked to consider the following resolutions:

Whereas, it is a familiar practice in moving pictures to exhibit scenes of drunkenness, in which the principal actors are represented as workingmen; and,

Whereas, the place of such revelry and excess, in many instances, is shown as a saloon or cafe of the type generally patronized by workingmen; and,

Whereas, the constant parading before the minds of the people of the United States the untruthful scenes that drunkenness and debauchery are common among the toilers and the poor, is a stigma upon the entire laboring element of the United States; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the Central Labor Council of Los Angeles, in regular meeting assembled, disapprove and condemn such pictures as described above and protest against them as being unfair to that vast army of sober and industrious men who form the ranks of the labor unions of the United States.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

From Albuquerque, N. M., we are informed that Rollin D. Dixon, a representative of the Rodman Wanamaker expedition, is in the city filming scenes for an Indian picture. This film is intended to show the Indian as he was and as he is at present, in contrast, and to be used as part of a propaganda for full citizenship for the Redman. Mr. Dixon is traveling over the country in a wagon and photographs scenes wherever there is any Indian activity worthy of being recorded.

The expedition had carried on educational work at the Panama-Pacific exposition for some months, and received awards for its efforts in behalf of the Indian.

The Uplifters of the Los Angeles Athletic Club will give a great benefit show at Morosco's theater, Saturday this week, and donate the gross receipts to the Los Angeles Federation of Parent-Teachers' Association, a charitable organization for the benefit of needy school children.

One of the features of the evening will be Dr. Leonard S. Sugden's Alaska motion pictures in eight reels, with Dr. Sudgen himself before the curtain in a complete lecture descriptive of the scenes. In volunteering this presentation of his pictures, Dr. Sugden makes his last appearance in this city before going to Washington, where he will show his films by request to President Wilson and the National Geographical Society.

DeWolf Hopper and Willie Collier, now members of our photoplay colony, will also contribute to Saturday night's entertainment.

Fred W. Blanchard, a prominent business light and clubman of Los Angeles, has purchased controlling interest in the Kellum talking picture machine, and, it is stated, in association with several prominent capitalists of this city, will form a company to manufacture this device on a large scale and build a big plant in Edendale. The Kellum talking picture machine is something entirely new and built, we are informed, on different principles from the old time talking picture machines. The synchronization is said to be perfect and the tone of superior quality. Entire plays and operas will be produced. The productions are to be trademarked "Phono Films." E. O. Kellum, the inventor, is a Los Angeles man.

George Broadhurst, the noted playwright, the author of "The Dollar Mark," "The Man of the Hour," "Bought and Paid For," and other big stage successes, arrived in the city this week. Mr. Broadhurst asserts that he is only making a visit to the Coast to see the exposition. He may, however, it is reported, do some scenario writing for the Morosco Photoplay Company. To a representative of the Moving Picture World Mr. Broadhurst voiced his opinion with regard to moving picture plays. He expressed the belief that too much money is being spent in the production of motion pictures. "The Clansman" was the most wonderful production ever filmed, he said, but as time goes on the producers of moving pictures will come to realize that so much money cannot be risked in production of film features."

From the standpoint of the playwright and author, Mr. Broadhurst's opinion of moving picture directors is not complimentary. He says that they sacrifice everything for pictorial effect. They cut and butcher plays unmercifully, he complains.

Attempt by the Cuauhtemoc Film Company to film the Indian snake dances at the annual San Xavier fiesta at Tucson, Ariz., this week, for a picture which they are producing, came to naught. Says a Tucson paper, when the Indians who performed the dance, fled upon sighting the camera. The camera man tried in vain to induce them to perform, but it was no use, and the film company officials departed, leaving the red men to perform their ceremonies in the red men's way without regard for the other "Red Men's Way," which is the name of the feature the Cuauhtemoc Film company is producing.

After the picture men had departed the feast continued as usual, and the Indians who were selected to do the fancy dancing came forth from their shelter and performed before a large crowd.

As far as can be learned only one picture of the fiesta has ever been taken. It is now on exhibition at the Chamber of Commerce. It is said that the picture was made by a local man who went to the feast with a pocket camera, with four companions who surrounded him. The photograph was taken with the four men acting as shield.

When the Eclair company was in Tucson they endeavored to get a picture of the fiesta, and offered every inducement to the Indians, but it was in vain. In explaining to the Cuauhtemoc film officials yesterday, just why his people would not allow a picture to be taken, one of the chiefs said that if the camera eye caught them they could never die. If that is true, how many women would gaze into the camera's eye?

The new board of censors has lifted the ban on "The Nigger," the Fox feature which was condemned in its entirety by the former board and confiscated by the police about three months ago at a local theater when run without a permit. The censor board has decided that the film may be exhibited in the city, providing the title is changed and no reference whatsoever is made to the old name in any advertising. The Fox Film Company has agreed to these stipulations by the board and the picture will be exhibited this week at a Los Angeles theater.

Arthur Shirley, in his costume and make-up of Colonel Vassar, in "The Fall of a Nation" picture, was subpoenaed into court one morning last week as witness in an accident case. Five hundred extra men in soldiers' uniforms were about to be led by Mr. Shirley in an attack on an enemy, when the strong arm of the law, a man with a subpoena, reached out and transplanted Mr. Shirley from the battlefield to the court room. Thomas Dixon, director general of the picture, regretfully recognized the authority of the law, saying there was nothing for him to do but gracefully accede to Mr. Shirley's presentation at court. The ceremony of the latter event consisted of a considerable wait until the accident case was called, and then the judge's dismissing it without a hearing. Meanwhile the five hundred and more soldiers waited for the return of their colonel, and were finally dismissed, credited with no work, but a day's pay.

Here is a record for copies of a scenario: When "Wanda of the Red Street," the first five-reel picture made by the Palo Alto Film Corporation was completed, work began on the second Nell Shipman feature script written for that company. Miss Shipman was not satisfied with the title, "The Son," which she had given the scenario and suggested that the choice of a title be left to the students of the Leland Stanford University at Palo Alto. Accordingly, three thousand copies of the synopsis of the script have been printed and distributed among the students, the choice of titles to be submitted not later than January 31st.

Invitations for the first of a series of monthly dinners were issued yesterday by the directors of the Press Club and the moving picture members will be on hand to enjoy the fun. At the first dinner, Francis J. Henry, the noted graft prosecutor, will be the chief speaker. The subject upon which he will talk has not yet been announced, but it will relate to some issue which is of interest to newspaper men, moving picture producers and professional men.

Other members who appear upon the program are Walter J. Goldsmith, who will tell brand new stories; Cecile B. de Mille, director general of Lasky's, who will explain how scenarios are written; A. Bismark Cuscaden, who will sing, and Mme. Ellis and Professor Ellis who will demonstrate mental telepathy feats, and Otheman Stevens.

In an auto wreck the other evening Jack Dean, leading man of Fanny Ward in "Tennessee's Partner," developed into a real, as well as a film hero. While returning from location several nights ago an automobile truck, driving in front of the automobile containing the Lasky party, overturned, pinning the two occupants underneath. Dean crawled under the over-turned car and managed to lift it up enough to drag out the injured driver. Both occupants of the truck were seriously injured, and were rushed to a nearby hospital in the Lasky machine.

Making fast time to make big time is what Weber & Fields did in order to finish their last picture for the Keystone Film Company.

The famous comedy team worked steadily for eighteen hours without even a halt for meals on the day their contract expired. Cloudy and rainy weather made it almost impossible to photograph but a covered stage was hurriedly set up, several banks of lights arranged, and the work proceeded in spite of the elements. Mack Sennet personally directed the comedians through the long siege, and his tireless efforts resulted in finishing the work long after darkness had fallen. At the last minute the tired pair were hustled into an automobile and rushed to the train with their make-up still on. A crowd of Keystoners, including Mack Sennett, Mabel Normand, Sam Bernard, Roscoe Arbuckle, Joe Jackson and Ford Sterling, followed and bade them a rousing farewell. Their strenuous finish and hurried departure was due to the fact that the Orpheum bill at San Francisco was topped with "Weber & Fields," and opened with a matinee the next day, leaving just fifteen hours to make the trip from Los Angeles and be ready in time for the performance. The members of the Keystone company, and their relatives and friends, reserved almost the entire theater and arranged a unique welcome for Joe and Lew on the first night of their Los Angeles engagement, a week later.

The Lasky Company is consistent in its development and again the large studio is being improved by the addition of a new stage 300 by 60 feet, which is being erected on the lot immediately back of the dressing rooms. Part of this stage will be glass enclosed, and will be in use in a few weeks. The company has added a portable electric light plant to their equipment and with the aid of a wagon load of Kleigs, are able to take night scenes on any location.

Another writer has been added to the Balboa scenario staff in the person of Miss Bess Meredith, who is exceptionally well equipped for her work. After years of experience on the stage she went into pictures and relearned the art of acting from the camera's standpoint. Possessed of a lively imagination she was attracted to the authorship end of the game. Hence, she writes from actual studio experience. Balboa's productions of Miss Meredith's stories are taking high rank.

Burton Holmes With Paramount

Lecturer Finds a Way to Be in a Hundred Places at Once—To Give Paramount Benefits of Travels.

HAVING often wished that he were twins in order that he might be here and abroad at the same time, Burton Holmes, the most famous traveler and lecturer on travel in the world today, has found that it is possible for the results of his work to be seen in a hundred photoplay theaters throughout the country at the same time, through the contract he has just signed with the Paramount Pictures Corporation, and it is now announced that in January the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelpictures will be released and booked solely through the Paramount Exchanges. Mr. Holmes will personally edit, assemble and manufacture these films, which will embody the same kind of interesting and comprehensive views that he has been showing in connection with his "Travelogues."

Burton Holmes.

"It is our aim to make these pictures short, to offer plenty of variety, and to bring out the human interest in the life of the countries to be visited on what we might call 'Our Easy Chair Journeys,'" said W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, after the meeting at which the arrangement with the noted traveler was consummated. "Mr. Holmes fully realizes the high standard of excellence which must be maintained by our pictures and he has declared himself greatly in favor of the system by which our exhibitors are given a voice in shaping the policy of the program. We feel that in capturing Mr. Holmes for Paramount we have won another victory for the photoplay, and we are glad to add his name to those of Roger W. Babson, J. R. Bray, Raymond L. Ditmars and the others already associated with us."

Burton Holmes has always been a pioneer along the lines of artistic progress; love of travel has always been and still is, the motive of his very existence. He comes by the "Wanderlust" naturally, as his ancestors for generations have been great travelers.

He was the first lecturer to introduce an entire program of colored views, and was the first to realize the value of motion pictures in the illustration of travel pictures. Besides this, he was the first of his profession to realize the advantages to be derived by making his own motion picture.

Further details as to the exact nature of his first releases and the dates on which they can be seen will be announced soon.

Donald C. Thompson Home From War

Young Free-Lance Photographer Has Faced Death in Many Countries, but Got His Pictures—Wounded Only Once.

IN THE office of Arthur S. Kane in the Candler Building, a World man met Donald C. Thompson, a slight young Kansan. Mr. Thompson had just returned from Europe, where he has seen war as it falls to few men to observe it. He has passports literally by the dozen, which attest as only official documents can attest that he has been where he modestly says he has been. He also brings with him copies of such great journals as the Illustrated London News and The Sphere, of England, and L'Illustration, of Paris, containing pages upon pages of photographs, many of them of actual battles, under which appears his name. Mr. Thompson also has contributed pictures to the columns of the London Daily Mail, the New York World and Leslie's Weekly.

Mr. Thompson has returned to this country just for a vacation—he expects to go to his home in Topeka, Kan., for a week's visit—and also to arrange for the marketing of motion pictures he secured while away. He has completed negotiations with Arthur S. Kane for the exploitation of five reels, which Mr. Kane plans to distribute through exchanges in the United States. Some of his work will likewise go out to the public through Paramount Newspictures. The first showing of the pictures to be distributed by Mr. Kane will be in Topeka during the coming week.

Mr. Thompson has been a globe trotter for a dozen years. He has been a free lance, too, a regular employer being an accessory for which he has nothing but abhorrence. He has taken pictures in all parts of the world. When the war broke he started for England on a tramp steamer. He carried a toothbrush and three cameras. All were large ones, "to prevent the possibility of any one accusing me of being a spy," as he explained. In spite of prohibitions, he pursued his profession in France, Belgium, Germany, Russia, Serbia and Turkey. He "thinks" he was arrested something like three-score times. On eight occasions was he arrested and as many times detained in a guardhouse before he finally got out of Paris. When he finally started toward the front it was under a tarpaulin with a fieldpiece for a bedfellow. He awoke at Mons. With the English soldiers, who had become his abettors on account of the credentials he bore from Sam Hughes, head of the Canadian militia, he marched for two hours and went into the trenches. The battle was on. He took photographs all day. When the British retired he waited only to get a snap of the charging Germans and then ran. How he got his pictures back to England makes a story stranger than fiction. There is not space here in which to tell it in detail, but they were conveyed by a temporarily impoverished Russian countess. In return Mr. Thompson loaned her 250 francs and many United Cigar coupons, the latter of which, by the way, she returned to him with the money borrowed when in England she handed him his film.

Mr. Thompson was in Antwerp during the siege. On the bridge of his nose are powder marks, on his forehead is a scar, and he says on his back there are sundry marks, all made by a shrapnel shell which unkindly exploded in the house where he was living. He said he was all right, however, in three weeks. He has a photograph of what remained of a house across the street after the visit of a messenger from one of the forty-twos. The photographer was the bearer to the outside world of the first authentic news of the bombardment. He still has the safe-conduct of the United States consul in which it was set forth that he was the bearer of official messages to Uncle Sam.

One of the gems Mr. Thompson brought back with him and which is contained in the film to be distributed by Mr. Kane is of an aeroplane battle between British and German machines. The American had ascended as a photographer to do some work for the British. When he and his companion were 12,000 feet up they discovered the battle between the two machines below them. Mr. Thompson "took" the scrap which ended with the German landing on the British side of the lines. Later over Belgrade he was the object of attack in which he estimates 180 shells were fired at the machine in which he was taking pictures. He says when the shells break too close to the machine the suction will cause it to loop the loop.

Mr. Thompson went into Russia and was through the campaign in the Carpathians, and along the Russian front generally. He has photographed some of the crack Bulgarian and Roumanian regiments. This summer he was with the Turkish troops and later photographed battles in Serbia. His many passports, with their seals and stamps and hieroglyphics, tell a story in themselves. He said it was his intention to return to the war zone shortly after the first of the year, and that he thought it likely he would go to the eastern front—in any event, wherever there seemed a likelihood of getting the most action.

It is a pleasure to meet this quiet man, who in his passports is described as twenty-eight years old and 5 feet 4½ inches in height. He is of a kind we sometimes read about but rarely collide with in the flesh. Every cameraman and, for that matter, every one in any way connected with the motion picture industry will be proud to read what was said of Mr. Thompson by E. Alexander Powell in his book "Fighting in Flanders":

"Of all the horde of adventurous characters who were drawn to the Continent on the outbreak of war as iron-filings are attracted by a magnet, I doubt if there was a more picturesque figure than a little photographer from Kansas named Donald Thompson. I met him first while paying a flying visit to Ostend. He blew into the consulate there wearing an American army shirt, a pair of British officer's riding breeches, French puttees and a Highlander's forage-cap, and carrying a camera the size of a parlor phonograph. No one but an American could have accomplished what he had, and no American but one from Kansas. He had not only seen war, all military prohibitions to the contrary, but he had actually photographed it.

"Thompson is a little man, built like Harry Lauder; hard as nails, tough as rawhide, his skin tanned to the color of a well-smoked meerschaum, and his face perpetually wreathed in what he called his 'sunflower smile.' He affects riding breeches and leather leggings and looks, physically as well as sartorially, as though he had been born on horseback. He has more chilled-steel nerve than any man I know, and before he had been in Belgium a month his name had become a synonym throughout the army for coolness and daring."

FIRE IN THE MECCA BUILDING.

Fire broke out in the chemical room of the Atlas Film Trading Corporation on the fourth floor of the Mecca Building, 1600 Broadway, at 11 o'clock on Saturday, December 18. The damage from flame was confined to the vault in which the fire started. From water, however, the offices of the Universal company, on the floor below, suffered much. P. A. Powers was chased out of his office by the rapidly descending flood, and so was Maurice Hoffman out of his. The walls of the Universal's fine projection room were soiled. Many of the carpets on the third floor will have to be renewed. One of the worst phases of the fire was the accompanying gas which penetrated to many parts of the building. Several firemen were overcome and had to be carried out. These were the only casualties, in spite of the near panic which ensued throughout the building. The Universal offices were practically closed for the remainder of the day.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH THROUGH V-L-S-E.

Although it was announced at the beginning that the new Hearst-Vitagraph news service would be distributed by means of an independent line of exchanges, plans have been changed and the reel will be distributed through the V-L-S-E., the first installment going out January 3. Tom Powers, the well known cartoonist, will contribute animated cartoons for the new service.

SMALLEST MOTION PICTURE CAMERA IN THE WORLD.

Clarke Irvine Designs Miniature Moving Picture Machine.

THE latest interesting offer from the west coast producing center is the "Movie Mascot," a small motion picture camera, seven inches high, which the photoplayers and film people are using as the emblem of the industry. The nifty little ornament fits neatly on the top of the radiator crown of an automobile, and already a large number of players, exhibitors and exchangemen are showing them around the country. The tiny ornaments are symbolic of the business, and create interest as well as look good on the automobile.

The tiny camera box is made of highly varnished mahogany, with a lens that a pencil eraser will fit into, and a crank that Tom Thumb only would be able to grasp, while the little film meter with its pointing hand no larger than the sharp end of a pin is but a quarter of an inch in diameter. Only a mouse would be able to squint through the tiny finder, and the little leather handle on top is only an eighth of an inch wide. So you can see how small the mascot really is, and this is why it attracts so much interest and attention.

Anywhere anyone goes with the film kodak a crowd gathers to inspect and admire it, and also to laugh. They know what it represents, for the camera is the life of the industry. Already exhibitors and exchangemen and others are sending to the World office in Los Angeles for the mascots to use on their cars or to attract attention in their lobbies, in the box office, or just to carry around and have fun with, and they all express their admiration for the neat little emblems of the great industry.

The inventor of the newest craze among the film men is Clarke Irvine, the Moving Picture World correspondent at Los Angeles. At every studio he has visited the film people have been greatly interested. Irvine built the camera originally for his small roadster, but everyone expressed so much delight at seeing it and also a desire to have one too that he was urged to make ten, then more requested them, and a hundred was turned out, and now the film men all over the country will have a chance to enjoy the little fun-makers from the big producing center.

The nifty little mascots are very durable, and the tripod is quite strong, being made of brass and steel nickel-plated, and will last as long as any automobile. See advertisement in this issue for further details.

Edward Lyell Fox, M. P. Correspondent.

EDWARD LYELL FOX, the noted war correspondent and author of "Behind the Scenes with Warring Germany," is back from Europe, where he acted as special envoy for the American Correspondent Film Company.

Mr. Fox is the first motion picture correspondent to take pictures depicting the German side of the operations in Serbia. Previous to this he had followed in the wake of the Teutonic drive through Poland and had been present at the fall of Warsaw and Novo Georgiewsk. Early in October he was tipped off that Bulgaria was to enter the war on the 14th of the month. He immediately left for Sofia by way of Roumania. At Bucharest he experienced great trouble with the military authorities and narrowly escaped having his camera outfit confiscated. The Roumanians have not forgotten the meddlesome activities of certain war correspondents during the last Balkan war, and consequently a correspondent there is about as popular as the plague. Fox, however, finally managed to make his way to the Bulgarian capital, where he obtained permission from the foreign office, through the German minister Micheleas, to accompany the Bulgar-Germanic forces in their mighty effort to crush the serbs.

Edward Lyell Fox.

Armed with a military pass and accompanied by Jack Everets, cameraman, and a Bulgarian who was unfit for military service and who acted as combination cook, valet and interpreter, Fox set out for the front, the camera equipment and provisions being carried along on an antiquated ox-cart. Some striking scenes were taken in connection with the fall of Pirot and Nish. Later Fox left Everets to continue the work of taking pictures in Serbia and went to Constantinople. Here he received permission from Enver Bey to picturize the campaign in the vicinity of Galipoli. From there he returned to Sofia and thence to Berlin. After filming a number of interesting scenes depicting prison life in the detention camps near Berlin, Fox proceeded to Vienna, where he made arrangements to get pictures showing the fall of Belgrade and scenes from the Isonzo front and the Tyrol. These pictures he brought back to America with him.

The later Serbian films are expected here within a few weeks, the delay being due to the Bulgarian censorship rule prohibiting the release of war pictures until a sufficient time has elapsed as to render their military value negligible.

CRAFT OPENS "DUPLEX" THEATER IN DETROIT.

On Wednesday, December 15, P. P. Craft, who has gone to Detroit, Mich., to handle the Triangle program in that city, wired the information that on that date the Detroit "Duplex" theater was opened. He says that the idea is a revelation and predicts that every city of importance will soon have its "duplex" theater. He has arranged to show the Triangle program at the Duplex.

MAURICE COSTELLO OUT OF VITAGRAPH.

Maurice Costello, who has been with the Vitagraph Company for many years, and who was until very recently the most popular male player appearing on the screen in this country, is no longer one of the director-players of that company. Mr. Costello has not made known his plans for the future.

GOLD KING SCREEN COMPANY INCREASING SALES AGENCIES.

President S. H. Jones, of Gold King Screen fame, has left Altus for an extended trip through the north and east. While away he will call upon the heads of the leading motion picture theater supply houses with a view of establishing new distributors for the Gold King Screen.

Carroll McComas, Edison Star

EDISON has captured for the star of the Kleine-Edison five-part feature, "At the Rainbow's End," released February 23, Carroll McComas for her first appearance in motion pictures. Miss McComas has long been sought, both by Edison and other leading companies, but her busy life making successes on the stage always prevented.

Her vivacious personality, beautiful brown eyes and a certain captivating manner, make her an ideal subject for the camera, and should the lens catch but one-half of her charming sprightliness, her success will be pronounced.

Beside her natural vivacity, her next most marked characteristic is her remarkable versatility, which has enabled her to succeed equally as well in dramatic roles as she did in musical comedy, and in vaudeville as a whistler and singer.

Carroll McComas.

Four seasons were spent with Frohman and her recent work in the lead in the stage play, "Inside the Lines," was a personal triumph. Critic and public agreed that she shared honors easily with John Drew in "The Single Man," while her delightful work in the musical comedy success, "The Dollar Princess," and "The Marriage Market" made some box office records. Miss McComas also appeared with Billie Burke in "Mind the Paint Girl," with Donald Brian in "The Siren," "Miss Dot," and in "The Salamander."

Charles Frohman thought so much of her unusual ability as a whistler that he had that specialty written into "The Marriage Market." At that specialty, in vaudeville, Miss McComas started on the stage at twelve years of age, and traveled the country over, the capitals of Europe and South Africa, later adding songs, Miss McComas is the type of girl who never grows up and laughingly states that she has done everything from concert work, both ways, with the exception of circus, and lives in hopes of doing that yet. Miss McComas is the daughter of Judge C. C. McComas of Los Angeles, the brilliant prosecutor of the McNamara bomb plotters.

Lubin Making Big Feature

"The Crash," an Epic of Labor by Daniel Carson Goodman, for V-L-S-E Program.

ONE of the greatest multiple-reel subjects yet conceived will shortly be released by the Lubin Manufacturing Company of Philadelphia. It is entitled "The Crash" and is from the pen of Daniel Carson Goodman.

"The Crash" is an epic of labor, and deals with the struggles of a man against seeming overwhelming odds. Richard Buhler and Rosetta Brice, who played the leading parts in "A Man's Making," will be seen in the leading roles. Francis Joyner and a competent cast will add materially to the success of the picture. Director Jack Pratt is producing "The Crash" and is incorporating new and novel effects in this picture that promise to overshadow any of his previous efforts. "The Crash" embodies a powerful love story, together with a series of thrilling incidents that deal with the sterner side of life, the whole making an intensely interesting and appealing subject.

"The Crash" will be released on the V-L-S-E program early in January, and it is the opinion of those concerned in its production that it will exceed in popularity any of the feature pictures thus far released by the Lubin Company.

"The Crash" embraces all the salient features so eagerly sought for by both exhibitor and patrons, and was selected by the Lubin Manufacturing Company from among sixty odd other stories submitted, as being the best type of feature story pursuant with the policy lately adopted by the Lubin Manufacturing Company to release only the biggest and best of the subjects submitted to them.

NEW YORK METRO SERVICE STAFF.

E. M. Saunders, general manager of the New York Metro Film Service, Inc., was the host at a "get together" luncheon at the Hotel Astor, in which members of the executive staff and the "ginger squad" that recently went into the field, participated. There was a lot of the "ginger crew" who reported the result of their efforts in that direction. Through a brief campaign of local advertising in the interest of Metro feature productions, the "ginger squad" said they were able, in many cities throughout New York State, to increase the local exhibitors' business on Metro night, from thirty to fifty per cent. Plans were laid to increase the efficiency of the new squad, and carry on a more extensive campaign. Those present at the luncheon included Chief Saunders, C. W. Glimm, assistant manager, H. W. Kahn, branch manager, Albany, C. A. Taylor, branch manager, Buffalo; Joseph Lynch, New York outside representative; W. J. Neely, traveling publicity representative, A. W. Carrick, traveling publicity representative, and P. H. Smith, New York outside representative.

Among the Picture Theaters

News and Views of Photoplay Houses Everywhere

NEW THEATER, BALTIMORE, MD.

Vaudeville Structure Converted Into First-Class Photoplay House—Has Seating Capacity for 1,700—Managed by Louis A. DeHoff.

AMONG the many attractive motion picture theaters of which the city of Baltimore, Md., well may boast is the New theater, at Park avenue and Lexington street, which was some time ago transformed from a vaudeville house. Many problems confront the architect in seeking to adapt a building already existing to meet the entirely different requirements of the motion picture business. In the case of the New theater it was necessary to rearrange the sight lines and the heating, lighting and ventilating systems.

New Theater, Baltimore, Md.

Upon the proper carrying out of these main points is dependent much of the success of a theater.

In this theater the ventilating and heating systems may be said to be a part of each other. After the heat is generated it is blown to the top of the building and there distributed through ventilators and grilles. The foul air is withdrawn from the building through ducts placed at various parts of the house in such manner as to insure an even temperature at all times without overheating. The arrangement of the system gives the opportunity for changing the air in the auditorium every four minutes, without creating draughts of any kind. During the hot weather, this same apparatus is utilized to force cool air through the theater and even on the warmer days of last summer the difference between the outside air and the auditorium was on an average about eighteen degrees. The air is kept fresh at all times and one does not experience the heavy sensation which is so often brought about by improper ventilation.

The lighting system was changed over to a direct-indirect one, and by this means it is quite possible to have the auditorium almost brilliantly lighted without any resultant ill effect upon the showing of the pictures. It has been found that such installation does away entirely with the uncomfortable effect upon the vision while a patron is viewing the pictures. The mechanical features of the installation permit of its complete control.

The rearrangement of the sight lines has added greatly to the comfort of the patrons and a clear and full view of the screen and the stage is possible from every seat in the house. The original stage is now utilized as the station for the orchestra which is in daily attendance. At the edge, near the footlights, a balustrade has been arranged. About twenty-five feet back of this is the Gold Fibre screen. At its right is the organ consol, while in the space between are the musicians. An orchestral organ completes the musical equipment.

The house is equipped with a balcony and a gallery and has a seating capacity of 1,700. The house occupies an area of 75 feet 6 inches in width by 120 feet in length. Concrete has been lavishly employed in its construction, and it is as near fireproof as money and modern ingenuity can make it. The operator's booth is located on the third floor. It occupies a space 10 by 14 feet, with an 8-foot ceiling, and is equipped with a Simplex projection machine, motor driven, using direct current, 50 amperes on arc. The throw is about 100 feet.

Red is the predominant color in the decorative scheme, and the furnishings and fixtures are very attractive. Uniformed girl ushers escort patrons to the seats. Luxurious rest rooms are a feature of the house, while a spacious lobby is strewn with easy chairs which invite the people to come in and rest. The orchestra in this theater is another of its fine features. It is under the direction of E. V. Cupero. In addition there is a magnificent choralleo string instrument.

The New theater is under the management of Louis A. DeHoff, who is well known in the motion picture industry. He is popular with those who patronize the house, and is ever on the lookout for that which will tend to increase the attendance and the box office receipts.

GLADSTONE THEATER, KANSAS CITY, MO.

"Picture House, the Nucleus of a Business District," Theory of John G. Hiatt—Mails Weekly Program to Patrons.

"WHERE people go there is certain to be business," is a fact that cannot be disputed, but Kansas City has a man who believes that occasionally this can be reversed to read that where a business is started people will come. Although the Gladstone theater is not at present surrounded by a thickly-settled neighborhood, the theory of John G. Hiatt, owner and manager, is that a moving picture show is the soundest nucleus of a business district, the best means of convincing the people. But Mr. Hiatt has an advantage over the average man, for he is the owner of considerable property near the theater and on this property he is erecting a large number of cottages and houses. To quote Mr. Hiatt, "They said this part of the city would not support a fine moving picture show, because there were not enough people close to it. I said, well, I'll put people close to it, so I am building houses close to my place here, that in three years will increase the population of my territory over three thousand, and I will have the only theater any place near here, and people will come to my show."

Lobby of the Gladstone Theater Kansas City, Mo.

And Mr. Hiatt, if for no other reason than mere pride in his neighborhood, has certainly erected a classy moving picture theater in Kansas City at the corner of St. John and Elmwood avenues. Mr. Hiatt is the kind of man that can do a thing of this sort and get away with it. It was he who succeeded in getting four new schools in a hitherto neglected part of the city, including a high school that is ranked as a leader among high schools in the west. It was Mr. Hiatt, who, after serving five continuous years on a civic improvement committee, at last managed to get a rerouting of street cars, of which all hope had once been given up, and it is he who is responsible for a great deal of the improvement of the northeast part of Kansas City. This is the kind of man who has erected for the benefit of his renters and all in the immediate neighborhood one of the finest moving picture theaters in Kansas City.

The Gladstone is situated in an artistocratic part of the city, within close proximity of the Independence avenue car line and on the northeast line. The building, 68x127 feet, was completed in February, 1915. It is built of the most modern materials and is absolutely fireproof, the heating plant even being located in the basement of the adjoining building, so as not to interfere with the safety of the theater patrons. The roof is steel trussed, thereby eliminating all posts in construction, and the supporting walls are made of reinforced concrete and steel. The front of the theater is of very pretty red brick with a large glass canopy over the entrance. This canopy is studded with a row of 20 dimmed lights, while above and in the middle of the building are two large arc lights, spreading a powerful light over the entire street front. The lobby is a very spacious one. On the right is the ticket office, while on the other side is Mr. Hiatt's private office. The floor is of mixed tile, while in the center of the lobby is a beautiful granite bowl full of natural flowers on a granite pedestal. From the lobby to the theater are three large double doors, and one entrance to the balcony, which is of concrete.

The walls of the interior are furnished in circassian wood, all trimmings being done in a two-tone finish of steel gray and old gold. A stage, with a forum of 30 feet, has an arch of old gold fresco plaster, harmonizing beautifully with the interior decorations. There are four exits, not including the main entrance, while along the side of the theater, instead of the usual dull wall, there is a series of fourteen large sized stained glass windows, producing an effect which has caused much comment and compliments. The floor is a sloping one, concrete, and the wide aisles are covered with carpet. The seats are regular theater seats, 900 being on the first floor and 300 in the balcony. The screen used is one painted on the wall of the stage, the color being a goldish hue, instead of the common white. Five clusters of lights, four 250-watt lights and one 500-watt light, spread a dull glow over the house when lighted. The illumination is augmented by eight 20-watt lights, with green glass bead fringes extending a delightful flood of light over the auditorium. The proscenium arch has fifty 20-watt lights and the balcony arch is light with forty of the same type. The indirect lighting system is used and the resultant effect is one of delightful harmony and pleasing to the eye. The operating room, 7x12 feet, is a metal one, built in the rear of the house. It contains two Power's 6A machines and the throw is 85 feet. A motor generator is also used.

Until the first of November, Mr. Hiatt has been using only a piano for his music, but he is now installing a Kimball pipe organ. Madam De'Armond, one of Kansas City's piano artists, is the presiding person in charge of music in the Gladstone, and to her will fall the lot of playing the new organ. Mr. Hiatt is so proud of his music and the ability of Madam De'Armond that he has a standing offer of $50 to anyone in the city who can follow the pictures as she does and play them as the various scenes are being enacted. He leaves the judging to the audience. Six employees are kept busy providing for the comfort of the patrons, including a uniformed negro, who maintains watch over the automobiles of the patrons.

Mr. Hiatt started the middle of October a mailing list of about five hundred people in his section of the city to whom he mails the week's program. He has asked advice on this question and has found that this method of letting his program be known to the public, the best way, although he advertises heavily in the daily papers.

"People receive this house program and keep it in front of them and know just what nights they want to come, and save those nights for those particular shows, whereby, with the program of each evening appearing in that morning's paper, some people might miss shows they desire to see," said Mr. Hiatt.

Mr. Hiatt is the kind of man who would succeed where others might fail. With a genial face and an attractive personality, he is to be seen every night greeting his patrons as they enter the house and bidding them farewell as they leave. A further evidence of Mr. Hiatt's value to the neighborhood is shown by the fact that once every year he gives the theater over to the churches in the neighborhood, donating all the proceeds to the churches, he paying all the expenses. Mrs. Hiatt is a good partner and works as energetically as does her progressive husband. The people of the northeast section of Kansas City are fortunate, indeed, in having such a theater and manager as the beautiful Gladstone house and the genial accommodating Mr. Hiatt.

Biograph Comedy and Drama

"The Skating Rink" and "The Avenging Shot" Are Pictures of Good Quality Soon to Be Released.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IN A THREE-REEL picture called "The Skating Rink" the Biograph company used the roller-skating craze of a few years ago as the foundation of an entertaining rural comedy that is pleasingly out of the ordinary. The story is slight, but in lieu of a complicated plot we find a quantity of cleverely arranged scenes, thoroughly amusing in themselves, as acted by Gertrude Bambrick, Bud Ross, Madge Kirby, Fred Nolan and other members of a large company. Most of the action is centered in a village where roller skates are introduced by an energetic salesman. Before long all the farmers and the farmers' families, irrespective of age or physical proportions, have become devotees of the new sport and a barn is transformed into a rink.

Particularly humorous is the playing of Miss Bambrick in the role of a maid-of-all-work, who adopts the new fashion and even performs her household duties on the treacherous skates. Mr. Nolan makes a typical country character of Tubbs, the father of two pretty daughters, who meets the flashy salesman under the most embarrassing circumstances. There is good comedy in the scene showing how the young women are surprised while in swimming, and how the man from the city, in turn, is seriously discomfited by the loss of his check suit left on the bank of the river. Miss Kirby and Louise Owen are an attractive pair in the parts of the farmer's daughters.

The climax of the photoplay is presented in the improvised rink on the night of a masquerade. All of the villagers assemble in ludicrous costumes to see a race which is to decide the fate of a mortgage on the property. Then the barn burns, and at the end of a spectacular fire nothing remains but charred timbers. Altogether "The Skating Rink" is a very acceptable comedy film, especially for small town audiences.

"The Avenging Shot" is a tense two-part drama acted by Charles Mailes, Clara Sisson, Jack Mulhall and Raymond Nye. The development of the first reel is especially effective, all of the action preparing for the scenes in which an elderly dealer in antiques shoots the man who years earlier had stolen his wife. He has been waiting twenty years for an opportunity to avenge the wrong, and finally the chance comes through an unexpected, though logical, sequence of events. His daughter and a young playwright, who has rented a spare room in the house, figure prominently in the action. In the second reel, after "the avenging shot" has been fired, the old man relates the story of love and deception over which he had brooded for years. Mr. Mailes is a sincere and sympathetic actor in a part of this description, and Miss Sisson is appealing, first as the daughter, then as the betrayed wife.

"Forbidden Fruit"

Serious Subject Is Presented in Five-Part Drama Written and Produced by Ivan Abramson.

is never shown in an alluring guise; there is nothing in the theme, or its treatment to tempt one to break social conventions. On the contray, Ivan Abramson's story dwells almost exclusively on the misery that may result from a misstep, however well intentioned the motive behind it. As a picture devised for the entertainment of a general audience "Forbidden Fruit" is, most of all, open to the charge of being gloomy.

Whether or not Mr. Abramson was wise in the choice of a subject need not be discussed. At all events he was sincere in his handling of a difficult theme, and succeeded in incorporating in it a picture of no little dramatic force; moreover, he must be given credit for originality in plot development. The husband of a young woman forges the name of the man she once was engaged to marry. She goes to her former fiance, pleading that her husband be spared, and is granted the request on payment of a certain price. The man dies of consumption and in due time the woman's young son shows traces of the same disease, a fact that, combined with others more conclusive, arouses the husband's suspicions. The wife confesses the nature of the price she paid and is driven from home with her son, leaving the husband with their little daughter for a companion. After scenes of quite genuine pathos a reconciliation is effected whereby the home life is resumed on a basis of a mutual forgiveness and understanding.

Sincerity of expression characterizes the performances of Paula Shay and Everett Butterfield, and Kittens Reichert makes a very appealing little girl. The picture was well staged and sharply photographed.

"Iris" and "A Welsh Singer"

Hepworth Shows Two Notable Productions—They Are Adaptations from Pinero Play and Allen Raine Novel.

TWO notable productions from the studio of the Hepworth Manufacturing Company, Ltd., of London, England, were shown to the trade on Wednesday, December 15. The two subjects are the vanguard of many others from the same source slated to follow. If those to come match in all-around quality the subjects shown Wednesday the position of Hepworth pictures in the American market should be secure.

rons of American picture theaters will be charmed by the personality of Miss Alma Taylor, who, with high skill and unusual acting intelligence, carries the name role in this adaptation of the play by Sir Arthur Pinero. Henry Ainley is Maldonado, the man of wealth, who devotes his great ingenuity as well as his money to winning Iris, with her affection if possible, but without it if necessary. Stewart Rome is Trenwith, who loves Iris as she loves him, but who lacks means to provide for her in comfort let alone luxury.

"Iris" is a tragedy of the soul, of the soul of a woman continually surrounded by circumstances that impel her to violate her keen sense of honor; her love of the material things to which she has been accustomed and her lack of equipment with which penniless to fight the world combine to aid in the compromise of her conscience; to her it is the obvious action to make use of the checkbook Maldonado persistently places within reach, preferable to bear present ills than "fly to others" that must be worse. Women may sympathize with Iris; men will pity her.

Mr. Ainley's characterization of Maldonado has great strength. Singularly enough, censurable as are the tactics of the Portuguese, Maldonado never entirely alienates the sympathy. It is a tribute to Mr. Ainley's naturalness, to his magnetism, and to the red-blooded persistence with which he imbues his interpretation that this is so.

Cecil Hepworth is the producer of "Iris." Mr. Hepworth has made much use of restraint in the 5,300 feet the subject comprises. It may be the elimination of a few hundred feet will sharpen two or three spots with benefit to the action. However, this is a minor matter and likewise debatable. What stands out is the production as a whole. Many of the backgrounds are of the Windermere lakes, in Northern England—a location of rare beauty. The photographer has added to the picturesqueness of his lakes and mountains by the artistry with which he has placed his camera. He brings to us a rare bit of Old England. The laboratory by its judicious tinting has enhanced and supplemented his work.

"Iris" holds the interest even as it divides in turn the sympathies among the three principals. There are times when it moves. For instance, the visit of Trenwith returned from his successful battle with fortune in the wilds of Canada only to find his fiancee in an apartment financed by Maldonado; or the reconciliation of the two lovers on the beach, where Iris had gone on self-destruction bent after Maldonado had thrown her out.

"A Welsh Singer."

In a "Welsh Singer," the five-part subject adapted from the novel by Allen Raine, Florence Turner shines with her old brilliance. And a splendid medium she has, too, through which to shine. The tale is located in the Welsh hills, and it is easy to believe it has been photographed there. It is a story as strong as it is simple, one that stirs much and always interests deeply. Its beginning is among the herders of sheep. Its ending is the reunion of two childhood lovers whose paths cross after long separation, during which time each has succeeded—the man as a sculptor, the woman as a singer. "A Welsh Singer" is wholesome romance with a modicum of villainy.

Miss Turner is Mifanwy, the shepherdess, happy to tend the Squire's flock for a penny a day. Henry Edwards is Ieuan, the lad raised by Mifanwy's parents from the day when, as an infant, he was found in the highway beside the body of a woman. Mifanwy, at the crest of a hill, her figure outlined against the sky, sings Ieuan, with her as a model, works in clay. The statuette is responsible for Ieuan being taken under the protection of a patron. Before he goes to the city he learns his father is the squire.

There is a wealth of incident in the story. While by no means is it gray in color, there are not many lighter touches. It is life, in aspect a bit stern perhaps, but progressing steadily to better days.

Those situations near the denouement where Mifanwy is not recognized by Ieuan may strain the credulity a bit, but the novelist may be forgiven much more than this. It is a hypothesis on which he builds consistently and with dramatic force.

The direction is skillful. It is said Mr. Trimble, who has heretofore directed Miss Turner, gives Mr. Edwards the credit for it. The acting is excellent. Several of the cast stand out. Campbell Gullan portrays the circus man in love with Mifanwy, who later sacrifices his life for her. It is a good interpretation of a most likable character. Then there are Malcolm Cherry, the squire, and the music master. The circus scenes brought hundred of persons into the field of the camera and they were well marshalled. There were thrills in the fire in the theater. These spectacular incidents are always closely allied to the main theme. They are naturally a part of the story, not kicked into it.

To sum up, "A Welsh Singer" is a strong story, and it is well played, well directed, and well photographed.

nations intriguing against each other on the screen are aligned quite different from the present constellations in Europe.

There is much that is excellent in this play and the general average is high. The types of the various contending nationalities are chosen with great skill—they all look to the manner born. The Englishman is not the least successful type, and he enlists the sympathy of the audience from the start. Theodore Roberts is the Russian, and he has shown what he can do with such a part in his splendid impersonation of the Russian

Grand Duke in "The Man From Home." There are plenty of thrills and many tense situations, and never for an instant does the director depart from the probabilities. The feature is singularly free from padding.

The possibilities of the California landscape again come into play in this production, and it really took an expert to tell that this was not the famous Monte Carlo on the Blue Coast. The background looked exactly like the road from Nice to the famous gambling hell.

Mr. Roberts had excellent support, the cast being well balanced and working together with intelligence and obvious enthusiasm and sincerity.

"Bondwomen"

A Domestic Photoplay of Commanding Interest in Five Parts by George Kleine, with Miss Maude Fealy in a Strong Emotional Role and a Capable Cast.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

WITH an appeal as wide as the world in which civilized women live, "Bondwomen," a photodrama of home life, in five parts, by George Kleine, gives fine promise of success and popularity. In addition to the wide appeal of the theme one cannot fail to be impressed that interest is considerably heightened by the art and talent displayed in the production. There is sustained dramatic strength throughout and several stirring climaxes. Moreover, the sidelights on the underworld, in which some of the characters move at times, show us that life in respectable surroundings is only a small fractional part of the sum of human existence and experience; also that life in the slums is hideous and horrible, and that it is seldom, if ever, redeemed except by influences from without.

Scene from "Bondwomen" (Kleine-Edison).

The sceens showing the resorts of the unhappy victims of the cocaine habit and of other drugs are most realistic. The attack on Belle Jordan by Snowdrop, instigated by a drug-poisoned brain and frenzied jealousy, could not be more faithfully depicted in real life. The culmination of the frenzy, which is reached by the blinding of Ned Ellis—the only link in the photoplay that connects the slums with respectability, unless it be good David Powers, who has devoted his life to discover a remedy for the drug habit—is a powerful scene, and, followed by that showing the raiding of the dive by the police, creates a revulsion and a nervous shrinking very closely akin to that which would result from viewing the real.

But it must be remembered that these are only sidelight glimpses along the run of the main story, which has to do with domestic infelicity in a home of refinement, where the master of the house attempts to wear both petticoats and trousers. With this master, Dr. Hugh Ellis, there is no place for the queen of his home. He carries the purse and insists on paying the household bills, and on his good wife asking him for money when she needs it. Needless to say, this practice leads to the humiliation of Norma, his wife, on more than one occasion, and finally to rebellion on her part and to serious unhappiness for both of them.

The part of Norma offers fine opportunity to Miss Maude Fealy, a well known and favorite screen star. Norma, in the early scenes, is shown as a docile, unobtrusive, good-natured young wife, who dotes on her only child, Roy, and who is inclined to look up to her lord and master, Dr. Hugh. But the turning point for the worm comes; still the lord and master, while much perturbed, continues his course—not with great joy, however. When Norma is taxed with being unfaithful to her husband by that worthy himself, through the lying of his drug-addicted brother, Ned, Norma, in the person of Miss Fealy, becomes innocence, strength and defiance personified. It is only when the brutal husband tears at her heartstrings by unmercifully punishing her child, Roy, that the mother confesses to a guilt that is not hers. That scene where Norma begs piteously outside the locked door, through which the screams of her boy wring her heart with anguish, is one of fine emotional strength. Indeed, throughout the impersonation. Miss Fealy never strikes a note in behavior or action that disillusionizes the spectator that she is not Norma herself.

John Sainpolis is a worthy opposite in the part of Dr. Ellis. He is masterful to the point of cruelty, and afterwards contriteness to the depths of humility. David Power, the benefactor of drug fiends and a close friend of the Ellis family, is manfully represented by David Landau. Harry Knowles is happy in the role of Professor Bowe, Norma's father, and Harmon McGregory is so artful in depicting Ned Ellis, the drug victim, that he creates abhorrence in the mind of the spectator. Mr. McGregor has remarkable facial control. His face is a study in the scene where Ned Ellis is confessing his wrongdoing to his brother, the Doctor. Miss Iva Shepard as Belle Jordan, the redeemed drug slave of the underworld, rings true to one's judgment. In strong contrast is the Snowdrop of Miss Mildred Gregory, a characterization that seems the epitome of underworld life that has neither hope nor desire for the good. Little Maurice Stewart is a winsome boy in the part of Roy Ellis, and Miss Shirley De Me as Mary, the Ellis kitchenmaid, furnishes amusement in her spats with the butcher's boy and other boys.

The release date was December 15, through Kleine-Edison service.

"The Senator"

Drama of Washington Life with Charles J. Ross in the Title Role—Released by Equitable.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

AUDIENCES that enjoyed "The Gentleman From Missouri" will find "The Senator" equally to their liking. The two pictures are not to be compared in plot substance, rather in their general tone, for the scenes of both are laid in Washington and most of the characters are drawn from governmental circles. Joseph A. Golden, dirctor for the Triumph Film corporation, the concern responsible for the production in question, may be congratulated upon his choice of locations and the correctness of the interiors, all contributing materially to the pleasing impression left by a wholesome, entertaining story.

The romance, conceived by Sydney Rosenfeld, author of the scenario, is engagingly handled by Charles J. Ross, in the character of Senator Rivers, and Constance Molineux, as the daughter of an aged man who for twenty years has tried unsuccessfully to have a claim recognized. Mr. Ross appears much as he does on the stage, giving a performance marked by dignity and poise, whereas Miss Molineux makes a likable partner in the love passages. Ben Graham supplies a natural character sketch as Silas Denman. The foreign count, employed in various villainies, is played by Philip Hahn according to melodramatic conventions, and for the rest, the cast was judiciously selected, with Thomas Tracy in the role of the Secretary of State, Gene Luneska as his foolish wife, and Dixie Compton as a vivacious and resourceful young widow.

Scene from "The Senator" (Triumph).

Much of the opening reel is devoted to the introduction of the characters and a clear presentation of the conditions out of which the story is to be developed. Once in a while the action is interrupted to permit the showing of Washington scenes that will give the picture atmosphere. Nor is there need to find fault on this score, for the views are interesting enough to justify themselves. Presently the story quickens, become more dramatic, and in the last two reels realizes its possibilities. There is plenty of suspense in the situation confronting Senator Rivers in the last hours of the session of the Senate, when so much depends upon the passage of the Denman claim. Among scenes deserving of particular mention are those in the senate chamber and at the embassy ball, where the count plans an elopement with the wife of the Secretary of State.

"Black Fear"

The Drug Evil Is Made the Subject of a Strong Rolfe-Metro Drama Produced by John Noble.

LEST the producers of this five-part drama be considered sensational alarmists, there is a foreword stating that the story was suggested by statistics on the drug evil gathered in a number of American cities. It is fair to assume that "Black Fear" is fiction with a solid background of fact. The tragedy it presents probably is no more dreadful than hundreds which actually occur each year, all attributable to the use of drugs. The Rolfe company selected a live issue and made it the theme of a thoroughly dramatic picture that escapes becoming a preachment because of a skillfully developed and human story acted with a quantity of emotional feeling.

In the opening scene we have a colorful vision of Hades, where Satan laments the lack of new tools for working evil in the world. Cocaine, impersonated by an attractive young woman, offers to do his bidding. That ends the allegory, for the scene fades into an entirely realistic picture of two messenger boys seated on a park bench, where they have stopped to stimulate their weary bodies with cocaine. They are arrested and in less than five minutes of screen action we are entering the intricacies of an engrossing drama, in which cocaine is the unseen evil influence, dragging first one character, then another, into a pit from which the only outlet is death.

Young boys in the employ of a messenger service company are presented as the most pitiable of the helpless victims of a nefarious trade; but in their downfall others are concerned—the two sisters of Billy Ellsmere, the judge of the court to which the boys are taken; also the head of the concern that sanctions the distribution of cocaine among its employees, thinking thereby to keep them on edge for long hours of work. Retribution eventually comes to the hypocritical employer, and as the outcome of a dramatic trial scene Lillian Ellsmere is acquitted on the charge of murder. The picture profits by a number of forceful incidents, always occupying a necessary place in the progress of the story, and the acting is of even merit, with Grace Elliston, Grace Valentine, Edward Brennan and Paul Everton in conspicuous roles. "Black Fear" will perform a valuable mission if it warns mothers of their dangers their children must be guarded against in large cities.

For more than a year the railroad melodramas starring Helen Holmes and produced by J. P. McGowan have been before the public of this country, of Europe and of Australia, and there has been no decline in their popularity. The Signal Corporation was dealing with known quantities when it engaged Miss Holmes and Director McGowan to continue, in slightly different form, the type of photoplay that they know so well how to handle. Judging from the first two chapters, "Helen's Race With Death" and "The Winning Jump," each week will bring its quota of sensations, supplemented by good stories offering opportunities for contrast in characters and environment.

In writing the scenario, Frank Hamilton Spearman did well in making Miss Holmes the daughter of a railroad president, while her sweetheart, a fireman on a locomotive, is at the other end of the social scale. With these two characters as the foundation of the plot, it is possible to develop thrilling railroad stories and at the same time introduce a society element—elaborate residences, well-groomed people, and the like—all of value in producing effective contrasts. If Miss Holmes is pretty when clad in a shirtwaist and skirt, she is doubly so in the chic costumes worn by the daughter of the wealthy General Holmes.

The opening chapter starts at the very beginning of things. It shows how the little daughter of the railroad president is saved by a boy of about her own age from being run over by a miniature train on a fair grounds. And the ambition of this boy is to become a railroad engineer. In later years he is fireman on a runaway freight train that would have collided with the president's special save for the heroic action of Helen. After a wild ride on horseback she jumps the horse off an open drawbridge and swims a river that she may reach a switch in time to change the course of the freight. The leap into the river is the most exciting thrill in this chapter; but throughout the suspense is maintained at a high pitch. The collision of the freight train and cars on a siding is sufficiently startling.

In chapter two the flirtation between Helen and Storm, now an engineer, is deftly handled by Miss Holmes and Leo Maloney in scenes preparatory to a robbery and the thrilling race of two locomotives on parallel tracks. While the engines are moving at high speed, Helen jumps from one to the other and is the means of arresting the thieves. With good photoplay stories as a foundation, and all the attractions of a carefully produced, intelligently acted picture, the first installments of "The Girl and The Game" are eminently satisfactory.

"Beyond All Is Love"

A Three-Reel Photoplay Written by Daniel Carson Goodman and Released on the Lubin Unit Program by the General Film Company.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE thesis of Daniel Carson Goodman's three-reel photoplay is the exposure of the drug evil. The protagonist has accomplished his purpose in a thorough manner and, what is more to his credit as a photoplaywright, told an interesting screen story in the proper dramatic form. The picture opens with a prologue. Stuyvesant Hardy, an opium slave, neglects his wife and child until the death of the unhappy woman recalls him to his senses. His son goes through life without any apparent craving for the drug, but when the grandson of Hardy reaches manhood and after an accident is given morphine, the desire for the narcotic is awakened and the young man is nearly ruined by the drug. The devotion of his mother and father and the girl he loves saves him, but only after a long and fiercely fought battle with his grandsire's legacy.

Mr. Goodman has seen fit to employ local politics as one of the motives of the drama. An unscrupulous ward leader tries to force the elder Hardy to do his bidding by pandering to the weakness of the son. In the main the foregoing plot has been built up to conform with the plans made and approved for the guidance of screen dramatists, and Clay M. Greene, the producer, has been mindful of the scenario's requirements, except that the lack of caution displayed by big John Kerry when shadowing young Hardy comes dangerously near weakening several scenes.

Francis Joyner has the most difficult part in the drama. He showed himself equal to the task and succeeded in indicating the terrible effects of the drug upon his mind and body without appearing repulsive or losing the sympathy of his fellow creatures. The gratitude of Mr. Goodman is also due Helen Greene, Carrie Reynolds, Peter Lang, Eleanor Barry and Walter Law, who filled the remaining roles.

Mary Anderson Finishes "Cal Marvin's Wife."

News comes from the Western Vitagraph Company that Mary Anderson, the young Brooklyn actress, who went West to play leads has finished her first feature picture. It is entitled "Cal Marvin's Wife" and will be released shortly.

Two Lasky Features

"The Cheat," a Production of Extraordinary Merit, Featuring Fannie Ward—"The Unknown," with Lou-Tellegen, Has Spectacular Merit.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

FEATURES like this one put the whole industry under obligations to the Lasky company. On every conceivable test this picture shows a hundred per cent. Indeed, the feature is of such extraordinary merit as to call for the highest term of praise.

The plot is simple. This always constitutes special merit in a film story. It is worked out rapidly with that rise of interest which is the mark of every successful dramatic composition. The climax is overpowering. As one of the men that sat behind me in the Strand Theater said, "I would like to be in that mob."

Like all really strong stories, that of "The Cheat" can be told in a few words. A young, extravagant wife, a social butterfly, is playing with fire. In her craze for fine clothes she gambles with money entrusted to her by a Red Cross society. She loses the money. Her husband knows nothing of the desperate plight of his wife. Even if he knew, however, he would not have been able to help her. His investments had stripped him of ready cash. With visions of horrible disgrace haunting her mind, she is offered help from a strange and dangerous quarter. A rich Japanese who has found entree into the social set, and who has paid much attention to the young wife in the absence of the busy husband, comes forward and says he will give her the money and ward off the impending exposure "upon conditions." In her despair the young wife gives an almost unconscious and quite mechanical consent, and in the daze that has seized her she takes the check from the Japanese. Here Fate intervenes. The troubled wife learns from her husband that he had been successful in his operations and that he is now rich.

"Does that mean I can have ten thousand dollars right now?" asks the agonized wife in a frenzy of joy mixed with fear. She gets the money and then goes to the Jap's home to return his treacherous gift. And now the beastliness in the Oriental's nature leaps forth. Not only will be not release her from her bargain, but he means to be paid at once. I shall not attempt to describe what follows—words seem altogether too feeble for that. In the struggle the Jap sears the woman's shoulder with a red-hot iron to mark her as his own by right of bargain and purchase. Lying on the floor and steeling herself for the next attack and still writhing under the pain of the burning flesh, the woman seizes a revolver and fires it at her torturer. The bullet hits him and he falls. The woman escapes. A moment later the husband enters and finds the Jap, covered with blood, gripping convulsively a hank of hair. He sees other proof of his wife's visit. The police are alarmed. The Jap is asked who shot him, but before he can open his mouth the husband accuses himself of the crime.

The wife hastens to the cell of her husband and confesses all. He forbids her to speak. Now follows the trial. Never before have I seen a more gripping climax. It is built up with exquisite skill. The accused husband and the guilty wife sit side by side. The court room is crowded with spectators, following with feverish interest every new turn in the trial. We see the jury, thoughtful, tense, nervous. The Jap takes the stand, impassive, mysterious, but convincing. The verdict is guilty. The trembling wife is no longer able to restrain herself. Her passion rising superior to all the form and severity of court procedure, she leaps upon the witness stand, a fearful and unconquerable resolve in her eyes. The next two minutes the audience is as spellbound as the men and women in the court room. She tells far more by her looks and gestures than by words of what has happened between her and the Oriental, and when the audience seems on the verge of hysteria the woman tears the dress from the seared spot on her shoulder. It was like the spark thrown into a keg of powder. The wrath of the audience bursts forth with elemental fury and there ensues a scene that for tenseness and excitement has never been matched on stage or screen.

Space bids me be brief. I cannot, however, omit words of unqualified praise for Fanny Ward, whose impersonation of the social butterfly with the singed wings was a masterly performance. The lighting effects must be mentioned, too. They are beyond all praise in their art, their daring and their originality. There are those deft and subtle touches that we find all the Lasky pictures possess—only here they crowd upon one another. What a delicate but powerful effect was the omission of the bars in the prison scene. The shadow of the bars, the sombre light, the bent head of the prisoner silhouetted against the bare wall—this is but one of the numerous happy touches. "The Cheat" is worth advertising to the limit. It is one feature in a hundred.

"The Unknown."

THE spectacular features in this play and its wonderful atmosphere will go a long ways toward redeeming a thin plot and the somewhat disappointing performance of the star.

The spectacular features consist of the wild-man hunts in the Arabian deserts and in fighting between the men of the Foreign Legion and marauding Bedouins. The Foreign Legion is the background of the story and it is a romantic and unique background. There is, too, the weirdness and the everlasting mystery of Egypt. Lasky art is conspicuous in the settings and in the direction, but the bareness of the plot recurs constantly like an ill-digested morsel of food. An audience not captious enough to look for dramatic values will find unmixed delight in the play. Theodore Roberts, who has a most difficult part, does a good deal with it, but he cannot make it go over with his usual smoothness and sincerity. The star is not very well suited for his part. He seems conscious of it in the many evidences of crudeness in his work.

The suspense was well maintained in the early portions of the play, but when the final denouement comes it leaves a critical audience somewhat disappointed.

All the settings were superb, the light effects were splendid throughout and the general support of the star was good and at times excellent.

"The Boob's Victory"

Robert Leonard Featured in Two-Reel Gold Seal Production, Playing Part in Which He Is at His Best.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

ROBERT LEONARD in this offering, written and produced by himself, returns to the type of characterization by which he is perhaps best known. He has done numerous other parts with distinction, but he fairly shines as the boob.

Scene from "The Boob's Victory" (Pathe).

The humor he infuses into this role will cure almost any grouch.

In this particular offering the boob is passing through the stage of young manhood in which he desires to be a detective. He spends odd moments on the farm, where he is employed, studying a book which tells all about it. He is so absorbed in this that he entirely neglects other business and Farmer Higgins, his employer, becomes so disgusted that he runs him around the place with a pitchfork.

What follows is obvious enough, but fully as laughable as the opening scenes. The boob becomes waiter in a swell summer hotel, where he learns that a number of jewel thefts have occurred. Two professional detectives, a man and a girl, are already on the job.

The crisis comes one evening during a card game, when the lady crook goes upstairs and makes a cleanup. She climbs down a fire escape with the professional detectives vainly endeavoring to locate her. She is joined by her pals and would have escaped but for the boob, who turns up in time to hold up the thieves in a highly theatrical and satisfactory manner.

The cast includes Ella Hall, Kingsley Benedict, Marc Robbins and others.

"The Reform Candidate"

Macklyn Arbuckle Is the Star of a Pallas Picture Photoplay, Released on Paramount Program.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

LOCAL politics occupy a prominent place in the story of "The Reform Candidate," the four-reel photoplay written by Edgar A. Guest and Macklyn Arbuckle, and released on the Paramount program, but it is the heart interest, the sacrifice that Art Hoke is glad to make for the woman he loves, that gives the drama its grip on the emotions of a body of spectators. Dramatically considered, "The Reform Candidate" is simple of plot and reveals no situation of great intensity or power. A stolen baby sounds one of the most appealing notes in the play; and, at the final picture, big-hearted Art Hoke is seen clasping to his breast the dolls of his foster child, now restored to her parents. He has brought happiness to those he loves best, and is content. That portion of the story telling how the political boss opposes the reform candidate for mayor, then saves him from financial ruin because he is the husband of Mary Grandell, his old sweetheart, is not without interest; but the little child, who is stolen by the halfwitted "Looney Jim" and left in Hoke's home because the poor simpleton knows that Art is fond of babies, shares the center of the picture with the star himself. The subsequent career of the child, her growth to womanhood and restoration to the arms of her mother, is made the dominant motive of the play. Just why the baby's parents did not succeed in tracing her at once, or why Hoke failed to find her father and mother, is not explained by the authors.

"The Reform Candidate" was written first as a vaudeville sketch, and Macklyn Arbuckle played it over the two-a-day circuit. His performance of Art Hoke was a complete and eminently satisfactory character study at that time. His method of embodying the big-framed, quick-brained, large-hearted politician is perfectly adapted to the screen, and Mr. Arbuckle finds no difficulty in repeating in the silent drama the success achieved in the first form of the play. The picture does not call for any elaborate settings, but good judgment has been used in everything connected with its production. Charles Ruggles and Myrtle Stedman stand out prominently in the star's support, and Mary Ruby, Forrest Stanley, Malcolm Blevins and Howard Davies justify the wisdom of their selection as members of the cast.

"Heartaches"

A Four-Reel Photoplay by Daniel Carson Goodman, Released on the Lubin Unit Program.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IN VIEW of the fact that the line of demarcation has not, as yet, been drawn arbitrarily between the different grades of photoplays, "Heartaches," the Lubin four-reel Unit Program drama, is not easily classified. In the days when the popular price drama of the spoken stage was in its high renown, the plot, scenes and characters of Mr. Goodman's photoplay would have made choice material for the typewriter of a middle-class dramatist. The "olash," which the highbrow analyst claims is the vital spark of the drama, exists in "Heartaches"—the deeds of the villain makes that an absolute certainty. Class distinction, also, has not been permitted to impede the fancy of the author, and the "long arm of conscience" is encouraged in its endeavor to surround the plot completely. Like the works of the grade of dramatists just mentioned, it merely scratches the surface of things, but furnishes excellent entertainment for that large majority of humans whose emotions are "easier to be played upon than a pipe."

The story follows the career of a young girl of lowly fortune but good breeding, who makes a bad match, leaves her husband, finds employment in a department store, gains the friendship of a daughter of wealth, is sought in marriage by the brother of her new friend, learns later that her husband is the accepted suitor of this same young woman, succeeds in unmaking him, and becomes the wife of the worthier man.

Scene from "Heartaches" (Lubin).

A more consistent blackguard than the villain of "Heartaches" has never been put into a photoplay, and Francis Joyner, who plays Will Cairns, does not attempt to soften the character in the slightest degree, but carries out the intent of the screen dramatist to the very letter. June Dayo displays feeling and histrionic ability as Kate Merry, and Arthur Forbes, Helen Greene, Eleanor Barry and Jessie Terry sustain the remaining parts, to the picture's evident advantage.

Jack Harvey Starts "Superman."

Jack Harvey of the Imp-Universal Coytesville studio has started on the production of a five-reel photoplay of political intrigue, "Superman," written by the Universal scenario editor, William H. Lippert, the theme being an incident based on a recent political scandal which occupied the attention of the New York Legislature some years ago. In this picture Jos. Gerrard plays the role of the Governor of the state of New York.

"Who Killed Joe Merrion."

THE theme of this production, a Vitagraph Broadway Star Feature entitled "Who Killed Joe Merrion," while not entirely new, was rich with possibilities. A stern judge banishes his dissolute son from the family circle. In his habitual sternness the judge is at times too severe on prisoners arraigned before him. One such prisoner is accused of murder and through the charge of the judge is found guilty by the jury. As a matter of fact the man is innocent. There does not seem to be any one who can reasonably be accused of the killing. Indeed all the indications point to death by heart disease. However, there are suspicious circumstances, and upon investigation these point to the son of the judge as the probable or at least possible criminal. The judge is stern enough to hand his own son over to justice on evidence that really seems woefully defective.

Scene from "Who Killed Joe Merrion" (Vitagraph).

Settings and atmosphere are up to the best Vitagraph standards, the acting leaves little to be desired, but the story is inherently weak and is unskillfully developed. It is likewise depressing.

The splendid detail work and the great Vitagraph facilities help considerably toward making us forget these defects.

"The Wanderers."

HERE is a very pretty story in the best Vitagraph style. The plot is simple and can be followed very easily. This alone is a point of merit in these days when the complicated plot is the rule rather than the exception.

The background of the story is reminiscent of all the sweetness and beauty of the charming village as it is described by Scene from "The Wanderers" (Vitagraph).

the poets. Such attractive environment is something that motion picture audiences always appreciate. The scene shifts from the old village to far off Athabasca Landing. The blacksmith who had been in love with the rustic school teacher has unjustly suspected her and has wandered into distant parts to forget his heart ache. The atmosphere of the camp, the types of men found in such camps are visualized with rare skill. The end is very satisfactory to the audience. Most unexpectedly it develops that the stranger whom the blacksmith had seen in his sweetheart's embrace was her brother. Finding how groundless had been his jealousy the blacksmith is overcome with remorse, but is quickly forgiven by his sweetheart. The thrills in the story come with the work and the adventures of the blacksmith in the camp.

The acting was very good throughout. William Duncan gave a fine impersonation of the likable village blacksmith, while Mary Ruby gave a splendid account of herself in the evidently congenial part of the village school teacher. For his protection of an old camp follower from the brutality of the camp bully the blacksmith falls into a rare piece of good luck, and as the story comes to an end we not only see bride and bridegroom happy, but assured of a very substantial nest egg.

"happy ending" can be dispensed with for the sake of pure artistry.

Like the most successful novels of to-day, "The Despoiler" aims at something—the day of the aimless story has passed and gone, never to return in this civilization—and the aim is so good that it makes a hit. One of the nauseating horrors of Europe's terrible convulsion, the despoiling of captive women, such as is going on at this moment in the new theaters of war, is the object hit, hit hard, not merely tapped. A high tension is worked up through a command reluctantly given by an officer of refinement to a troop of barbarians under his command, in which he unwittingly involves his adored only daughter. The main situation is a tremendous one, and it is intensified by that essence of the photodrama, psychology. Straight through, from beginning to end. "The Despoiler" is one of the strongest features yet shown on the Triangle program.

"Don Quixote."

"Don Quixote," with De Wolf Hopper in the title role, is a production of the highest order, showing throughout appreciation of a romance that has warmed the human heart for three centuries, and a delicate picture sense in such charming combination that the famous story is told better even than when Gustave Dore illumined it with his wondrous imaginative drawings. The photodrama so successfully illustrates the masterpiece of Cervantes that it must eventually serve as an educational release, yet it is entertaining in itself, a veritable pictured story, its only fault being a tendency to overplay certain scenes and thus deprive the movement of swift continuity. At least one whole reel can be removed in bits, especially those unnecessary fades and dissolves where no mental operation is involved. Most of the editing can be done near the conclusion to the advantage of the whole product.

De Wolf Hopper is amazing. All that he has done on the stage will die with him, but his impersonation of Don Quixote in the Fine Arts film will assure his immortality—it is a performance without a flaw, an ideal. He is well supported, but only the Dulcinea of Fay Tincher stands out from the generally good cast—her personality is altered, but it cannot be suppressed—she is a born comedienne. More carefully edited "Don Quixote," the photodrama, may rival the printed story in the matter of enduring popularity.

mold, indeed all the idols that are worshipped in the city pass her by and like the fabled salamander who defied the living flame she comes forth from her ordeals unscathed.

The first reel gave great promise. It looked as if the director had indeed grasped the idea of the novel and as if he were capable of making it live on the screen. Even at the end of the second reel this hope was very much alive. After that I am sorry to say there came a distinct decline. The plot ran into needless complications, many episodes were entirely without the general frame of the story and others that seemed more pertinent were as it looked to me unduly prolonged.

Nothing can be said against the cast. The heroine is a charming young girl, who measured up fully to the requirements of her part. She remained to the end "The Salamander," though she did not pass through an awful lot of temptations. She was very well supported. Many an all-star cast has done no better.

"The Salamander" is a story that will make a distinct appeal to women. As women form a large part of most picture audiences I do not have to point to the conclusion. There is some good double-exposure work and some that is only fair. The photography is not always of even quality.

Frank Borage, who directs the picture, also plays the role of "Rocky" Scott, whose speculative instinct causes him to gamble on every occasion, even to staking his pile against "that gal o' yourn" with Kentucky.

This incident, which is the main pivot of the story, takes place in a saloon where the faro table is one of the chief attractions. Having won, Rocky takes the girl and the money and makes away with both, holding his would-be assailants off at the point of a gun.

The story is a singularly human one, and has been produced in a manner that leaves no room for moral objections, inasmuch as that in the end the better nature of Rocky triumphs. When the two men have met and fought it out and Kentucky loses his life thereby, Rocky offers to marry the girl "proper;" and the girl, relieved of a self-assumed duty toward the man she feared, discovers that she is in love with Rocky.

The dancehall girl who loved rather than feared Kentucky adds a bit of color to the story. This role is played effectively by Lizette Thorne. The production is an especially attractive one, because it reminds us of the tales we've heard told of those pioneer days.

"A Prince of Yesterday"

A Beautiful Hand-Colored Gaumont Company—The Story of a Young Prince's Romance.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IT IS NOT a common occurrence for a moving picture subject, as beautiful in conception, color and photography to appear on the market. "A Prince of Yesterday" is all of this and a good deal more. It is a romance of the old days, back possibly in the fifteenth century or thereabout; is purely fictional in theme, and has been staged against the most beautiful settings that one could well imagine. The charm of ancient castles, magnificent parks, and much of the beauty of nature has been given to this three-reel production.

The characters of the play have been well cast, and the story, although a romance, has a delicate vein of comedy running through it. This has to do, by the way, merely with the situation, and not with the business of the play.

The story tells of the ruse of two noble houses to bring about a marriage of love between the princess of one and the prince of another, both heirs to the respective dynasties from which they hail. The princess, young and exceedingly beautiful, has been placed within the walls of a convent. The prince, tired of the conventionalities of the court, is prevailed upon by a friend and agent of the royal household to go out into the world and seek his fortune, and incidentally his affinity. The friend offers to act as his guide, and arranges matters so that the prince, apparently by accident, comes upon the maid chosen for him, his first glimpse of her being over the wall of the convent.

The royal pair meet and fall in love, and eventually elope. This is, of course, quite in line with the desires of the family. The incidents of the play have been nicely arranged, and really constitute a comedy-drama.

The production is an unusually fine one, and appears on the program of the Mutual Film corporation.

"Her Mother's Secret"

A Fox Melodrama That Follows Familiar Lines—Ralph Kellard and Dorothy Green Featured.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

BEFORE this five-part melodrama has ever approached a conclusion it is easy to guess pretty accurately the nature of the mother's secret. "Coming events cast their shadow before" a little too plainly for an audience to experience surprise on learning that the romance between a fisher maiden and a society youth, who goes to the seashore for his health, is destined to end in tragedy. It could not be otherwise, and the only uncertainty concerns the manner in which the inevitable parting will be introduced. The audience knows that the lovers are half brother and sister and that sooner or later they will be advised of the impossibility of their union. This having been accomplished, it remains for the girl to show how much she takes the affair to heart by wandering off a rock into the sea and drowning herself. Presumably the young man returns home and lives to love again.

Although the last two reels are somwhat lacking in suspense, for the reasons noted, they are easily the best in the picture, partially because of the beautifully picturesque seaside locations and partially because the two central characters are made interesting by Ralph Kellard and Dorothy Green. This part of the production is altogether more artistic than the cheap melodrama that one finds in the earlier passages of a typical Fox story. As usual, the emphasis is placed upon illegitimate sex relationships, this time the man being the chief offender. He divides his attentions between his wife and his mistress, one the mother of a little girl, the other of a boy—the children, who, when they have reached maturity, meet and fall in love.

From a technical standpoint the production was well handled by Director Frederick Thompson, and the cameraman deserves credit for the attractive scenic effects in the last two reels.

"Blade O' Grass

The Woods of Maine and Scenes of City Life Furnish Backgrounds for Three-Reel Edison Photodrama.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE have been numerous examples of the possibilities of plot and of extreme cleverness in acting when the "double" is employed. One of these days a photoplaywright will hit upon the scheme of adapting the "Two Dromios" motive to the screen, by using two actors who are the exact counterpart of each other. In this way the "double" can be doubled and new and intricate bewilderments added to the situations. Should the scenario call for the services of actors of the female sex, Viola Dana and Leonie Flugrath should be sent for without delay. These two sisters bear a remarkable resemblence to each other in feature, method and skill in acting. Following in the footsteps of her more famous sister, little Miss Flugrath has won her way to the front ranks by virtue of her own merits, her work in "Blade o' Grass" having the same charm and sincerity as that exhibited in the screen creations of the star in "The Stoning."

The photoplay now under discussion is a comedy-drama of considerable worth. Its aim is to tell a pleasing story in an entertaining manner, introduce a number of easily recognized types and send those in search of mental stimulus to another shop.

After being deserted by his wife, the father of the heroine leaves his fine home in the city and hides himself and his little daughter in the Maine woods. Here, the girl grows up to be a child of Nature, is discovered by a handsome stranger, goes to the city to live with her wealthy aunt and shocks that good lady by her unconventionality. She returns to the woods, is saved from a terrible danger by the handsome stranger and, as the erudite Edison publicity promoter gracefully puts it, her rescuer is compelled to bow before the mandates of love. The forest scenes and the glimpses of life in a fashionable domicile are reproduced with commendable fidelity, and (to indulge in a metaphoric flight of our own) little Miss Flugrath flits through the picture with the airy grace and innocent fascination of a feathered denizen of her woodland home. Pat O'Malley, Charles Sutton, Mabel Dwight, Mrs. Wallace Erskine, Grace Morrison, Guido Colucci and T. Tamamoto bring the average of the acting up to a high level of excellence.

THE MOMENT BEFORE DEATH (Lubin), Dec. 13.—The grewsome strength of an Edgar Allen Poe tale is found in the plot of this one-reel drama, written by Julian Lamothe. The construction of the play is novel, the scenes showing the consequences of a man's insane and unjustified jealousy. Melvin Mayo, Adda Gleason and L. C. Shumway are forceful members of the old triangle.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 99, 1915 (Selig), Dec. 13.—Views of the British submarines interned in this country until the war ends; fire ruins summer resort at Catalina Islands, Cal.; closing scenes at the Panama-Pacific Exposition; floral tributes paid to Italy's dead heroes, Rome; steeple jacks paint highest smokestack, Washington; valuable dogs ride in private cars across continent; periscope hat, Chicago; No-license parade, Lowell, Mass.; Bench Show, San Francisco; new device makes street cleaning easier, New York, are the items in this number.

BENJAMIN BUNTER, BOOK-AGENT (Vitagraph), Dec. 13.—This one-reel comedy-drama is an unpretentious but agreeable little photoplay, with an interesting plot and a number of cleverly drawn characters. W. A. Tremayne, the author, has cause to be grateful to Courtlandt Van Deusen, the director, and to Ethel Corcoran, William Dangman, Templer Saxe and William Shea, the members of the cast.

ALMOST A KING (Kalem), Dec. 14.—"The Hoboes' Dream" would be another fitting title for this one-reel burlesque comedy. William Beaudine, who wrote and produced the picture, has let his imagination run riot and the result is a string of farcial situations and absurd incidents whose only mission is to arouse easily provoked laughter. Bud Duncan and Charles Inslee are the leading comics, and Ethel Teare's bright smile and wholesome personality is a pleasant feature of the reel.

THE GREAT DETECEIVE (Lubin), Dec. 14.—The character of the amateur detective in this one-reel farce affords D. L. Don an excellent medium for the introduction of his comedy methods, and George Egan, Florence Williams, Patsey De Forest and James Cassady form a worthy supporting cast. The fun is broad but inoffensive—except for a piece of business connected with one person's pedal extremities and another person's sense of smell.

ON THE EAGLE TRAIL (Selig), Dec. 14.—The next best thing that Tom Mix does to riding a horse is driving a stage coach; next to that is his playing of a real love scene with humorous possibilities. The last two accomplishments are utilized in "On the Eagle Trail," a one-reel western drama, written by Cornelius Shea, and a work of merit. Victoria Forde, Joe Simkins and Sid Jordan fit snugly into the picture.

ANIMATED GROUCH CHASER (Edison), Dec. 15.—Raoul Barre has contributed two cartoons to this number of the "Animated Grouch Chaser," "The Black's Mysterious Box" and "Hicks in Nightmareland." Both are cleverly drawn and highly amusing. "The History of a Big Tree" is on the same reel. Its four hundred feet are all interesting and of educational value.

THE FABLE OF "SISTER MAE, WHO DID AS WELL AS COULD BE EXPECTED" (Essanay), Dec. 15.—"Be good and you'll be very unhappy" might properly be used as a subtitle to this George Ade fable. The reel is a good natured satire upon the value of worldly wisdom, plentifully sprinkled with sagely humorous reflections from the Ade typewriter. Betty Scott, June Keith, Charles Stine and Sydney Ainsworth are happily cast.

THE FAITH OF SONNY JIM (Vitagraph), Dec. 15.—You've guessed it! Santa Claus is the important person to whom Sonny Jim is disloyal—but only for a very short time. His faith is restored by a dream and the sight of a well stocked Christmas tree. This timely one-reel comedy was written by Frank Dazey, and Bobby Connelly doesn't miss a single point. Tefft Johnson, Mabel Kelly and other Vitagraph players are members of the cast.

CUPID ENTANGLED (Biograph), Dec. 16.—The unexpected ending of this one-reel comedy-drama assists the picture materially. An actress sets her young man to making love to another woman in order to arouse the jealousy of the other woman's former lover—and the game of make-believe goes from jest to earnest. The story is neatly put together, and well played by Claire McDowell, Alan Hale, Vola Smith and Victor Rottman. Directed by Walter Coyle.

SNAKEVILLE'S CHAMPION (Essanay), Dec. 16.—Ben Turpin is the loud noise in this one-reel comedy and the winner of a wrestling match that is largely a matter of funny falls. Ben's burlesque comedy is immense and he is ably seconded by Lloyd Bacon and Margaret Joslin.

WHEN THE SHOW HIT WATERTOWN (MinA), Dec. 16.—The mishaps of a fly-by-night theatrical troupe are amusingly burlesqued in this one-reel farce. The arrival in town in a boxcar, the parade to the hotel and scenes during a performance at the "Opery House" are depicted with the necessary exaggeration to insure the laugh. The acting of the cast contributes largely to the photoplay's success.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 100, 1915 (Selig), Dec. 16.—Suffrage plea carried to the steps of the Capitol; Hawiian Singers; more Peace folk sail for Europe; youngsters playing with pet animals at the Fair, San Francisco; International Trade Conference, New York; Los Angeles tuna fish industry; Democratic National Committee at Washington; ice crushing steamer Nevada, Chicago; Philippine Islanders, Venice, Cal.; winter bathing pool, Brighton Beach, N. Y.; periscope hats, Chicago; No-license parade, Lowell, Mass.; bench show, San Francisco; new device for street cleaning, New York.

THE FLOWER OF THE HILLS (Vitagraph), Dec. 16.—The history of the simple village maiden who is loved by the city chap and is tortured by the fear that her lover is ashamed of her, will always be of interest in the theater. The Frank Dazey and Edward Montague one-reel version of the story is expertly handled, and adequately acted by Carolyn Birch, Leo Delaney, Denton Vane, Louise Beaudet and Rose Tapley.

FATE (Biograph), Dec. 17.—Although this D. W. Griffith reissue is a spirited one-reel picture it has been surpassed by many of the famous director's efforts. The blowing up of the cabin is realistic to a degree, and the acting of Mae Marsh, Lionel Barrymore, Charles H. Mailes and Robert Harron does the subject justice.

BRONCHO BILLY'S MARRIAGE (Essanay), Dec. 17.—The opening scenes of this one-reel drama are laid in a dance hall out West. Broncho Billy defends an unfortunate girl; later, he marries her. As a picture of rough and ready western chivalry it fills the bill. G. M. Anderson and Marguerite Clayton are excellent as the hero and heroine.

THE SECRET MESSAGE (No. 8 of the "Ventures of Marguerite") (Kalem), Dec. 17.—A fountain pen, filled with invisible ink, is the novel means by which Marguerite emerges triumphantly from this venture. A. Van Buren Powell wrote the story. The heroine is again made the victim of a gang of kidnappers, but proves too clever for them. Miss Courtot, Bradley Barker, Richard Prudon, H. E. Barrows, Stella Jenno and Freeman Barnes handle the material cleverly.

SWEETER THAN REVENGE (Lubin), Dec. 17.—To paraphrase the motto of the Wolverine state: If you want a reel full of pep, book this drama! The heroine is a female "Monte Cristo," who checks off the deaths of her enemies in the proper James O'Neil manner; she also has a tussle with her rival that is equal to anything attained by Farrar or Bara in "Carmen." Decidedly, a spirited picture, vigorously played by Octavia Handworth, Rosetta Brice and other accomplished Lubinites. Clay M. Greene wrote the scenario and Percy Winter made the production.

THE DECEIVERS (Vitagraph), Dec. 17.—While the humor of this one-reel comedy is undeniable, it seems rather injudicious to show other married men and their wives how to "hold out" on each other. Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew do it most amusingly in this photoplay and both are forced to acknowledge the truth at the finish, but Paul West, who wrote the scenario, undoubtedly got his inspiration from real life.

SANTA CLAUS VERSUS CUPID (Edison), Dec. 18.—The Christmas spirit is cleverly interwoven through the plot of this one-reel comedy. Alan Crosland, the author, has made rivals for the hand of the heroine disguise themselves as Santa Claus in order to gain favor with the young lady. The reel makes a pleasant little photoplay. Grace Morrissey, Raymond McKee, William Casey, Mrs. Wallace Erskine and Mabel Dwight carry the burden of the acting.

THE WRONG TRAIN ORDER (Episode No. 58 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), Dec. 18.—A runaway train with Helen the sure-footed racing along on top of the cars to reach the emergency air brake is a situation in this one-reel drama. E. W. Matlack, the author, and James Davis, the producer, have seen to it that the action runs on a fast schedule. Robyn Adair, Clarence Burton, Franklin Hall and Billie Roy are members of Miss Gibson's crew during the run of the reel.

AN UNWILLING BURGLAR (Lubin), Dec. 18.—The gentleman who is compelled to assist a burglar rob his own home, bobs up again in this one-reel farce. Mark Swan has put new life into an old theme by force of the adroit construction of his material, and Billie Reeves's comedy methods are suited to the leading part. Carrie Reynolds, Ferdinand O'Beck, Frank Smiley, Jessie Terry and Adelaide Hayes complete the cast.

General Film Company Specials.

THE COQUETTE'S AWAKENING (Selig), Dec. 15.—The greater portion of the action in this two-reel drama, written by Will M. Hough, is occupied by allegorical illustrations of the history of true love—an experience granted to a coquettish young woman, during a dream. The different incidents are very well worked out by the director, Frank Beal, but rather more celerity of movement would improve the picture.

Kathlyn Williams, Harry De Vere, Guy Oliver and Charles Le Moyne carry the burden of the acting with ease and skill.

THE GLORY OF YOUTH (Kalem), Dec. 13.—The moral of this four-reel drama is a visualization of the world old truth: Youth should wed with Youth. The spectacle of an aged invalid married to a young and beautiful woman is not a pleasant sight. Louis B. Gardner has carried his story along with fair success for the first three reels, but the big situation in the last reel fails to convince. The hero accepts defeat with scarcely a struggle against it. Inez Bauer as Gay Raydon, the dancer, is good to look upon and acts with considerable show of ability. Robert Ellis, Walter McEwen, Nat Sack and Agnes Mapes have been properly cast.

A QUESTION OF RIGHT OR WRONG (Vitagraph), Dec. 14.—The honors that Van Dyke Brooke reaps from this three-reel drama are three-fold—as author, actor and producer. Mr. Brooke's scenario is firm and logical in plot, he plays the character of Jason Caldner with authority and fine technical dexterity, and has superintended the transferring of his photoplay to the screen with admirable skill. Maurice Costello, Leah Baird, Daniel Leighton and Edward Elkas lend material aid to the success of the picture.

DIVORCONS (Biograph), Dec. 15.—The meaning and the spirit of Victorien Sardou's famous play are preserved in this four-part adaptation, in which the chief characters are played by Gertrude Bambrick, Dell Henderson and Dave Morris. The picture is very well acted and a number of the scenes in the concluding reel are elaborately staged. Altogether this is a satisfactory adaptation of an interesting subject.

THE INNER CHAMBER (Lubin), Dec. 15.—A well produced melodrama, with a startling effect at the finish. The plot is vigorous and skilfully constructed, in the main. Melvin Mayo heads a competent cast which includes L. C. Shumway, Helen Eddy and Adda Gleason. A review of this three-reel picture appeared in the issues of Dec. 18, page 2199.

A THIEF IN THE NIGHT (Lubin), Dec. 16.—This two-reel drama, adapted and produced by George W. Terwilliger from the Red Book story of Albert Payson Terhune, has a long line of illustrious ancestry, the "Romance of a Poor Young Man'" being the most noted. The hero, it will be recalled, tries to be taken for a thief when discovered in a compromising position with a lady. The Terhune varient of the theme is skilfully devised, and admirably played by Herbert Fortier, Wm. H. Turner, Earl Metcalfe and Ormi Hawley.

THE GOLDEN SPURS (Selig), Dec. 16.—The dramatic quality of this two-reel drama has much to commend it, and has been ably directed by Lloyd B. Carleton. But, the author, Jos. F. Poland, has made a slight mistake when he gravely informs us that the son of an English Colonel is serving as a private in his father's regiment and is received on terms of equality in the Colonel's house. It wouldn't be allowed, old chap! quite against the Military Code, my Boy! Bessie Eyton, Wheeler Oakman, Edward J. Piel, Richard Morris and Edwin Wallock are all entitled to honorable mention for their acting.

THE HAND OF THE LAW (Edison), Dec. 17.—Bessie Learn and Edward Earle have the leading roles in this three-reel drama. The story is melodramatic, holds the interest firmly, and contains a number of well drawn New England characters. A review of this photoplay appeared in the issue of Dec. 18, page 2197.

A MAN'S SACRIFICE (Broadway Star Feature—Vitagraph), Dec. 18.—A three-reel blue ribbon picture telling a red-blood story with a climax coming in a miner's cabin. The heroine, Edith Story, is passing the night there alone and the villain, Ned Finley, a rough mining town character, breaks in. There is a terrible fight in which the cabin is pretty well racked. The hero who has remained near to guard her is sleeping not far away. At the last moment he hears the fight and comes in time. The intense excitement is skilfully carried further; but the happy ending is sure.

HER STEPCHILDREN (Biograph), Dec. 14.—A strong heart interest runs all through this two-reel drama, the situation at the finish being a fine example of unforced pathos. The sacrifices made by a second wife for the sake of her stepchildren, furnishes the motive of the drama. The story moves rapidly and has the benefit of a good cast, which includes Charles Perley, Jack Mulhall, G. Raymond Nye, Vera Sisson and Gretchen Hartman.

A CHRISTMAS REVENGE (Essanay), Dec. 18.—G. M. Anderson plays Santa Claus in this two-reel photoplay, and, after threatening to kill his rival, changes his mind and gives the young lady to the other fellow as a Christmas present. The picture is a skilful handling of a timely subject. Mr. Anderson repeats his familiar impersonation of Broncho Billy, and Ben Turpin and Harry Todd introduce several minutes of their always welcome comedy. Marguerite Clayton is the heroine.

Fox Film Corporation.

HER MOTHER'S SECRET (Dec. 13).—There is little novelty in this five-part melodrama dealing with illegitimate sex relationships and their results. Not realizing that they are children of the same father, a young man and a young woman fall in love with each other and are on the verge of marrying when warned of the impossibility of their union. Ralph Kellard and Dorothy Green played the leading roles in a picture that was carefully produced by Director Frederick Thompson.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

BLACK FEAR (Rolfe), Dec. 27.—The drug evil, especially as it menaces the boys in large cities, is the theme behind the story in this very effective five-part drama, directed by John W. Noble for Rolfe Photoplays, Inc. The picture reveals originality in construction and it makes engrossing drama, as acted by Grace Elliston, Grace Valentine, Edward Brennan, Paul Everton and others.

Mutual Film Corporation.

THE FIDDLERS (Novelty), Dec. 20.—Rather a slapstick sort of an offering in which much sausage eating and other eccentric happenings occur. Some audiences might find the comedy amusing, but it lacks refinement.

MAKING A MAN OF JOHNNIE (Beauty), Dec. 21.—An amusing comedy in which Johnnie cruelly deceives his uncle to whom he is sent by an overtrusting mother who believes that Johnnie is too good a boy and desires that his uncle make a man of him. He ends in marrying the girl that the uncle has set his heart on. This comedy will be found moderately entertaining.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 15, "LEXINGTON, KY." (Gaumont), Dec. 21.—The Mutual Traveler visits Lexington, Ky., and the blue grass country. Fine city views and pleasing glimpses of famous racing men and their thoroughbreds make this a good number.

KEEPING UP WITH THE JONESES (Gaumont), Dec. 21.—On same reel with above, Palmer's animated drawings, picturing the efforts of Ma McGinnis to reduce. Very funny.

THE INNOCENT SANDWICH MAN (Novelty), Dec. 22.—This only fairly entertaining. The Innocent Sandwich Man is the object of a joke in which his sandwich sign is changed to read " 25 cts. with every 5ct. cigar." The result is that next day the restaurant is overrun with men expecting the premium. On the same reel with a scenic entitled "Between Lakes and Mountains."

BETWEEN LAKES AND MOUNTAINS (Novelty), Dec. 22.—A beautiful scenic showing a series of views through the Swiss Mountains and about the shores of some of its lakes. On the same reel with the above.

TOODLES, TOM AND TROUBLE (Falstaff), Dec. 23.—This is an amusing comedy in which a dog steals a big rag doll that is left by a child in a corner of a park. A baby has been left there previously by a father that has been entrusted with the child's care for the afternoon. During a short absence the child supposed to be deserted is taken charge of by another man. Hence the chase after the dog and the wax doll who is really a fine actor. This picture will be found very amusing.

YES OR NO? (American), Dec. 24.—This picture is only ordinarily interesting. It describes the thoughts of a young woman on the subject of her answer to her lover when he writes for an early reply to his proposal. She has an ambition to be a great singer, and is undecided what she should do.

HEARTS AND CLUBS (Cub), Dec. 24.—A George Ovey comedy of ordinary merits. As the story runs Jerry hires to help a pair of lovers against an irate parent and an unwelcome suitor. Some rather amusing situations occur in the picture.

THAT COUNTRY GIRL (Beauty), Dec. 25.—An excellent little comedy number in which a country girl is snubbed by her city relatives. Later she learns some things about them which leads to different treatment. Neva Gerber, Lucille Ward, Nan Christy and King Clark appear.

UNA'S USEFUL UNCLE (Falstaff), Dec. 27.—Riley Chamberlain plays the role of "Uncle" in this amusing comedy. Uncle proves useful in spite of his addiction to the bottle, for when the mortgage on the farm comes due and the hart-hearted mortgagee tries to play a mean trick on the young couple, Uncle gets even by doctoring some apples with whisky. The result is that the villain of the play discounts the mortgage, and pays uncle $5,000 for the formula for the growing of such apples. Something after the order of "The New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford."

KIDDUS, KIDS AND KIDO (Beauty), Dec. 28.—An interesting child plays the role of Kido in this production, which will be found amusing to the general audience. Whether the example set by the child who runs away for a lark and hides in the automobile belonging to Kiddus is a good one for children to see or not is a problem to be decided by the exhibitor. Kiddus in an attempt to aid the parents in finding the child gathers up all the children he sees and is pursued to his home by police and parents, where the missing child is found amusing himself breaking up the bric-a-brac.

FOOLISH, FAT FLORA (Falstaff), Dec. 30.—This is a take off on the fat woman who tries to grow thin. The comedy is an amusing one, and free from vulgarity. Flora, much distressed because of her rapid increase in weight takes to following advice which she finds in a newspaper, and which suggests the use of the floor for eating, sleeping, and the performance of all the daily domestic duties.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE BANKHURST MYSTERY (Reliance), Dec. 19.—In this two-reel production Irene Hunt plays the role of an adventuress. Others in the cast are Jack Brammall, Alfred Paget, A. D. Sears and Margie Wilson. The production is an excellent melodrama and detective story, and will be enjoyed by any audience, inasmuch as that it has been well produced. The theme is not new. It is the story of the robbery of a diamond from a jewelry store, and a murder in consequence.

THE CLEAN UP (American), Dec. 20.—A two-part production with Winnifred Greenwood in the feminine lead. Others in the cast are George Field and Frank Borzage. The picture is built around an old theme, which has, however, been treated with some originality. The daughter of the mayor of the town becomes a victim of a certain swell gambling house, partially through the course taken by her father who is upholding the gamblers against an onslaught by a certain newspaper. The mayor finding his daughter there when he goes to prevent the raid and changes his mind on the matter.

AMBITION (Thanhouser), Dec. 21.—A strong three-reel offering, written by Phillip Lonergan, featuring Morgan Jones, Gladys Hulette and Morris Foster. This has a flavor of the recent morality plays, the characters being designated as Ambition, Youth, Friendship, etc. The opening Western scenes are vivid and full of interest. The ambitious one then goes East, where his desire to excel leads him to forget love and happiness. The story has a good message and contains much that is true to life. It makes a good offering.

THE MYSTERY OF CARTER BREEN (Centaur), Dec. 22.—A three-reel mystery story, featuring Crane Wilbur, Celia Stanton, Gordon Mullen and Carl von Schiller. This is a detective tale, constructed by Mr. Wilbur for his own use. It holds the attention closely and contains many pleasing thrills, in spite of the somewhat obvious character of the solution. The scenes leading up to the murder are usually good. Some of the later incidents have a strong sensational tendency, particularly in the one where the girl is about to be hung. The settings and photography are splendid.

THE WINNING OF JESS (Centaur), Dec. 23.—A two-reel number, featuring Capt. Jack Bonavita, Margaret Gibson, Roy Watson and John Oaker. This is the story of a girl left at a ranch by her father, after the wife's desertion. He becomes a hermit and watches over her. Later two lovers appear and many stirring incidents occur. The Bostock animals appear in various parts of the film. This is a good outdoor number of entertaining qualities.

THE PITCH O' CHANCE (Mustang), Dec. 24.—An unusually attractive western subject in two parts. The story deals with the early pioneer days in the west when morals mattered little. The moral side of the story is well balanced, however, and there could be no objection to a picture that deals so truthfully with things as they were. A full review of the production will be found on another page of this issue.

AUTHOR! AUTHOR! (Mustang), Dec. 25.—A three-part "Buck Parvin" picture in which the author of a story that is being produced at the studio of the Titian Moving Picture Company appears on the scene. The character of the author is, of course, burlesqued to quite a large extent. An exhibition of horseback riding, broncho busting, etc., is given in the course of the picture by Art Acord. This is intensely interesting. The production is a good one and should be appreciated by the majority of audiences.

THEIR LAST PERFORMANCE (Thanhouser), Dec. 28.—A three-reel story of stage life, by Philip Lonergan, featuring Ethel Cooke, Grace de Carlton and others. This pictures the temptations to which a chorus girl is subjected with great frankness, in fact one or two of the subtitles could be softened to advantage. It tells of one girl's downfall and the heroic way in which she works to save another from the same fate. In the end she intercepts the bullet intended for the younger girl, fired by her jealous lover, giving a tragic and pathetic close to the story. This is sincerely presented and makes a good offering of the type.

A PRINCE OF YESTERDAY (Rialto) Dec. 29).—A very beautiful three-reel feature which has been submitted to the hand color method. The story is of how a prince was lured into the presence of the maid chosen for him by his counsellers, while he himself believed that he was enjoying freedom of selection. The princess proves to be so beautiful and winning that he is unable to resist her charms. The production is more fully reviewed elsewhere.

THE DEATHLOCK (Mutual Masterpicture, No. 53), Dec. 30.—A five-reel Blazon production which features Wilma Willie and David. W. Butler and contains some excellent snow scenes purported to be from Alaska, in the Klondyke region. The story is rather long drawn out, and follows the trail of a villain and his victims across snow-covered hills to the location of a mining claim of which he tries to obtain possession. The dog teams in the picture trailing the sleds over faraway perspectives are an attraction. There is a good deal of realism in the production as regards the atmosphere of a portion of Alaska. The "death lock" has reference to a cruel manner in which the Apache Indians put men to death by locking their knees around a tree in a way that prevents their helping themselves. This method the villain takes advantage of.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS NO. 98, 1915 (Pathe), Dec. 8.—Interesting items of this issue are the bifurcated costumes of Fannie Harley, demonstration of the efficacy of a new fountain pen device for recording wireless messages, rearing of silver foxes on a farm at Northport, L. I., and illustrations of fashions for the coming season.

PATHE NEWS 99, 1915 (Pathe), Dec. 11.—One of the interesting things to be seen in this issue of the Pathe News is the 16-inch gun for the Panama defense, with fourteen men standing on its barrel each an arm's length apart or more. Other interesting items are an attempt on the coast of Oregon to divert the sea current, and porpoise fishing at Cape Hatteras, N. C.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

THE NEW ADVENTURES OF J. RUFUS WALLINGFORD, NO. 12 ("Buying a Bank with Bunk") (Pathe), Dec. 20.—"Buying a Bank with Bunk" is not quite as interesting as some of the previous numbers of the Wallingford adventures, although it is at the same time good for a number of laughs. Mr. Benjamin F. Quirker, President of the Jinkinsville bank, happens to be the next member of the clique that ruined the father of the Warden girls to be victimized. A little domestic tangle is arranged in order to bring Quirker into the grip of the confidence men who succeed in beating him out of $51,000.

THE RED CIRCLE, CHAPTER 2 ("Pity the Poor") (Balboa), Dec. 22.—"Pity the Poor" is the title of this chapter of the new Balboa serial. This serial, as stated in the comment on the first chapter, has promise of being exceptionally interesting. In this number we discover that the young girl, June Travis, also displays the red circle on the back of her hand, and that she steals without apparently realizing what it means. The difference between her theft and other thefts is that she has in this instance stolen papers belonging to a loan shark to save a poor man from paying exorbitant interest on a loan. Ruth Roland as June Travis continues to charm.

THE LIFE OF OUR SAVIOUR (Gold Rooster Play), Dec. 24.—This is a reissue of a former Pathe production, that was made in the Holy Land and in France a couple of years ago. The production is in seven parts and is beautifully colored. It embraces the principal incidents in the life of Christ. A review of the picture will be found on another page of this issue.

Signal Film Corporation.

THE GIRL AND THE GAME, NO. 1 ("Helen's Race with Death"), Dec. 27.—"Helen's Race with Death" is the significance of Chapter I of this series featuring Helen Holmes, who starred in "The Hazards of Helen," another of this year's serial productions produced by J. P. McGowan from the story of Frank H. Spearman. The series promises to be a good one. This first of the fifteen two-reel chapters of which the serial consists contains a real thrill where the horse on which Miss Holmes is riding jumps from the base of an open drawbridge into the river, with her on its back. The feat is a daring one. The starting point of the story shows the hero and heroine of the serial as children meeting accidentally, and declaring that if they ever meet again that they will know each other.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE BECKONING FLAME (Kay-Bee).—A story of East India, beautifully arranged and pictured, telling of the short and tragic love of a little Princess rescued by an English officer from death on a funeral pyre. Generally good and made exceptionally so by fine taste in treatment.

THE MISSING LINKS (Fine Arts).—Not a comedy, as the title indicates, but a wandering domestic drama that slowly develops into a murder mystery easily solved by one of those convenient clues authors place at the side of the murderer's victim, in this case one of a peculiar pair of sleeve links.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 197 (Universal), Dec. 15.—The suffragette demonstrations in Washington, close views of congressmen, burning of the resort at Catalina, Samuel Gompers at Universal City, and scenes along the Mexican frontier are among the leading features of this number.

THE WATER CLUE (Laemmle), Dec. 18.—A splendid murder mystery, with a detective feature and an ingenious solution at the close, by Anthony Coldeway and Rupert Julian. The cast is good and the story an unusually interesting example of the mystery type.

GREED AND GASOLINE (L-KO), Dec. 26.—Gertrude Selby and Reggie Morris are featured as a young married couple who are victimized by two tramps. The opening scenes are quite amusing. The offering as a whole is farily strong.

SOME CHAPERONE (Nestor), Dec. 27.—An Al E. Christie number, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Betty Compson and Harry Rattenberry. Lee makes up as a chaperone; the chief action is on shipboard. This is an amusing comedy, well presented.

A SCANDAL AT SEA (L-KO). Dec. 29.—A flirtatious admirer follows the wife of a sea captain aboard his passenger ship. The male flirt has many troubles of a quite amusing sort and saves himself at the end by stopping a leak in the vessel. This is acceptable throughout and contains a fair amount of humor.

LEMONADE AIDS CUPID (Joker), Jan.—A "rube" comedy number, featuring Gale Henry, the author, Max Asher, Wm. Franey, Milburne Morantis and Lillian Peacock. The action centers about a social function in a small town, where the lemonade is "doctored." Not very new but has amusing moments.

UNCLE SAM AT WORK, NO. 2 ("How Uncle Sam Gets His Coin") (Power's), Jan., 1.—An excellent descriptive number, giving a splendid insight into the way money and stamps are made. The scenes are taken at the Washington bureau of engraving and printing, the Philadelphia mint and the U. S. Treasury building. Entertaining and instructive.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

STRONGER THAN DEATH (Rex), Dec. 26.—A two-reel number introducing Louise Garbasse in the leading feminine role, which she fills very acceptably. Arthur Shirley plays the lover and Millard Wilson appears as the guardian. The girl marries her guardian and when the latter is ill promises not to marry again after his death. There is a touch of the supernatural in what follows, the girl, while undergoing an operation visiting the vault with her dead bushand and seeing him burn up her written promise. On her recovery the paper is found burned in the vault. For this sort of a story, which is not without a grewsome touch for certain observers, this is very well done.

THE NATURE MAN (Broadway Universal Feature), Dec. 27.—A five-part picture showing the experiences of Joseph Knowles when he penetrated the Maine woods, unarmed and without food. The production has a genuine educational value and is thrilling in the bargain. It should be a popular attraction at first class theaters.

THE TRACTION GRAB (Universal Special), Dec. 27.—No. 3 of the "Graft" series. In this number the young district attorney has a clash with the traction trust. He takes a job in the New York subway to get evidence against the contractors alleged to be using cheap materials. These subway scenes give the picture its chief interest. Some close views are shown of one of the disastrous cave-ins. The villain of this episode is killed in a fall into the excavation in an automobile. The number follows the trend of the others in this series and is entertaining throughout.

FATHER'S CHILD (Victor), Dec. 29.—Rosemary Theby and Harry C. Myers appear in this three-reel comedy. The story itself would be more amusing if greatly shortened. It is a domestic narrative, picturing the troubles of two newlyweds with their crying baby on a hot day. The settings and subtitles, devised by Mr. Myers, are attractive and pleasing. This is too shy in incidents to justify three reels; except for its length it is light comedy of a good type.

A TRIBUTE TO MOTHER (Imp), Dec. 31.—A two-reel number, adapted by by R. L. Schrock from a story by James E. Elliott. There is a good idea in this, but the allegorical style of the opening scenes does not give the observer sufficient clue to the meaning. Later a quite pleasing sentiment develops. The events beginning with the lad's school days and leading up to his marriage are clear and pleasing. A number of fair strength.

V-L-S-E, Inc.

THE GREAT DIVIDE (Lubin), Dec. 20).—This is one of the very best features ever put out by Lubin through the V-L-S-E, Inc. It is a film version of the well known play "The Great Divide." The direction by Edgar Lewis is of the highest standard throughout. The background is natural Arizona scenery. Ethel Clayton and House Peters play the leading parts and are ably supported. For an extended review of this subject see page 2199 of the issue dated December 18.

World Film Corporation.

OVER NIGHT (Brady), Dec. 20.—A bright and altogether satisfactory adaptation of a stage farce by Philip Bartholomae, with Vivian Martin in the leading role, ably supported by Sam B. Hardy, Herbert Yost and Florence Morrison. Director James Young made much of an odd happening that causes two married couples to change partners temporarily. Many of the most amusing scenes are staged on board the Albany boat.

Miscellaneous Specials.

FORBIDDEN FRUIT (Ivan).—A sincere and generally dramatic treatment of an unpleasant story in which a wife sells herself to another man to save her husband from the penalty of a crime. Ivan Abramson showed the possible consequences of such an act by making it the basis of a domestic tragedy, acted with feeling and carefully staged.

V-L-S-E Opens 1916

Announcement for the First Quarter of the New Year Includes Many Interesting Subjects.

FROM the announcement just made of the new releases of the V-L-S-E for the next three months, it is apparent that this organization is by no means content to rest upon its laurels, but has set for itself for the first part of the new year, an even stiffer pace than the high standard which has prevailed ever since the combination of the four companies.

Henry B. Walthall and dainty Edna Mayo will lead the new year's releases with a six-part film version by Essanay of the widely known stage production, "The Misleading Lady," scheduled for release January 3rd.

On the same date, there will be released, the last of the film plays written by George Cameron, the late Mrs. Sydney Drew, called "Thou Art the Man," a Vitagraph subject. The production features Virginia Pearson and Joseph Kilgour, and is directed by S. Rankin Drew, Mrs. Drew's son.

Solig's next release, "No Greater Love," features the "dance of the veils," presented by Miss Regina Badet, who, as the star of this production, in the role of "Sadunah the Dancer." Another thrill of this feature, which will be released on January 10th, is the plunge of a man and woman over a precipice into a lake. The scenic effects of the production are among the most beautiful and elaborate of any released during the past year.

Anita Stewart and Earle Williams will return to the Blue Ribbon Features released through the V-L-S-E in the picturization of Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady's story, "My Lady's Slipper," which is also scheduled for released on January 10th, and is produced under the direction of Ralph W. Ince. It will have a strong supporting cast in Joseph Kilgour, Julia Swayne Gordon, Harry Northrup, William Shea, George O'Donnell, George Stevens and Charles Chapman. The scenes of this play are laid during the time of Louis XVI. The action tells the story of an American naval lieutenant who rescues a beautiful girl from highwaymen.

Essanay, on the 17th of January, will release a picturization of Clyde Fitch's widely known play, "Captain Jinks." It will feature Ann Murdock.

Vitagraph returns on January 17th with A. E. W. Mason's comedy, "Green Stockings," in which Margaret Anglin starred for three seasons. Dainty Lillian Walker heads a long cast of notable players, which includes Louise Beaudet, Arline Pretty, and Stanley Dark. Wilfred North has directed the production and is said to have staged a battle scene between one hundred and fifty negroes and two hundred and seventy-five extras, made up as English soldiers which is unusually gripping.

In "The Island of Surprise," another of Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady's stories, which is released by the same company on the 24th of January, one of the big scenes also calls for a fight; this time between a band of castaways on a desert island and a horde of bloodthirsty savages. The castaways, who include two beautiful girls and a man secretly married to one of them, are rescued by a warship. Eleanor Woodruff, Zena Keefe, Anders Randolf and William Courtenay are the principals of this production. It was staged under the direction of Paul Scardon.

"Submarines of Society" is the interesting title of Essanay's contribution of the V-L-S-E progrom on January 31st. It features such well-known favorites as Marguerite Clayton, Lillian Drew, E. H. Calvert and Ernest Maupain.

The rest of the releases of Essanay during February and March as well as those of Selig, have not been definitely fixed.

Lubin will contribute during this time several productions which give promise of being unsually noteworthy. These will include "Dollars and Cents," in which Tom Moore will make his inital appearance under the Lubin V-L-S-E banner. This story was written by the well-known writer, Albert Payson Terhune. Joseph Kaufman directed it. Ethel Clayton will play opposite Mr. Moore.

Raymond Hitchcock will be seen prior to this presentation—probably in January—in "The Wonderful Wager," a Lubin five-reel feature which has been termed a "Ford Flivver" comedy.

Nance O'Neil will follow these two Lubin releases early in the year, with a strong emotional play, "Souls in Bondage," which is being directed by Edgar Lewis.

"Kennedy Square," which Vitagraph presents on January 31st, is an echo of the days when Baltimore was the social centre of the South, is one of the late F. Hopkinson Smith stories. A feature of this production was the taking of most of the scenes at night, by aid of a torch system which gives it a realism unable to be obtained by tinting. S. Rankin Drew produced the picture, which is in five parts. The principals include Charles Kent, Antonio Moreno and Muriel Ostriche.

Gordon MacLaren, a popular magazine writer, wrote "The Crown Prince's Double," which Vitagraph releases February 7th, in which Maurice Costello is seen in the dual role of Barry Lawrence, an impetuous American, and Prince Oscar, the son of the king of a mythical prineipality, in the shadow of the Pyrenees. Norma Talmadge is his foil. One of the big scenes in "The Crown Prince's Double" will be the visualization of an uprising in which over seven hundred people will be used in a thrilling attempt to dethrone the king.

Olga Nethersole's starring vehicle, William J. Hurlburt's psychological drama of greed, "The Writing on the Wall," will be the following big picture to be shown by the Vitagraph Company, to be released on February 14th. Joseph Kilgour and Virginia Pearson will again be seen in this production as well as Naomi Childers. Bobby Connelly and other well-known Vitagraph players.

"The Light of a New Day," which is scheduled for February 21st, is another Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, and will be followed by the much heralded play, "Colton, U. S. N.," on February 28th. Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady is the author. Charles Richman and Eleanor Woodruff are the principals.

"The Hunted Woman," by the Vitagraph Company, is the next of the contributions on March 6th. Then comes "The Patriot," a dramatic satire by William Hurlburt, having Charles Richmand, Joseph Kilgour, Arline Pretty, Bobby Connelly and other of like popularity as its principals. It is in six parts, and directed by Theodore Marston. Its release date is March 13th. One week later "The Two Edged Sword" will be shown, and following that, Robert Edeson on March 27th will be seen in the five part melodrama of deep heart interest, "One Night." The picture is being produced under the direction of Mr. Harry Davenport, in Huntington, L. I.

NANCE O'NEIL IN "SOULS IN BONDAGE."

Nance O'Neil, the celebrated international star, is hard at work on the multiple-reel feature, "Souls in Bondage," and is enthusiastic in her praise of the same. "Souls in Bondage" is an original story written for the screen by Daniel Carson Goodman, author of "The Crash," and is being produced by Edgar Lewis, whose masterful work on "The Great Divide" stamps him as one of the best directors in the country.

"Souls in Bondage" was chosen by Miss O'Neil as the story best suited to exploit the talents for which she is known the world over. It is a "sex drama" in five acts, and runs the gamut of emotion. Much could be said on this wonderful subject, but Miss O'Neil and Mr. Goodman prefer it to be a surprise for the patrons of the motion picture theaters, sufficient to say that, upon its release early in January, Nance O'Neil will add fresh laurels to those already won.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"THE MAKING OF CROOKS" (Selig).

"The Making of Crooks," a Selig multiple reel drama, introduces the famous Jack Pickford as a Selig star. Release Monday, December 27, in the General Film service, "The Making of Crooks" contains an impressive lesson to neglectful parents. It is urged that the parents of lads see this picture-play, and insist upon the boys accompanying them.

Walton, an unscrupulous druggist, is released from prison through the intercession of Lee O'Neil, a political "boss," and, with O'Neil's protection, opens a shady pool room. Tony, a young Italian, who has met Walton in prison, is engaged by Walton as a pool sharp. The pool room becomes a rendezvous for crooks and boys. Elmer, a bank messenger, and Bingham, the neglected son of wealthy parents, frequent the place. Bingham and Tony at a cabaret meet Hazel O'Neil, the daughter of the "boss." Tony fascinates the girl and they steal Bingham's automobile and leave for a joy ride. As the car crosses a railroad track an approaching locomotive shatters the car and in the terrible accident Hazel O'Neil loses her life.

Scene from "The Making of Crooks" (Selig).

Bingham reports the theft of his car to detective headquarters and back of the pool room the detectives, waiting for Tony, recognize two well-known crooks and thwart them as they are about to hold up Elmer, the bank messenger. Elmer confesses to the authorities that he had learned to gamble at Walton's pool room. The place is raided. In the meantime Tony, who was only stunned in the accident, together with Walton, is taken into custody.

This brief plot only inadequately describes the power of this picture play. There is climax after climax and a succession of exciting situations. Dozens of real policemen in a large city participate in a raid which is most realistic. Jack Pickford, of the versatile Pickford family, has many opportunities for some powerful delineation in his initial bow to the photoplay public under the Diamond S trade mark.

"A PRINCE OF YESTERDAY" IS COLORED FILM.

Wishing to make the holiday season memorable, the Gaumont Company is releasing a film artistically tinted in nature's own colors. This will be given December 29 as a Rialto Star Feature on the Mutual Program. It is called "A Prince of Yesterday." The leading roles are taken by Alexander MacMonnies and Margaret Gould. Although this multiple-reel feature is beautifully hand colored, it is released as a regular production without extra cost.

VITAGRAPH FILMS "GREEN STOCKINGS."

The Vitagraph Company has just completed its filming of "Green Stockings," a splendid comedy of English life, whose plot is based on a superstition that the unmarriageable daughter shall wear stockings of that color at her sister's wedding. Inasmuch as the stigma of being an "old maid" is not desirable in most cases, girls in English families have no intense craving to wear the emerald hosiery.

Lillian Walker, the Vitagraph "Dimples," heads the cast as the apparently unmarriageable daughter. With her are Louise Beaudet, Frank Currier, Adele De Garde, John T. Kelly, Charles Wellesley, Charles Brown, Lillian Burns and Stanley Dark, who played in the original stage version of "Green Stockings." Wilfred North directed the film. The comedy shows the endeavors of a girl to avoid the dreadful "green stockings." The film is released as a six-part Blue Ribbon Feature.

"BUDD" ROSS A STAR IN "HUNTING."

The Gaumont release for Christmas day on the Mutual Program is "Hunting," a Casino Star comedy, written by Rennold Wolf, author of such stage successes as the celebrated Ziegfeld "Follies" productions, made annually at the Amsterdam theater, New York. The spirit of fun which Mr. Wolf puts into every minute of the stage entertainment he has successfully translated to the screen in "Hunting."

Director Edwin Middleton takes "Budd" Ross through the laughable complications with his well-known skill for developing farcical situations. So laughable did the director find the scenario that he picked it as the vehicle for Mr. Ross's elevation to stardom.

LESSER SECURES WAR NEGATIVE.

One of the first negatives of the Allies' Side of the War to be brought into this country was received by Sol L. Lesser at San Francisco last week.

The picture shows with all the realism of war, the Russian frontier and the fighting in France. Especially interesting are the naval scenes.

The production is in eight thousand feet, and several of the largest houses in San Francisco are eager to present this picture. It has not yet been decided who will be given the first run.

STRONG CAST FOR "CURLY."

An interesting group of stars, the majority of whom have won a permanent place in the affections of photoplay lovers during the last few months by their exceptional work in the great picturized novel, "The Diamond from the Sky," has been selected to present "Curly," a Clipper feature in three parts, which will be offered on the regular Mutual program, December 11. Lottie Pickford, famous as "Esther," plays the title role, in which she is more charming, if possible, than in other recent triumphs. Miss Pickford, who is the younger sister of "Little Mary," has the winsome quality which, combined with youth and attractive appearance, has made her one of the best loved actresses on the screen.

William Russell, his many admirers will be glad to know, has been promoted from "heavy" to leading man. In "Curly" he plays opposite Miss Pickford, in the character of Arthur Brewster. Charlotte Burton is in her element as Isabel Morriss, a girl of "Vivian Marston" propensities. Roland Morrissey shows George Periolat, late impersonator of "Luke Lovell," in a society pirate role, and Eugenie Ford proves her versatility by casting off "Queen Hagar" for the sordid Mrs. McCarthy. George Clancy, Lizette Thorne and Marie Van Tassal complete the support.

Scene from "Curly" (Clipper).

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURES.

Knickerbocker Star Features will again be released on the General Film program. This action is the result of numberless requests for this brand of three-heelers from exhibitors and patrons of the screen.

The policy of Knickerbocker Star Features has been to give first-class feature productions in every respect in regular service. This policy will be continued now that the brand has been revived.

Instead of releasing every other week as heretofore, the new schedule of Knickerbocker will be one a week, commencing December 24th with Vinnie Burns in "Every Girl." This release is not as allegorical as its title would imply, but is featured by its gigantic settings and hazardous acting. These tense moments of the film are caused by a realistic dance hall fight, a big sewer breakage and a factory fire scene.

Following this release on December 31st will be "The Mysterious Bride," a story which claims interest through the clever mystery of its plot.

EDGAR JONES COMPLETES "THE TURMOIL."

Edgar Jones has just completed the final scenes in "The Turmoil," a five-part Metro wonderplay, produced by the Columbia Pictures Corporation, which will be released on the Metro program January 10th. Valli Valli is starred in the production and George Le Guere is featured. "The Turmoil" is a pictureization of the novel of the same name by Booth Tarkington, which was one of the biggest selling novels ever published. The story is an intensely interesting one, in which a man's greed for wealth and fame is so great that he becomes inhuman in the treatment of one of his sons, who longs to write instead of adopting a business career. The love theme in the picture is novel, as well as beautiful. It is through the subtle influence of the girl in the story that the father's character is entirely changed, and the father in turn arranges the marriage of his son to the girl when circumstances have caused a misunderstanding. In the role of "Mary Vertrees," Miss Valli has the best part of her career, either on the stage or screen. Mr. Le Guere is admirably suited in the role of "Bibbs Sheridan," the son, while Charles Prince gives a convincing delineation of the father. An unusually strong supporting cast is seen in this feature, and there are many big scenes staged on an elaborate scale.

A BEAT FOR ANIMATED.

The Universal Animated Weekly scored a beat in connection with the fire which destroyed most of the town of Avalon, Catalina Island, on November 29. A telephonic message was received at the office of the Weekly at Universal City early on the morning of the fire, and Beverly Griffith, location manager of the company, who was about to start out on another mission for San Pedro, accompanied a Weekly camera representative to the Los Angeles port. There it was found that the Banning company, which owns Catalina Island, had sent over all its available boats to fight the flames from the water.

Griffith chartered a tug, and the distance between San Pedro and Avalon was made in record time. Three hundred feet of film picturing the destruction was secured.

"SAMMY'S SCANDALOUS SCHEME" (Vogue).

Sammy Burns, an inimitable English comedian, makes his debut as a screen laughmaker in the first Vogue comedy release December 27. The title of the picture is "Sammy's Scandalous Scheme," and it has been received enthusiastically by exhibitors in preview.

Sammy—he scorns the conventional "Mr."—offers in his comedy work some eccentric novelties new to the screen. His long experience on the English stage has gained to him a broad knoweldge of mystifying and mirth-provoking tactics.

In the accompanying picture Sammy is shown in an especially funny scene in "Sammy's Scandalous Scheme," in which he is most ably supported by a cast of trained humorous eccentrics, new in name and style to the screen. Vogue comedies are to be of the slapstick kind, with a reason for the slapstick giving to Mutual program on which they will be released the exact sort of fun-filled pictures so long desired. Sammy is an acrobatic comedian of a type compellingly funny and surprisingly original.

Producers, in order to meet the demands of exhibitors, are constantly on the search for something new in the comedy line, but only a few of them have been rewarded. One so rewarded is Samuel S. Hutchinson, and his reward is Sammy Burns, who not only acts out the principal comedy role, but evolves, from his store of tricks and comedy knowledge, the laugh-creating plots.

"JERRY'S REVENGE" (Cub).

What promises to be one of the funniest one-reel comedies so far released under the Cub brand name is "Jerry's Revenge," which is to be released on the Mutual Program December 31. This statement, in the face of past performances, means that a picture of rare comedy bearing may be expected.

As in all previous Cub releases George Ovey is featured in "Jerry's Revenge," playing his original character of Jerry. Jerry has many peculiar characteristics, and one of them is a strong sense of justice that brooks no interference of others with what he deems his possessions, prospective or otherwise. Upon this theme "Jerry's Revenge" is laid and it furnishes a series of comedy situations and surprises that in the picturization are bound to arouse more than the usual quota of laughs derived from a one-reel comedy.

In the story Jerry is discarded by his sweetheart in favor of a handsome military officer. Cut to the quick by this action he seeks a means of revenge. By chance he obtains possession of a magic ring, by the use of which any animate object can be made to obey the bidding of the holder, no matter how ridiculous such orders may be. Jerry is overjoyed at his acquisition and uses it with such telling effect that he eventually lands in jail along with the principal object of his torments.

It may be seen from this that plenty of opportunity for good, clean comedy existed and of the possibilities Director Milton Fahrney has taken full cognizance. The entire Cub stock company takes pare in the picture.

MORE VIM COMEDIES.

The Vim Comedy Players have been the busy bees at Jacksonville, with the result that they are way ahead of schedule and have the following releases ready: December 31st, "Ups and Downs"; January 7th, "This Way Out"; January 14th, "Chickens"; January 21st, "Frenzied Finance"; January 28th, "Busted Hearts."

In all these releases Bobbie Burns and Walt Stull appear in their original roles of Pokes and Jabbs, supported by Babe

Scene from "Ups and Downs" (Vim).

Hardy as Fatty, Spook Hanson as Runt and pretty Ethel Burton.

The taking of "Chickens" created quite a stir at Jacksonville among the 400. One of the scenes taking place in a seminary, necessitated a bevy of young, pretty girls. Some of Jacksonville's society damsels were asked if they would like to spend a day posing before the camera, with the result that the front of the Lubin studio was lined with swell limousines and touring cars waiting for the would-be actresses to complete their day with the "movies."

JANE BERNOUDY AT HOME IN THE SADDLE.

Nothing pleases Jane Bernoudy more than a trip among the hills surrounding Universal City on her favorite horse Betsy.

Miss Bernoudy, who has done such excellent work as a comedienne with Allen Curtis' Joker comedy company at the Pacific Coast studios of the Universal company, is one of the champion women riders in the United States, winning her laurels with feats of horsemanship at various points in Oregon and California. She has been riding ever since she was a little girl and she finds more joy in than out of the saddle.

"THE PURIFICATION OF MULFERA" (Kalem).

From printer's type case to screen is the big jump made by Paul C. Hurst, who is scoring so strongly in the character role of Howie in Kalem's "Stingaree" series by E. W. Hornung. Hurst was a journeyman printer before taking up screen work and still avers "that he could find the 'e' box." The jump is more remarkable in view of the fact that Hurst never played on the stage. His parents had originally educated him for a profession and he became a licensed civil engineer before taking to the fascinating printer's case.

In "The Purification of Mulfera," a forthcoming two-reel release in the series scheduled for January 12, the ability of the Kalem player as a character actor, is seen at its best. The story by E. W. Hornung, author of "Raffles," tells of the attempt of Bishop Methuen and his chaplain to evangelize Mulfera, "the toughest station in Australia." On their way to the task they are waylaid by Stingaree and his partner, Howie, who change clothes with them and then set out to reform the bad men of Mulfera. Howie, because of his beard, is chosen to impersonate the Bishop, while Stingaree becomes his chaplain. There is real human comedy in the scenes showing the tobacco-chewing Bishop warning the hardened residents of Mulfera of the fate that lies at the end of the transgressor's road. The "evangelists" are just beginningto make an impression when they decide that it is time to leave, and Stingaree interrupts the "Bishop" with the command, "Throw up your hands, we want all the money in Mulfera."

A goodly haul is made, but while they are saying good-by from the platform, the real Bishop, who has staggered many miles through the desert to Mulfera, arrives on the scene. He enters from the rear, behind the speaker's platform, and before the bushrangers are aware of his presence pounces on them. A scuffle follows in which the men of Mulfera show their prowess at rough and tumble fighting with the result that Stingaree and Howie are made prisoners. How they later, through Stingaree's ingenuity, make their escape is told in thrilling scenes that are strongly contrasted to the comedy touch of the earlier scenes.

"MADGE" (American).

"In the Sunset Country" presents Nell Franzen in a striking character study which cannot fail to make a deep impression on all audiences. Miss Franzen, in this intensely dramatic production of the American Company, scheduled for release on the regular Mutual Program, December 17th, plays "Madge," a dance-hall girl of frontier days. The young actress portrays with remarkable power the struggle of "Boss Henley's girl" to escape from a career of degradation and moral death, into the new life which she has glimpsed through the eyes of Hellen Hollis, a young teacher from the East. E. Forrest Taylor plays Helen's lover, Hal. Newcomb, who estranges his sweetheart by his protection of Madge. Later, Helen begs his forgiveness. The little dance-hall girl sacrifices herself for the woman she believes infinitely worthier than she.

"THE ARAB'S VENGEANCE" (Centaur).

Ulysses Davis, the director signed last week by David Horsley, has started staging his first picture for the Mutual Program. It is called "The Arab's Vengeance" and is scheduled for release December 16. The story, written by Miss Theodosia Harris, on Mr. Horsley's scenario staff, is laid in Arabia and has to do with an Arabic thirst for revenge of a fancied wrong. It is said to be an absorbing drama with the added effect of some vivid scenes of the desert country. Margaret Gibson heads the cast of players, assisted by Roy Watson, John Oaker, Thomas Morrissey, David Allen, B. Singh and others, also the Bostock animals.

"UNDINE" (Broadway Universal Feature).

"Undine," taken from the well-known book of the same name, written by De La Motte Foquest, has been made into motion pictures from the scenario of Walter Woods, under the direction of Henry Otto. The leading role is enacted by Miss Ida Schnall. The past summer, while she was appearing at Pacific Coast resorts, Miss Schnall was brought to the attention of Director Henry Otto, and he decided she would be just the person accurately to portray the character of Undine, so he engaged her for the part. Edna Maison and Douglas Girard have the leading roles with Miss Schnall in this picture, which will be released in the near future as a Broadway Universal feature.

"THE HOMESTEADERS" (Centaur).

A story of fine sentiment, which resolves into a thrilling and stirring climax, is presented in "The Homesteaders," a two-reel Centaur Feature animal picture scheduled for release on the Mutual program January 6.

Three characters are concerned principally in its enactment. Carey Graves, a school teacher, leaves her friends and position to take her semi-invalid mother out West in the hope of benefiting her health. She "homesteads" a government claim, builds a shack upon it and starts out to develop a ranch of her own while she gives her mother the benefit of the climate and a chance for health.

The particular region in which she settles is presided over by Hamilton Osborne, a pugnacious, domineering, arrogant type of man. He considers women only as playthings and attempts to force himself upon Carey. A young Boston clubman, Shirley Wells, tired of the artificiality of conventional life, and living incognito in the section, steps forward and protects the girl. Bitter feeling is engendered between the two men as a result.

Angered at the interference Osborne conceives a scheme to win over Carey. He traps her at a puma lair and forcibly seizes her. The absent mother puma, chased by Wells, and returning to its lair, springs upon Osborne, seriously injuring him. Wells and Carey carry him back to safety and gradually nurse him back to health. How Osborne overcomes his natural jealousy, how Wells' identity becomes known, and how all wrinkles are smoothed adds a touching finale to a thoroughly interesting story.

"THE ACE OF DEATH" (Rialto).

Brilliancy of plot of action makes "The Ace of Death" one of the most attractive of the new plays presenting Broadway favorites. This Rialto Star Feature in three parts will be released on the regular Mutual Program, December 15. A notable cast, with Miss Stella Hammerstein in the lead, has succeeded admirably in working up a series of intense situations. The story centers about the tragic life of Paula Castellar, a Spanish beauty from Central America, impersonated by Miss Hammerstein. Flavia Arcaro plays Theresa, the jealous rival of Paula. Kathleen Butler is Doris. Henry W. Pemberton does strong work as Ricardo, the victim of the fateful ace. And Belton, tool and accomplice of Theresa, is an excellent piece of character art, in the hands of John Reinhard.

Scene from "The Ace of Death" (Rialto).

"THE PRISONER AT THE BAR" (Essanay).

This is a strong emotional drama, in which the passions of love, hatred and revenge come to play. The plot is intense, depicting a man's happiness over winning the woman of his choice, his horror at being dragged from her side and sent to prison for a crime of which he was not guilty, his despair at his utter helplessness when he learns that the man who caused his downfall has stolen the woman he loves. Follows the accumulated anger of months, then the dulling of the senses into a sullen, smoldering hatred with years of inability to relieve the situation. Freed, the man, more animal than human, shuns the world, seeking forgetfulness in the occupation of a lone fisherman. Then there comes the awakening when he rescues a woman from an attempt to drown herself and finds it is his wife, abused and forsaken by the man who had wronged them. The pent-up hatred of years flames into monomaniacal proportions and the man seeks his quarry to kill. The purpose accomplished, he is the broken man again. He confesses. A lawyer is appointed to defend him. The jury hears his story and liberates the old man. And the story has proved to his attorney that it is his own father. A happiness, tempered by sorrow over the past, comes at last. Darwin Karr, as the leading character, brings out the deep emotions with force and strength, while Warda Howard, as the wife, depicts all the sadness and horror of her life with a fine shade of interpretation.

Scene from "The Prisoner at the Bar" (Essanay).

"HIS LORDSHIP," (Lubin).

Daniel Ellis, scenario editor of the Lubin Mfg. Co., has just turned out another corking comedy entitled "His Lordship," in which Dave Don, the Lubin comedy star, is featured. "His Lordship" was produced by Director Edwin McKim, whose efficient direction and rare sense of humor, together with Daniel Ellis's delightful story, have resulted in one of the biggest laugh getters ever released on a Lubin program. "His Lordship" must be seen to be fully appreciated, for Mr.

Scene from "His Lordship" (Lubin).

Ellis, who is a master in writing screen action, has evolved a comedy that for speed and laughs is to the average one-reel comedy exactly as the Empire State express is to an Erie canal boat.

"His Lordship" deals with the adventures of a bibulous man who neglects his family for "John Barleycorn" and through too great an intimacy with the aforesaid gentleman gets into numerous difficulties, all of which serve as a great moral lesson and finally in the reuniting of a once happy family.

Dave Don is seen at his best in this sparkling comedy and Daniel Ellis is at work on a series of comedies suited to the peculiar talents of this comedian.

Those who remember Mr. Ellis's one-act screen, "Half a Million," will doubly enjoy "His Lordship," for as a gloom chaser it is a world beater.

GUNBY BROS. HAVE NOT SOLD STUDIO.

Gunby Brothers, Inc., wish to correct an impression circulated throughout the trade papers that they have sold their studio and laboratories at Ridgefield Park, N. J. This property is not for sale, but the Gunby Features Corporation has leased the Gunby studio for a term of years, in which they will continue making pictures of Abraham Lincoln, portrayed by Benjamin Chapin, and which they have been working on for quite some time, but this company has no connection with the Gunby Laboratories situated in the same building, and any other concern who claims to have rented, leased or bought this studio, or laboratories, is handling the truth in a very careless manner.

"THE HUNT."

"The Hunt," two-reel Keystone, gives Ford Sterling some unusual opportunity as the colored groom of a gentleman about to follow the hounds in a grand fox hunt. A colored rival puts a piece of mackerel in the groom's shoe and starts him running to escape a fusillade. The hounds follow the stronger scent, the hunting party as well, and the frightened negro leads an exciting chase. The story is original, amusing and well handled.

"THE WAIFS" BY STATE RIGHTS.

Believing that the system of selling state rights franchises affords better opportunities for profit to manufacturer, exchange man and exhibitor, William L. Roubert, vice-president and general manager of the Aurora Film Plays Corporation, has decided to release "The Waif," the first feature produced by his company, on that basis. This decision follows three separate offers from as many large distributing corporations for the exclusive rights to Aurora's new five-reeler.

LEE MORAN'S MANY ROLES.

Lee Moran, popular Universal comedian of the Nestor comedy company, is making a record in connection with the various and diversified roles he is enacting. During the past five weeks he has played a Scotchman in "Where the Heather Blooms," a savage in "Love and a Savage," a crook in "Jed's Trip to the Fair," a female impersonator in "Some Chaperone," and a devil in "Eddie's Devilish Deed."

"The Iron Claw," New Pathe Serial

Pearl White, Creighton Hale and Sheldon Lewis in Cast —Arthur Stringer the Author.

Pathe has become known as "the house of serials." Certainly that enterprising organization has more successful serials to its credit than any other in the motion picture business, and it was one of the very first to make one, "The Perils of Pauline," having been begun about two years ago. The first episode of "The Red Circle" was released on Dec. 18. Now comes announcement from Mr. Ramirez-Torres, assistant managing director of Pathe, to the effect that shortly after New Year's will be released another serial, "The Iron Claw," by Arthur Stringer, the well known novelist, and Geo. B. Seitz.

"The Iron Claw" will be in twelve episodes of two parts each. It will be produced by the Feature Film Corporation and directed by Carroll Fleming, formerly stage director of the Hippodrome, under the personal direction of the master director, Edward Jose. The principals of the cast have been determined by the numerous letters which have been received by Pathe from exhibitors and picture fans all over the country, requesting that Pearl White, Sheldon Lewis and Creighton Hale of "The Exploits of Elaine" fame be featured in another serial.

Over six hundred newspapers all over the country have already been lined up on this serial, among them the New York World, the Philadelphia North American and the Chicago Record-Herald.

NEW RELEASES BY MOSS.

Moss Motion Picture Corporation has decided to make one release a month and has outlined the releases as follows: For December "The Salamander," picturized from Owen Johnson's greatest novel, and interpreted by an all-star cast headed by Ruth Findlay. For the month of January the release will be "One Day," the sequel of Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks." The February release is "The Undertow," a picturization of Eugene Walters' drama. Another of Mr. Walters' plays will be released in March. It is called "Boots and Saddles," and was produced on the legitimate stage by the Shuberts with marked success. "Rosedale," the charming play which brought both fame and fortune to the late Lester Wallack a decade ago, has been selected as the April release. In May a piece entitled "The Call of the Cricket," the efforts of Edward Peple, will be brought out. The releases for June, July, August, September, October, November and December will be announced shortly.

"THE AMBITION OF MARK TRUITT" (World).

Robert Warwick and a carefully selected cast will soon be seen in a new five-part feature, picturized from the novel, "The Ambition of Mark Truitt." The story deals with a man who relentlessly trods under foot all who stand in the path of his ambitions.

From a humble beginning as a farm boy, Truitt hacks his way mercilessly through all opposition and obstacles to a position at the head of a great steel industry. On his way upward, he wins the love of two women. He casts off the worthy for the unworthy, only to be cast off in turn; and to return to the girl who remained faithful to him through all her sorrows.

There are scenes in the picture taken in the heart of the great steel mills near Pittsburgh, showing Warwick engaged in the hazardous occupation of handling great bars of white hot metal, and victorious in a terrific hand to hand battle with a shop foreman, during which the hero is nearly thrown into a raging hot furnace.

Warwick is said to have the strongest part of his film career and to make the most of his opportunities. The picture is under the direction of Oscar Eagle; which is enough to guarantee the excellence of its arrangement and perfection of its detail.

MOTION PICTURES AND THEIR VALUE.

Motion pictures have been in more or less extensive public use since 1895, but until 1905 their use was comparatively limited. They were for many years part of the equipment of practically all vaudeville theaters, but were not featured as special attractions in the programs of these theaters, being used principally to dismiss the audience. For this reason they were presented with little care and with less effort to supply scenes of great interest.

In addition to the use of machines in theaters of this character, their only use up to 1905 was to add attractiveness and vitality to travel lectures or as adjuncts to the shows of itinerant showmen. Between 1905 and 1908, however, the motion picture machine had developed into an instrument adapted not only for entertainment purposes, but also for educational uses, the latter being one which has steadily grown and is still growing.

Perfect projection is the foundation upon which the development of the motion picture has been based. The effect on the human eye of a flickering picture has been found in some cases to be such as to cause illness, and this has been made a life study by Nicholas Power, president of the Nicholas Power Company, with the result that the right to adopt the slogan," Power's Perfect Projection" has been conceded.

Because of this, the Cameragraph manufactured by the Nicholas Power Company of New York has attained a degree of popularity so great that the best source of information indicate that this company is now selling a large part of all the projection machines used on the western hemisphere. This popularity has resulted almost wholly from its superiority in workmanship, design, material and projecting qualities.

PATHE PUTS OUT BEAUTIFUL POSTERS.

Over a year ago Pathe recognized the necessity for creating a special department with duties pertaining to posters, and nothing else. Previously the "paper" had been left to a hard-worked publicity department, which lacked the time to devote the attention necessary for the best results. The result of the change was immediately apparent. Posters came out on time and there was a marked advance in their attractiveness. Naturally the best man to judge poster values was an artist, and an artist has always been in charge of the department. Today E. O'Connor, who can paint a good poster sketch himself, is in charge of that end of the Pathe activities.

Exhibitors everywhere have been loud in their praise of the one-sheets advertising Pathe Gold Rooster plays. These are portraits of the leading women players in the various productions, and are all painted by Alonzo Kimball, whose fame as a painter of women's heads extends beyond the boundaries of the United States. For years he has been in demand by those magazines whose beautiful covers light up the newsstands and which covers undeniably help sales. The Pathe posters made from his sketches are beautiful enough to be framed, and their advertising value to the theater that shows them is unquestioned.

"EXCUSE ME" FIRST PATHE-SAVAGE RELEASE.

"Excuse Me," the film adaptation of Rupert Hughe's farce which ran for two Broadway seasons, is the Pathe Gold Rooster release for Dec. 31. This is the first of a series of Broadway successes which are being produced by Henry W. Savage for the Pathe Gold Rooster program. The news that this well known manager is producing for Pathe is especially interesting, following the recent announcement of the alliance with A. H. Woods.

The majority of the merriment in "Excuse Me" is furnished by that often abused but highly respected ornament of travel—the Pullman porter, played by George F. Marion, who is supported bf a capable cast, including Robert Fischer, J. B. Hollis, Vivian Blackburn and many other fun makers. George F. Marion is equally well known both as a stage director and actor. Vivian Blackburn will be remembered for her excellent work in "Everywoman" and with John Drew in "Jack Straw." She was the original Fencing Girl.

PAVLOWA SAYS "POR-TEE'-CHEE."

Since the announcement of the Universal Film Manufacturing company that it would produce "The Dumb Girl of Portici," with Anna Pavlowa in the leading role, the proper pronunciation of the word "Portici" has been the cause of considerable tongue-twisting by those who have had to use the word frequently. Mlle. Pavlowa pronounces it "Por-tee'-chee," with the accent on the second syllable, soft.

"The Heart of a Mermaid" is the title of the latest Imp-Universal Mary Fuller picture. This picture was taken off the rocky coasts of Cape Cod, and while playing one of the scenes, Miss Fuller fell off the yacht, her head striking an oar, rendering her unconscious for the time being. The other members of the company little realized her predicament as they saw her bob up and down. Paul Panzer, however, thought it was not acting on Miss Fuller's part, and made a dive for her, just barely saving her from a watery grave.

Betty Scott appears in Essanay's five-act feature, "A Daughter of the City," as Muriel, the unsuccessful vampire whose clutch on Henry L. Bancroft, millionaire owner of a department store, is loosened by the sight of a new prize.

NOTES OF THE TRADE

JACK BARRYMORE is about twice as busy as he has ever been before. The occasion of this great activity on the part of the Famous Players star is due to the fact that he is playing a dual role in his next production. He will appear both as a Yankee adventurer and the prince of one of the Balkan kingdoms, and what the prince escapes in the way of murder and sudden death the Yankee more than makes up for in his unprecedented ability to get into trouble.

* * *

Jacques Jaccard is still away from the Universal City studios making exterior scenes in the production of a three reel Mexican melodrama entitled, "Across the Rio Grande." Olive Fuller Golden is being starred in the production and William Gettinger is playing opposite her. Practically the entire cast of "A Knight of the Range" are cast for roles in this production.

"Camille," Dumas' immortal love story, upon which almost every emotion actress in two generations has based her greatest bid for popular favor, will be seen on the films December 27. Clara Kimball Young, the World Film star, plays the role of the "Lady of the Camelias," with Paul Capellani as "Armand," the lover, the part he played with Mme. Bernhardt in Paris. Albert Capellani directed the picturized version, copying the enactment of the main scenes closely from the original Bernhardt production.

Joseph De Grasse and his company of Rex players recently left the Universal City studios for a trip to San Francisco, where they are to stage a number of exterior scenes in the production of a five reel feature entitled, "Love Thine Enemy." After a few days' stay in the northern part, the company is to return to the studios where they will complete the film.

* * *

To Colin Campbell, dean of Selig directors, has been assigned the duty of closing the famous Edendale studio. Campbell moved his company to the Selig Jungle-Zoo recently. His is the oldest Pacific Coast Selig company and it was agreed that this company should be the last to bid farewell to the first permanent studio on the Pacific Coast.

* * *

Margaret Greene, who has had some leading parts in Pathe Gold Rooster plays, has been signed for "Come-On Charlie," John Cort's new play. Miss Greene last appeared in "Nedra," a Gold Rootser play produced by Edward Jose, which is making a hit everywhere.

* * *

Al E. Christie and his company of Nestor comedians has now left the Universal City studios for a trip by water to San Francisco to secure a number of boat scenes in the production of a one-reel comedy entitled, "Some Chaperone." This is the production in which the new Nestor lead, Ethel Lynn, appears. Lee Moran plays opposite her with Betty Compson and Eddie Lyons making up the other couple.

* * *

"A Daughter of the City," the new five-act Essanay production of H. S. Sheldon's drama of the same title, called in the services of sixteen carpenters, four policemen, two property men and two customers. It is a magnificent sample of attention to detail.

* * *

Miss Clara Whipple, the charming leading lady of the Equitable Motion Picture corporation's stock organization, has just returned to the studio at Flushing after a short visit to her home in Pittsburgh. "The Fourth Estate," the picture in which Miss Whipple was to have appeared with Frank Sheridan, has been postponed until spring.

* * *

Arrangements have been consummated by the officials of the Universal's Pacific Coast studios for the exclusive right to make motion pictures of the annual Rose Tournament which is to be held in Pasadena on New Year's day. To one of the producing companies has been granted the privilege and by a drawing of lots, the company of Joseph De Grasse has been chosen for the honor. Ida May Park is at present working upon the construction of a scenario in which can be used the unusual pictures which will be made at the big flower festival.

Kitty Gordon, the statuesque British beauty of the light opera world, is the latest theatrical star to succumb to the lure of the films. She will soon appear in a lensed version of "As in a Looking Glass," the novel by F. C. Phillips. Frank Crane, of the World Film forces, has begun the production in the Fort Lee, N. J., studios.

In A. C. Lichty's dramatic story, "A Man's Sacrifice," produced by George D. Baker as a Vitagraph Broadway Star Feature in three parts, Edith Storey, Ned Finley, Evart Overton, Thomas R. Mills and George Stevens will be seen in pleasing roles.

M. G. Jonas, head of the Universal's Pacific Coast publicity department, is this week under physician's care. Jonas had been suffering from a severe attack of bronchitis for two weeks but refused to give up. At last he was pronounced on the verge of pneumonia and advised that an attempt to continue his work at the studio would perhaps result in serious consequences. Not until then did he consent to remain away from the studios. However, from his bedside, by means of a convenient phone, he has been able to direct the operations of his department.

Vitagraph Director C. Jay Williams has started work on the production of a one-part comedy by Fred H. James. Mr. Williams has selected Jewell Hunt, the "Dance Girl of the Movies,' Garry McGarry, Charles Wellesley and Harry Fisher to portray the principal characters.

In the film version of "Over Night," to be released by the World Film corporation, December 20, there is a great suffrage parade. The directors obtained permission to film sections of the real parade up Fifth avenue this autumn. Included therefore in the cast of "Over Night" will appear such noted leaders of the militant suffrage movement as Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, Carrie Chapman Catt, Inez Milholland Boissevain (now on Henry Fords' Peace Ark) and Harriet Stanton Blatch.

* * *

Frank Currier, well-known for his work in Vitagraph productions, has been promoted to the position of director. His first picture will be a one-part comedy written by Agnes C. Johnston, with William Bangman, Helen Guerney and Robert Turner portraying the important parts, and will be produced at the Vitagraph studio at Bay Shore, Long Island.

New Film Carrying Rule

Boston Fire Prevention Commission Wants to Prohibit Carrying Films on Street Cars, Passenger Trains and Ferryboats—Operators' Union Heard—Reasons for the Rule—Exchange Men Who Oppose It—Set February 1.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, Boston Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BOSTON, MASS.—A proposition was made during the past week before Fire Prevention Commissioner O'Keefe of Metropolitan Boston to prohibit the transportation of moving picture films on street cars, passenger trains and ferryboats. It was vigorously opposed by the New England representatives of the various film manufacturers, but met with considerable favor from District Chief Walsh of the Boston fire department who commended it.

Wanted Eight-Story Film Building.

The subject came up as an aftermath to a scheduled hearing in which John B. Graham and Clarence Blackall, Boston architects, sought to have waived the regulation regarding the height of buildings in which films may be stored. They appeared for capitalists who desire to erect an eight-story structure for the purpose of locating all film companies in one building, but who are prevented from going on with the enterprise because, under the fire prevention regulations, buildings used for the storage of films are limited to two stories in height.

Attorney Herbert Parker, representing the General Film, opposed the waivure plan submitted. He believed that the regulation was in the nature of a safeguard, and while he had no objection to the utmost use of discretion on the part of the fire commissioner in individual cases, he believed the principle itself should stand as it is now listed in the regulations of the Fire Hazard Commission.

Sets February 1st as Date.

That closed the hearing on that subject, whereupon Commissioner O'Keefe announced that the new regulation regarding cases in which films might be transported would become effective on Feb. 1 instead of Jan. 1, as it was originally intended. The change was decided upon, he stated, because it had been brought to his attention that galvanized cans were not the only safety appliances that might be used for the transportation of inflammable moving picture films. One which has been treated with lead and another which has been treated with nickle, both of which have favorably responded to tests, had been shown to him since the promulgation of the order, and he had decided that it was unfair to stipulate one form of can when others were on the market that would accomplish the same thing.

Operators Union Heard.

That presented William Frank of the Moving Picture Operators' Union, with the opportunity to bring up the entire subject of film transportation. He asked the commissioner if it were possible to regulate transportation.

He contended that at the present time the films were transported by messenger and that the operators are often pressed into service for this work. These men, he said, are often refused passage on street cars, and he instanced a recent case where a messenger was turned away from a subway car. He also stated that complaints have been registered from operators in Haverhill and Lawrence, where they have been refused passage on trains of the Boston and Maine railroad because they were carrying the films.

He told of seeing boys swapping films in the street, opening the cans and looking at the pictures. Ushers in the theaters, he declared, are sometimes used as messengers, and he believed that the fire prevention commissioner, if he had the power, should provide some safer means of transporting the inflammable films.

Commissioner O'Keefe asked whether the Moving Picture Operators' Union had taken any action on this question. Frank replied that it had and that it would like to see the whole matter of transportation regulated.

The Fire Chief's Reasons.

District Chief Walsh followed Mr. Frank on the stand and declared himself in favor of the regulation. He contended that it was a very dangerous practice to entrust the films to messengers in street cars or other vehicles used by the public. He stated that a boy with a cigarette or even a man might cause an accident that would result in an inquest. A collision of street cars or railroad trains in which these films were so carelessly transported might become a holocaust. He favored regulation to the extent of prohibiting the carriage of film on passenger vehicles. Commissioner O'Keefe related a recent case in the subway where a container was dropped and the film rolled to the bottom of the stairs. The condition was present, he said, for a frightful accident.

Exchange Men Oppose It.

The plan was opposed by Manager J. A. Eslaw of the New England Universal exchange; Manager George Balsdon of the New England office of the V-L-S-E, and manager J. C. Butman of the New England Mutual exchange. Balsdon said that the cases in which films were transported were the style compelled by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

BUYS ASSOCIATED SERVICE.

Fred B. Murphy, proprietor of the United Film Service of New England, has purchased the New England and New York State rights to the output of the Associated Film service. He will receive fifteen single and double reels each week.

Mr. Murphy is the only independent service man in this section of the country, and when making his purchases he always endeavors to get the best in the market.

Manager S. Moscow, of Mr. Murphy's Boston office, will have a weekly run-off each Wednesday afternoon in his hippodrome at 1 o'clock. Every exhibitor is invited to attend these runoffs and see the quality of the goods listed in the United program.

Starting a year ago with one office, Mr. Murphy has opened five branch offices. In talking with the WORLD correspondent, Mr. Murphy stated that his success is due to the harmony that has always existed between his employees and that each and every one of them has worked untiringly in his interests.

His branch offices are located in Bangor, Me., Springfield, Mass., Buffalo, N. Y.; Syracuse, N. Y., and Albany, N. Y.

In addition to the regular service program Mr. Murphy has a special feature department, having recently purchased the picturizations of several of Dickens' works and a number of features made by independent manufacturers.

"Peace" Feature's Office.

The Battle Cry of Peace Company has opened its New England office at No. 174 Pleasant street, Boston. The office is under the management of Samuel Grant, who in addition to booking the famous Vitagraph peace spectacle will also handle "Les Miserables."

NEWARK POLICE NOT CENSORS.

By Jacob J. Kalter, Newark Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NEWARK, N. J.—Vice Chancellor Howell, of Essex County, in a memorandum submitted last week declared that the police have absolutely no power to act as censors of moving pictures. Nevertheless Chief of Police Long, of Newark, declared: "If there is anything objectionable to a picture we will stop it."

The opinion of the vice-chancellor referred only to the "Birth of a Nation," in the opinion of the chief. The vice-chancellor's order makes permanent the injunction recently obtained restraining the police from interfering with the "Nation" film. The vice-chancellor further says in his memorandum, "I cannot see where the police authorities get their right to meddle in such matters. I know of no power in our police department to censor plays or theatrical exhibitions."

Lieutenants Harris and Quinn of the chief's staff, have acted as censors of other pictures. At a special exhibition of "Carmen" held at the Paramount, the censors passed favorably upon that production.

OPERATORS ELECT OFFICERS.

The Operators' Union, through John C. Tasto, a member of the executive board, has complained to the correspondent of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD that not enough space is devoted to their doings. So we are publishing in this issue the names of the newly-elected officers of Newark Local 244, M. P. M. O., chosen at the December meeting of the union.

The officers are: President, J. Higginson; vice-president, E. Burns; secretary, M. A. Carney; treasurer, Wm. Uessler; business representative, R. Cooper; sergeant-at-arms, J. Valentine; executive board, J. Higginson, E. Burns, W. Uessler, M. A. Carney, R. Cooper, J. C. Tasto, G. G. Gilligan. The operators all read the WORLD thoroughly, according to Mr. Tasto.

OLYMPIA CHANGES HANDS.

The Olympia theater, Norfolk street, at South Orange avenue, Newark, is now under the control of the Grossman-Illman Co., with offices at 31 Clinton street. The place has been thoroughly renovated and the name has been changed to the Regent theater. Henry Grossman will manage the new playhouse.

GENERAL OPENS NEW OFFICES.

The General Film company, which opened Newark offices at 230 Market street in October has found it necessary to move to larger quarters, and accordingly new offices at 16-8 Beaver street have been opened. Edward Bizar is the enterprising manager of the Newark branch. Edwin H. Wells and William Osborne have been added to the staff as roadmen covering the northeastern part of the state. Mr. Bizar reports very brisk business.

CITY THEATER'S NEW MANAGER.

I. Boyland, who with Edward W. McDonough leased the new City theater, at Seventh and Orange streets, from the E. & M. Amusement company, will assume the active management of Roseville's newest picture house.

TO BUILD $100,000 THEATER.

The M. & S. Amusement company, Martin Singer, president, and Walter Meier, secretary, are contemplating the erection of a new theater in the Roseville section of Newark to cost approximately $100,000. The house will be built at Sixth and Orange streets, Newark, the present site of the Roseville theater. Herman Jannes, who now manages the Roseville theater, will act in the same capacity for the new play house. According to Mr. Singer, the house will also have a roof garden, and all modern conveniences usually found in the up-to-date theaters. The new showhouse will probably be named the New Unique theater.

PROPOSES NEW ASSOCIATION.

The Walnut theater, 214-216 Walnut street, Newark, observed its second anniversary last week. Max L. LeBow, the manager, stated to the WORLD correspondent that he desired to have an organization of motion picture exhibitors in Newark. Mr. LeBow is working actively toward that end, and it is probable that a Newark Moving Picture Exhibitors' League will be formed in the near future. At a meeting to be called soon it is expected that W. Stephen Bush, of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, will address the gathering on the benefits of organization and co-operation. Mr. LeBow declared that he would extend the invitation to Mr. Bush if the new exhibitors were willing to join such an organization.

IRVINGTON THEATER RESOLD.

The City theater, 765 Springfield avenue, Irvington, N. J., which the M. & S. Amusement company, of 306 Market street, Newark, recently sold to Walter Williams, has been repurchased by the former owners. The house seats 730 and is adjoined by a large open air theater.

LYCEUM THEATER IMPROVEMENTS.

The Lyceum theater, Broadway and 38th street, Bayonne, N. J., has installed a new modern current converter at a cost of $2,000. The house has been also improved in other particulars, especially the lobby. The Lyceum shows Paramount pictures exclusively in Bayonne, and at present booming the Travelogue series.

BLUM SAVES HIS WORLDS.

John Blum, manager of the Newark branch of the Greater New York Film Rental company, makes practical use of his MOVING PICTURE WORLDS. Every week he clips the sheets showing the dates of the film releases. In this way he knows the exact date of release of each picture. Mr. Blum said to the Newark correspondent of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD: "THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the authentic organ of the moving picture industry. It is to the trade what the text-book is to the scholar. I would not think of being without it for an instant.

Too Many Nearby Houses

Philadelphia Theater Men in Congested District Trying to Formulate Plan to Relieve Situation—May Combine to Close One House—How It May Be Done and What Will Happen to Unlucky Manager.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—The approach of the Christmas holiday season witnesses a most peculiar situation in local moving picture circles. For many years the number of moving picture theaters in Philadelphia has steadily increased until at the present time there are many hundred such places of amusement to be found in this city and its suburbs. The natural result has been that competition has become so keen and the recent depression in business has grown to such proportions that the trade in general has been not benefited, but encumbered by this state of conditions. In order to combat this destructive tendency local exhibitors propose to form a combination for the purpose of pooling the theatrical interests.

Want Local Theater Combination.

A remarkable illustration of the idea involved can be given by taking Woodland avenue as an example. On this business thoroughfare, between the small space of 49th and 63d streets, there are to be found six moving picture theaters, three of which are gathered between 58th and 63d streets. As a consequence of this crowding the exhibitors find profits to be very small and it may be added that one establishment has been losing a small sum weekly for the past four or five months. In order to successfully solve this perplexing situation the following plan has been originated:

Pool on Rent of Closed House.

At special meetings, dates to be selected in the near future, the most important question as to which theater shall close its doors will be settled. Take for instance a theater operating in the neighborhood of several other establishments, and one which is barely meeting running expenses. Would it not be better for the neighboring exhibitors to close the doors of this theater and bear the rental expense among themselves? In this manner the expenses of light, help and other additional burdens would be saved and the patrons of the theater would naturally visit those in the immediate vicinity. Now the question arises as to what is going to happen to the exhibitor thus affected. This will be answered in the following manner: If the exhibitor in question is small and has never made a success of his establishment, nothing further will be heard from him. If he is an experienced exhibitor and one who, with a little help thrown in his direction would more than likely prove successful, he will be well taken care of, perhaps appointed as a manager in some other theater.

Will Discuss Admission.

The majority of Philadelphia exhibitors are heartily in favor of the new system and have announced that they will lend every possible assistance in order to make the plan a success. The price of admission is a question to be discussed at a later date, it being understood that the exhibitors do not wish to form the impression that this is to be a monopoly in restraint of trade or an organization working along those lines, but merely a mutual protective agency. A meeting has been called for the 26th of December, and according to reports received it will be attended by practicaly every exhibitor in town.

PROMISE XMAS PROGRAMS.

Many preparations are being made by local exhibitors to give their patrons a treat de luxe on Christmas Day. The best programs possible to be obtained will be offered and in many cases extra attractions will be in vogue. The month of December is generally a poor month for the moving picture trade, and this year has not proven to be an exception. However, from Christmas until the Lenten season begins, business is at its height and it is then that the exhibitor looks for crowded houses and large receipts.

FRANKLIN FILM CASE AGAIN IN COURT.

Legal Point in Right of Appeal from Censor Decisions.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Contrary to the general belief, the case of the Franklin Film company versus the State Board of Censors has not been definitely settled. The case was once more hailed into court on the purely legal point of the right to appeal. Judge Barrett requested that briefs be filed in the case, as the question involved rests upon his final decision. It is understood that the film interests will carry the case into the Supreme Court if an unfavorable decision is handed down. Meantime the film entitled "Virtue" is tabooed in the State of Pennsylvania.

A copy of a New York newspaper referring to the case and headed "Court Overrules Pennsylvania Censors," was handed up to the judge as being in contempt of court. He denounced it as being absolutely untrue, and requested Attorney Krauss to communicate with his clients on its publication. The court having handed down no decision, had not overruled the censors. It will be remembered that in the article in last week's MOVING PICTURE WORLD no mention was made of the court having handed down a decision, it being remarked that an agreement had been reached without the aid of the court.

MANUFACTURERS' AMALGAMATED LOOKS AT READING.

Representatives May Buy Site for Studio —Will Help City.

Representatives of the Manufacturers' Amalgamated Motion Picture company of New York recently paid a visit to Reading, Pa., for the purpose of acquiring a suitable location for a studio and laboratory. It is thought more than likely that the Casino at Carsonia Park will be selected as the most desirable spot, as it affords an ideal location for a studio. In addition the scenery of both mountains and lowlands in that vicinity is an added attraction. Robert J. Bentley, president of the company, in an interview declared that if Reading were selected as a location for their establishments a number of Reading people would be given employment. It will be remembered that Carsonia Park formerly was inhabited by a picture village which, after taking several five-reel pictures, disbanded.

A charter was recently granted to the Penn Counties Amusement company of Allentown. The incorporators and directors are John J. Meyl, 228 N. Fourth street; Edward H. Buss and Leon Buss, both of Emaus, and Margaret Meyl, Allentown. The character and object of the new concern is to acquire, lease, own, maintain and conduct theaters, playhouses, motion picture theaters and other places of amusement, and to acquire, sell, manage and dispose of all property and accessories of every kind pertaining to such business.

Anent Shipping Values

Amendment of Cummins Law Before Congress—Will Relieve Shipper from the Necessity of Declaring Full Values of Goods Shipped—Carrier to Be Liable Only for Value Declared.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Senator John W. Weeks of Massachusetts has introduced into Congress an amendment to the so-called Cummins law, approved March 4 last, which proposes to relieve shippers of the necessity of declaring the true value of express shipments and to relieve travelers of the necessity of declaring the true value of their baggage.

Since the passage of the Cummins law the Interstate Commerce Commission has held that express shipments and baggage came within the provisions of that act, which, according to representatives of the New York Merchants' Association and other organizations, worked a decided hardship upon manufacturers' film exchanges and travelers by compelling them to pay higher transportation charges than was the case when they were permitted to value their shipments at lower figures.

The Weeks amendment makes no change in freight shipments, but adds to the Cummins law a proviso that statements of value will not be necessary when goods are offered for transportation as baggage or express unless the person specifically states that he desires the carrier to assume a risk greater than the normal risk proprovided for, and is therefore willing to pay a higher transportation charge.

The proposed amendment follows: The shipper shall not be required to declare in writing the value of such property unless a greater proportion to the owner than the said maximum liability is demanded by the shipper; and where the value of the property so tendered for transportation is so declared in writing by the shipper the carrier shall not be liable beyond the amount so declared; and as to such property so tendered for transportation as express or as baggage it shall not be unlawful for the shipper to declare less than the actual value."

H. CRANDALL IN NEW DEAL?

WASHINGTON, D. C.—There was a well defined rumor afloat here last week to the effect that Harry M. Crandall and Joseph P. Morgan had put through a deal whereby they became the owners of the Avenue Grand theater, on Pennsylvania avenue, near Eighth street, Southeast. It is understood that $55,000 was involved in the purchase of the land and the theater. It is known that Mr. Crandall has been looking over the section with a view to establishing or taking over a theater there, and the rumor seems to bear out the fact that he is endeavoring to get a string of houses, probably one in each neighborhood. His name has been continually connected with a big Mount Pleasant deal and it was only recently that he secured control of the Apollo theater, on H street, Northeast. This latter is proving a very profitable venture. Mr. Morgan is at present operating the Princess theater, on H street, near Twelfth street, Northeast. The Avenue Grand is at present controlled by a Mr. Harris, of Pittsburgh, Pa., and is managed for him by Mr. Keenan. It is said that his lease to the property expires in March or April.

ENLARGING THE SAVOY.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Plans have been prepared for the Savoy Theater Company for the enlargement of their house on Fourteenth street, Northwest. The company contemplates tearing out the side walls and extending the width of the theater by thirty feet. The house is 110 feet deep and this will give an additional six hundred seats, bringing the total seating capacity to 1,400. The new seats are to be built up above the floor, giving a mezzanine effect from within the auditorium. The Savoy theater is equipped with a park having a seating capacity of fourteen hundred. The addition of the six hundred seats in the house will mean that should the park be filled to capacity in the summer time and a sudden storm comes up, all of the patrons will be able to obtain seating accommodations within the theater. This in itself is a distinct advantage and the need for the enlargement was felt during the past summer when the park was filled nightly.

Despite the fact that the Savoy theater is at present one of the handsomest in this city, a considerable sum is to be expended in making the interior even more elaborate. The lobby will be enlarged to the extent of thirty feet and will be redecorated to conform to the auditorium. When the work is completed, the company expects to raise its prices to fifteen cents for general admission nightly. The builders are expected to begin tearing out the side walls immediately following the close of the winter season.

THE NEW PARAMOUNT OFFICES.

Washington, D. C.—The new Paramount offices at 525 Thirteen street, Northwest, will be very attractive when the work of getting the place into shape is completed. The exchange is located on the second floor of the building and at the head of the stairs will be the reception room for visiting exhibitors. Beyond this will be the bookkeeping, cashier's and booking departments, while at the front, separated from the rest of the exchange by partitions of oak and glass, are the offices, at the left, that of George Mann, the manager, and at the right, that of J. H. Walraven, the publicity man of the exchange. These offices are very well lighted for practically the whole of the front is of glass. Over the center of the space is a skylight, while at the rear there are very large windows.

The half of the floor space at the rear is devoted to the storage of paper and films, the film inspection and shipping departments, and to the room occupied as a darkroom by James Goebel, the Paramount cameraman.

Mr. Mann states that the business of the exchange is very good; that he headed the list of exchanges of his company last month. This is indeed very gratifying to him in view of the fact that this territory is one of the smallest in the country.

WILL DISTRIBUTE PEACE FILM.

Arthur S. Hyman, who for several months has been the manager of the local branch of the General Film, has severed his connections with that company and is reported to have secured the state rights to the feature "The Battle Cry of Peace" for the District of Columbia, Virginia, West Virginia and North and South Carolina. John Payette, his assistant, will assist his successor in becoming acquainted with the territory.

Nat Glazier in Philadelphia.

Nat Glaser, who recently severed his connections with Miller Bros., for whom he has been acting as manager of the Leader theater, on Ninth street, Northwest, for a number of years, has gone to Philadelphia, where he has secured employment with the Stanley company. Mr. Glaser is to act in a managerial position for that firm. He is well known in Washington and has a host of friends, all of whom regret that he is leaving the city.

MARYLAND NOTES.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Lexington Theater Sold.

BALTIMORE, MD.—It is reported that William Fait, Sr., who controls several theaters in Baltimore, has disposed of his interests in the Lexington theater, at 314 West Lexington street. The names of the new owners have been withheld, but it is said that the house will hereafter be managed by two women. It is also stated that a number of improvements are to be made to the theater.

Five New Baltimore Permits.

Five permits have been granted by the building inspector's office for the construction of that many new motion picture houses in Baltimore.

The Gordon Realty company will erect a theater at Baltimore and Catherine streets which will be 117 feet long and 87 feet wide, which will cost, it is estimated, about $12,000.

The Consolidated Engineering company has been awarded a contract for the erection of a two-story theater building at North avenue and Ninth street by the Walbrook Amusement company and will begin work shortly.

J. H. Kelly has been awarded a contract by the Linwood Amusement company for the erection of a one-story theater building.

Work has already been begun on the proposed new theater for the Howard Amusement company to be built at 404-406 North Howard street after plans produced by Architects Spranklin & Childs. It is to be 37½ feet wide and 121 feet deep and will cost approximately $10,000. J. J. Moylan will be the builder.

The fifth of the new houses is that proposed by S. Rath to be erected at 2804 Pennsylvania avenue. The location of the theater for the Howard Amusement company is in the downtown section, while that of the Linwood Amusement company is in a well populated district.

VIRGINIA NEWS LETTER.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Censoring by Advance Notices.

WINCHESTER, VA., according to Alan J. Bachrach, who is traveling through this state for the V-L-S-E, has a very peculiar law which is strangely applicable to motion picture theaters. It seems that if the manager of a theater raises the price of admission to above 10 cents for a motion picture exhibition he is immediately called upon to pay a special tax fee of $7.50 per day for that privilege. This tax is not assessed if the increased price is caused by the running of a road or vaudeville show, but only applies to motion pictures.

Winchester has now an official censorship board, the working of which, if not quite so serious, would be decidedly laughable. The board is made up of two officials appointed by the council, and they pass upon every picture that is to be run in the town. Their usual procedure is to carefully go over the advance notices of films and if the description does not appear to come within their views as to morality, it would be useless for the exhibitor to contract for its exhibition. These censors have been known to sit tight in their refusal to pass a film because the title gave the impression that there might be something out of the ordinary in the pictures.

It is said they recently blacklisted "Tess of the Storm Country" because of the fact that there is in the film a baby whose parentage is doubtful. They condemned "The Man Who Could Not Beat God" because of their disapproval of the title, but Mr. Henry, who operates the Empire theater, finally convinced them that their views were slightly far fetched.

Star at Waynesboro Enlarged.

A. E. Jordan has just completed the work of enlarging his Star theater, in Waynesboro, Va., and he now has a very attractive theater. This was formerly utilized as a church and has a seating capacity of about four hundred. A pianist and a drummer play through each performance.

Ned Burke Managing Staunton Theater.

Ned Burke, who recently succeeded Monte Craig as manager of the New theater, at Staunton, Va., has just made an announcement to the effect that in future this will be operated exclusively as a motion picture house. This is a very modern theater and is attractively decorated throughout. It is equipped with two balconies and all told seats slightly over eleven hundred people. This theater is operated by the owners of the Savoy theater, in Staunton. Fulton Witz is the general manager and he takes considerable interest in the selection of films for both houses. Mr. Burke is young and decidedly aggressive. He was formerly engaged in the newspaper business, has many friends and some very good ideas with respect to publicity. While this is his first experience in the motion picture business, he has already grasped many of the details incident to the management of so large a house. He is quick to learn and his advertising and other newspaper experience is standing him in good stead in his new undertaking.

Harry Church to Manage Norfolk Theater.

E. H. Markinson has resigned his position as manager of the Strand theater, in Norfolk, Va., operated by J. D. Hofheimer, and has been succeeded by Harry Church. Mr. Church has for several years been the manager of the Bonita theater in that city, operated by S. L. Harris.

PITTSBURGH NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

G. R. Ainsworth Goes to General Film.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—G. R. Ainsworth, one of the best-known film men in the Pittsburgh territory, who has been handling "The Diamond From the Sky" for the Mutual Film Corporation, severed his connections with that concern Saturday and on Monday he transferred his office to the General Film Company, where he will have charge of the bookings on "The Strange Case of Mary Page," a serial to be produced by the Essanay Company, featuring Henry B. Walthall and Edna Mayo.

Mr. Ainsworth came to Pittsburgh as road man for George Kleine's Attractions, under Manager Harvey B. Day. When Mr. Day took charge of the Pittsburgh office of the Fox Film Corporation Mr. Ainsworth accompanied him, where he remained until last April when he joined the Mutual. He has many friends among the exhibitors and he is expected to make a big success of the coming Essanay serial.

Managers Invited to Dinner.

Mrs. J. P. Donovan, wife of the general manager of the Rowland & Clark theaters of Pittsburgh, arranged a delightful surprise for her husband Sunday, November 28, by inviting the various managers of the Rowland & Clark theaters for the afternoon and evening at her home. An elaborate dinner was served and together with music and addresses the guests agreed that the gathering was one of the best arranged and most enjoyable affairs of the kind they ever attended.

James B. Clark was present, as was also Publicity Manager M. J. C. Kornblum and the following house managers: Jerome Casper, Regent; W. F. Kirsch, Bellevue; A. J. Simon, Oakland and Strand; W. J. Bernardi, Arsenal, and George Vogenberger, Belmar.

Leo Levinson Managing New Exchange.

Abe Warner, one of the best known film men in the country, is establishing a chain of exchanges in various cities for the purpose of leasing feature productions. The Pittsburgh office has been opened at 127 Fourth avenue, and Leo F. Levison is manager. Mr. Levison is well known in the Pittsburgh territory as manager of the World Film Corporation, which position he resigned six months ago to go with the Fox Film Corporation.

Mr. Warner leaves the latter part of the week for Cleveland, where he will open a branch and will then visit other cities with the same object in view.

Buys Noted Plays Exchange.

An important business transaction was closed last Monday, when Matthew Teplitz, of the Specialty Film Company, purchased the entire stock of films and business of the Noted Plays Feature Company, conducted by Adolph Klein, at 101 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh. Mr. Teplitz and Morris Berger, as a partner, will conduct the business in the future at Mr. Klein's location, the transferring of the lease being part of the transaction.

By this consolidation the Specialty Film Company now has an exceptionally fine list of pictures, including a number of Life Photo productions, as well as other feature subjects, covering every variety of styles and titles.

J. S. Fitzgerald Becomes a Manager.

J. S. Fitzgerald, formerly manager of the Exhibitors' Publishing Company of Pittsburgh, resigned that position last week and has assumed the management of the Stuben theater at Steubenville, Ohio.

The Steuben is an up-to-date house with a seating capacity of 1,000 and it is expected by Mr. Fitzgerald's friends that he will make it a money-maker.

Remodeling Luna at Monessen, Pa.

Messrs. Paradis & Hanakis, who recently purchased the Luna theater in Monessen, Pa., announces that the work on remodeling is progressing rapidly and they expect to have the house ready for reopening about the 20th of December. The building is being rewired and a new screen and new machines are being installed. This house was purchased about four weeks ago at a constable's sale. Tom Raiden, well known among the Pittsburgh exhibitors, will be the manager of the house.

BUFFALO NEWS LETTER.

By Billy Bison, Buffalo Correspondent (229 Oxford Avenue) of Moving Picture World.

Triangle Films at Palace Theater.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—A notable event was the recent first presentation of the famous Triangle films at the Palace theater, Buffalo. The opening bill was Douglas Fairbanks in "The Lamb," Mack Sennett's new comedy, "Saved by Wireless," and on the last half of the week, "The Coward," and Weber and Fields in "The Best of Enemies." The special music for each picture, written by William Furst, was interpreted by an orchestra of 10 pieces.

Despite the high prices of Triangle films in other cities, the Palace theater is presenting the plays at the following schedule of prices: Afternoon, 10 and 15 cents; evening, 10, 15 and 25 cents. Crowds in the theater and overflowing the lobby were handled advantageously by Manager Mosher of the Palace and his staff.

Mutual Staff Celebrates.

The members of the staff of the Buffalo branch of the Mutual recently celebrated the entrance of the new quarters at 106 Pearl street with a get-together dinner. The esteem in which G. H. Christoffer, the manager, is held, was shown. After the dinner G. H. Penn of the road staff presented an enameled brass desk set to Mr. Christoffer, the gift being presented with a short speech.

Big "Peace" Film Stirs Buffalo.

"The Battle Cry of Peace," recently featured by Manager Shea, of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, was a success from every viewpoint. When the doors opened at noon of the first performance there was a constantly changing crowd in line from the entrance to the theater far down the lobby out into Main street and for a half block down Main street until after 9 o'clock at night. No moving picture show has ever been seen in a single day by so many thousands of Buffalo people.

New Clinton Mortimer Offices.

ROCHESTER.—The Clinton Mortimer Corporation, which will build the Piccadilly theater in Rochester, N. Y., has elected these officers: William Deininger, president; James G. Comerford and A. B. Headley, vice-presidents; William S. Riley, treasurer, and W. H. Seeley, secretary. The plans for the new Piccadilly were approved and the architects instructed to complete the remaining details. It is expected that the theater will be open to the public by June 1, 1916.

Open Theater in Lyons.

In Lyons, N. Y., the new Ohmann moving picture theater was opened recently. This building was built for Ohmann Brothers, of Lyons, at a cost of $20,000. The new house is on the ground floor, located in the rear of the Wayne Press building in William street. The building is 80 by 60 and 35 feet high, and is reached from the street by a corridor 75 feet in depth with a canopy over the walk. The construction is of steel framework, covered with concrete and hollow tile. The floors are concrete and set with opera chairs. The main floor has a seating capacity of 800, and the balcony seats 175 more. The interior finish is of buff and oak.

Harry Somerville's Mother Dies.

Harry Somerville, former manager of the Family and Airovict theaters, Buffalo, recently attended the funeral of his mother in Chicago.

Harold Edell Entertains Newsies.

Manager Harold Edell of the Strand theater, Buffalo, recently had as his guests a thousand newsboys, employed by the Buffalo News. Among the popular films was one showing the boys at their Thanksgiving dinner. The management of the Strand co-operated to make the entertainment a success, and its success was shown by the cheers which the newsboys gave repeatedly for Manager Edell, for Lyndsey Spence, who played the big pipe organ, and for the ushers and the house staff, all of whom did the extra duty gladly that the newsies might enjoy the show.

Walter C. Moon Resigns.

Walter C. Moon has resigned his position as manager of the Happy Hour theater, Buffalo. Mr. Moon has had a wide experience as a press representative, and will in the future devote his energies to publicity, which will include special advertising.

C. H. Bowe Takes New Position.

Charles H. Bowe, formerly connected with the staff of the Academy, and more recently manager of the Frontier theater, Buffalo, has assumed his duties as manager of the Allendale theater, taking the place of Lewis Isenberg, who is to manage the Columbia theater, that city.

Both the Allendale and Columbia theaters are in the system of houses operated by the United Theatrical Attractions company.

Cleveland License Fees

Local Picture Men to Make Vigorous Fight Against the Proposed New Method of Licensing Picture Theaters—Minimum Fee of $25 May Be Asked and Upward Scale from That, According to Seating Capacity.

By J. D. Raridan, Cleveland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CLEVELAND motion picture men are preparing a vigorous fight on the proposed ordinance being drafted by Edward A. Meyers, Twenty-second ward councilman, to place a minimum license fee of $25 a year on picture theaters. According to Meyers' proposal, the license charge would range upward from $25, according to the seating capacity.

Meyers says that picture theaters get special service from the city and should be forced to pay for it. He points out that the city conducts examinations to determine the qualifications of film operators, and has fire wardens and sanitary policemen making regular inspections. He expects to introduce the measure at a meeting in the near future.

Picture Men Will Combat It.

The picture men in Cleveland do not agree with Meyers in any particular. "We will fight Meyers' ordinance with every means at our command," B. J. Sawyer, chairman of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League committee on law, said.

"The state of Ohio and the city of Cleveland have put such overpowering restrictions on the building and operation of picture theaters that the motion picture men are now taxed way beyond any other business.

"Picture theaters are now deemed the legitimate prey of politicians, who have dreams of the enormous profits being made from the business."

Sawyer predicts that because of these restrictions the admission price of picture theaters will have to be increased. "In the end these added burdens will have to be borne by the people," Sawyer said, "or the picture men will have to go out of business."

To Arrange Public Hearings.

LeMott Smith, of Alliance, Ohio, and William Slimm, of Cleveland, are other members of the committee on law. They expect to arrange for public hearings on the Meyers ordinance.

Sawyer has accepted an invitation to address the West Side Community Council on the motion picture question in the near future. The council, composed of social workers, is preparing a report on motion pictures, with particular relation to their effect on the youth of Cleveland.

Allen T. Burns, director of the Cleveland Foundation, spoke before this body a few nights ago, deploring the failure of Ohio censorship.

"I think we will have to come back to local regulation of moving picture theaters," Burns said. "Censorship is not the proper way to control them. I would favor an arrangement whereby municipalities should issue motion picture licenses to be revoked on the failure of the proprietors operating their theaters so as to offend public decency or menace the morals of our children in any way. This is done with other classes of amusements, and why not with motion picture theaters.

"I think if people have any objection to the way their children are spending their leisure time, whether it be in picture shows or elsewhere, it is up to them to offer a substitute."

As such a substitute Burns suggests special films censored by social workers and exhibited free at school house social centers.

HOLDS ANOTHER SESSION.

A second housewarming in the new headquarters of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' league, Republic building, Cleveland, was held Tuesday with national and state officers of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America as guests of honor.

The speakers at a business session were Fred J. Herrington, of Pittsburg, national president; LeMott Smith, of Alliance, state president; Frank Beverstock, of Mansfield, state vice-president, and Frank Kenney, of Cleveland, representing Ohio as a national vice-president.

More than 100 motion picture men from other cities attended the meeting. A social session in the evening concluded the affair. The state and local executive boards met during the day.

Free Sunday Show.

The people of East Cleveland were the guests of the management of Wind-a-Meer theater Sunday. Pending a test of the ordinance forbidding motion picture exhibition on Sunday if an admission fee is charged, the management decided to operate the house, but to charge no admission on Sundays. Petitions are being circulated to secure the repeal of the ordinance.

Against Suggestive Films.

The Cleveland Plain Dealer is conducting a crusade against suggestive films. As a part of the campaign it is publishing a column of opinions from readers who have witnessed photoplays in the various local theaters.

The Reel theater, East Ninth street, repeated "Bella Donna," with Pauline Frederick in the stellar role on Monday at the request of patrons who failed to see it before.

The Superior Slide company, which manufactures slides and films for advertising purposes, has just enlarged its quarters, to occupy half of the second floor of the Columbia building. The concern was organized five years ago by B. W. Reuben. It has branches in Detroit and Toronto.

BIG HALL FOR "PEACE" FEATURE

By Kenneth C. Crain, Jr., Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CINCINNATI, O.—It is understood that Manager R. L. Shrader of the V-L-S-E office is contemplating securing Music Hall for an extended run of "The Battle Cry of Peace," the Vitagraph dramatization of Hudson Maxim's plea for the defense of America, which has done so well elsewhere. Two reasons are advanced for this move, one being the difficulty of securing a satisfactory downtown house for a long run for the picture, and the other the large seating capacity of Music Hall, which Manager Shrader believes would be regularly taxed for this production. No arrangements have yet been announced in this connection, but the circumstances indicated make it probable that the Cincinnati public will have its first opportunity to see the big picture at Music Hall, where numerous limited engagements of pictures have done well, although the recent attempt to run pictures there regularly was a failure.

ON ITS FEET AGAIN.

The prosperity of the Park Hall theater, in Oakley, O., was convincingly shown last week by an event which was the occasion of much rejoicing by Manager William John, who has an interest in the theater as one of the firm which built it as well as in its operation. Moorman & John, as contractors and builders, constructed the house, one of the largest suburban theaters in the city, about two years ago, at a cost of about $50,000, and financial difficulties resulting caused a receivership. Mr. John was left in general charge of the building and the theater itself, however, and last week the attorneys handling the case moved the lifting of the receivership, as all of the debts of the firm have been paid in full and the venture has proved a financial success. The Park Hall has established itself firmly in the affections of the residents of the East Hyde Park and Oakley districts, and has a large and profitable clientele.

TRIANGLE BOOKINGS.

Manager C. C. Hite of the Cincinnati Triangle offices announces the closing of a number of good contracts for the use of Triangle features. Some of the big fellows who have signed up with the Triangle recently include Banks & Brown, owners of the Hippodrome, the leading house at Williamson, W. Va.; the opera house, Gallipolis, O.; the Wonderland, Point Pleasant, W. Va.; the Camden, Parkersburg, W. Va.; the Hippodrome, of Marietta, O., and the Majestic, Athens, O. Harry Kress, manager of May's Opera house, the biggest theater in Piqua, O., was so pleased with his first week's run of Triangle pictures that he wired Manager Hite his congratulations. Mr. Hite journeyed up to Indianapolis last Saturday in order to be present at the opening display of Triangle features at the Keystone theater, one of the leading houses of the Hoosier capital.

BIG FEATURES ONLY.

Schwalm & Broomhall, proprietors of the Jefferson and Jewel theaters, of Hamilton, O., are going after big business in a big way. They are planning, and have, in fact, already started, an ambitious advertising campaign on behalf of the houses, which have adopted a policy under which only leading features will be shown. In this connection Messr. Broomhall and Schwalm were in Cincinnati last week, and made arrangements with Manager C. E. Holah of the Pathe exchange for 52 weeks' service at the Jewel, two days a week, of Pathe Gold Rooster features, and for the exhibition of Triangle films at the Jefferson, beginning on January 1.

A VALUABLE CONTRIBUTION.

Manager Kessler of the Star theater, Sandusky, O., showed a fine spirit recently, when he furnished free of charge for an entertainment for a local charity four reels of moving pictures, two comedies and a two-reel drama. The affair was highly successful, and Manager Kessler received the hearty thanks of its promoters, as the moving pictures were credited with drawing much of the crowd.

J. F. Potts Sells Lyric.

J. F. Potts, owner of the Arcana theater, of Portsmouth, O., intends to devote his attention exclusively to the Arcana in the future, as he has disposed of the Lyric theater, in Ashland, Ky., to Messrs. Carey & Hicks. Mr. Potts acquired the Lyric only three months ago, and it is understood that he made a neat profit on the deal. The house has seating capacity of 325.

New Show in Springfield, O.

Philip Chakeres, owner of the Majestic theater, Springfield, O., has made arrangements with the city authorities of Mechanicsburg, O., controlling the opera house there, for the use of the building for the exhibition of moving pictures, and has already started work on the complete renovation of the structure for that purpose.

New Company in Youngstown.

Hugh E. Gilkesan, James D. and George H. Kenney and W. E. Crider, of Youngstown, O., have organized a company for the purpose of constructing and operating several moving picture houses, incorporating recently under the name of the Gil-Ken Amusement Co., with a capital stock of $10,000.

OWENSBORO, KY., SEES "NATION" FILM.

The Grand theater at Owensboro, Ky., recently completed a three-day run of the Griffith production, "The Birth of a Nation." The film was shown at five performances and, in spite of the fact that it was shown almost on the eve of Christmas, it is estimated that thirty-five hundred people saw the play and that about $3,000 was paid for admission tickets. It was estimated that 1,000 persons saw the film on the last day of the run.

Fox Films at the Cherokee.

The Cherokee theater at Louisville, under a special arrangement entered into by the Keith interests, which are also interested in the theater, are now showing Fox productions on Sundays and Mondays as second run pictures, the original showings having been made at the Mary Anderson theater. These two houses are the only ones in the Fox cities showing Fox pictures under the Keith contract.

J. I. Schnitzer, manager of the Indianapolis office of the Central Film Service company, was in Louisville last week calling on A. C. Farrel, manager of the local office.

Buys Chattanooga Houses

The Theato and Alhambra Taken Over by John C. Twinam, of the Bijou—Will Split Triangle Service Between the Houses—Comedies at the Theato for Five Cents —Dramas at the Alhambra for Ten.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Tennessee Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.—A deal has been closed at Chattanooga, Tenn., whereby the Theato and Alhambra moving picture houses have been taken over by John C. Twinam, manager of the Bijou theater. The deal was closed with Howell Graham, who has been operating a string of theaters in Chattanooga for some time. The theaters will continue to operate at the popular prices established by Mr. Graham.

Shortly following the announcement in the change of management in the Theato and Alhambra theaters it was given out that the Triangle program, which had been shown at the Bijou theater, would be split up and the comedies shown for five cents at the Theato, while the dramas will be shown at the Alhambra for ten cents. The Bijou used pictures only to fill in between engagements of regular stage performers, and under the new arrangement the Triangle program will be shown constantly.

SUNDAY BENEFIT SHOWS.

Under the auspices of the Chattanooga branch of the American Jewish relief committee, a number of the Chattanooga theaters are operating on Sundays again for a limited period of three weeks. Funds received from the sale of tickets will be used in relieving the suffering of Jews in the war zone of Europe. Under the laws of the state there is nothing to prevent free shows being given on Sunday, or shows where the money is used for charitable purposes.

LOCAL CENSORS IN JACKSON.

Jackson, Tenn.—News has been received from Jackson to the effect that agitation has been started in that city for a board of censorship to censor all pictures shown. The matter has developed to such an extent that a committee from the Prostestant Pastors' Association was given an audience by the City Commissioners on December 1. At this meeting the commissioners promised that a joint meeting would be called of the moving picture exhibitors, commissioners and pastors, to discuss and determine what course should be followed without injury to the moving picture industry or deterioration of the morals of the community. Apparently there is no ill feeling in the movement on either side, and the movement has been inaugurated for the general good of the city.

Religious Services in Theater.

At Decherd, Tenn., Manager Anderson, of the Wonderland, has offered the theater to the various pastors of the town in order that union services may be held there every Sunday afternoon. The Rev. J. P. Luton, of the M. E. Church, at Winchester, and formerly of Nashville, was the first to take advantage of the offer and preached a forceful sermon to a large audience. Special music, furnished by the high school orchestra, will be a feature of the Sunday afternoon services at the theater.

"Stingaree" Begins Well.

The first of the new "Stingaree" series of photoplays, produced by Kalem was recently shown to appreciative audiences at the Elite theater, of Nashville. This first picture was the photoplay, "An Enemy to Mankind." From the crowds present to see the firs picture it is thought that each of the series will go well.

Nashville Theater Notes.

A multiple reel show of unusual size was recently shown at the Belmont theater, at Nashville, when eight reels of film were put on. This program included the three-reel Lubin feature, "The Line Up," and the five-reel World Film corporation, Wm. A. Brady photoplay, "The Boss." Eight reel programs are rather unusual in Nashville and this proved a very good card.

The Parthenon theater, at Nashville, recently engaged James Able, and the Able orchestra, to play a special musical program to bring out the fine points in the five-reel production, "Tables Turned," in which Emmy Wehlen, the delightful comic opera and dramatic favorite, is seen. In addition to the five-reel feature, the Parthenon showed two excellent reels of Keystone comedy and gave away a free moving picture magazine.

Large audiences, composed mainly of the fair sex, attended the Crescent theater, at Nashville, during the showing of the intensely dramatic production, "Should a Wife Forgive?"

Louisville's Proposed New Picture Theater

Proposed New Picture Theater at Second and A Streets Takes Definite Shape—Incorporators and Stockholders—$36,000 Capital.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—The proposed moving picture theater at Second and A streets, Louisville, took definite form last week, when articles of incorporation were filed by the Second Street Amusement company, with a capital stock of $36,000. The incorporators are R. W. Bingham, J. J. Douglas, George K. Dehler and Aaron Kohn. Max L. Simons and Arthur H. Mann are also stockholders. The stock is divided into 360 shares of the par value of $100, and the stockholders are all well known local men.

This will be one of the first Louisville theaters to be erected in an exclusive residential district, and it will cater largely to family patronage. Joseph & Joseph, architects, have let the contract to Leitchfield & Metzner for erection of the building, work on which has started. The building contract alone amounts to $18,000, while plumbing, heating, electrical and ventilation work will bring the figure up to something over $25,000.

The structure will be of brick and absolutely fireproof. The front will be of cream enamel brick, with stone trimmings, and the lobby will be of brown tile. On account of the lot's location in a residential district it was decided that the house would be held back from the sidewalk to the general building line of the block. Two steps from the street will rise to a concrete plaza, and there will be grass plots and flower beds to the right and left. Six exits will be provided, more than the building code requirement, and forced ventilation appliances installed. There will be fourteen windows in the house to admit fresh air and sunshine.

First run films will be shown, and the program changed daily. The house will seat 750 people. A contest has been started for a prize of $25 in gold to be given to the person suggesting the best name for the theater, which will be completed early in February.

NEW HEAD AT LOCAL MUTUAL.

Announcement has been made of a change in the management of the Louisville office of the Mutual. Norman M. Dixon, who has been in charge of this office for several months, has accepted a position with the Indianapolis office of the General Film. O. L. Smith, formerly connected with the New York office of the World Film corporation, has taken charge of the Louisville Mutual office. Mr. Smith has for fourteen years been actively engaged in the moving picture industry. He has had experience in studio managing, exhibiting, and exchange work, and is well posted all along the line. He has worked through the east and south, having had charge of houses in Cincinnati, New Orleans and other points, Louisville being about as far west as he has ever worked.

FRANKFORT HOUSE REOPENS.

Frankfort, Ky.—The Capital theater, of Frankfort, which was recently leased by the interests which control the Broadway Amusement company's chain of theaters in Louisville, has been completed and opened to the public. The entire building has been done over and now presents a very attractive appearance. There are 484 mahogany chairs, of the ball bearing type, on the lower floor, 135 in the balcony and 165 in the gallery, the latter to be reserved for the colored patrons except on special occasions. A feature of the building is that the operating booth is entirely removed and is built of galvanized iron on the room of the Council Chamber.

Chosen Kentucky Items.

At Flemingsburg, Ky., a number of improvements have been made at the Princess, including a new Power machine.

The Loveridge Poster Advertising Company, of Lexington, Ky., has been incorporated, with a capital stock of $10,000. The incorporators are Burt T. Loveridge, Laura S. Loveridge and Sarah A. E. Flegel.

A. E. Irons, of the Cincinnati Motion Picture Company, of Cincinnati, O., recently made some moving pictures at Lexington, Ky., while the Grand Circuit trots and the Barnum & Bailey circus were going on. Runs of the fire department also are featured in the film, which is now being shown at various points in the Bluegrass district. Mr. Irons also made some pictures recently for the Frankfort, Ky., Chamber of Commerce. These pictures were later shown at the Gem theater, of Frankfort.

The Sunday Lexington Herald is running a special art section consisting of an attractively arranged sheet showing a number of the leading film stars, such as Clara Kimball Young, Vivian Martin, Florence Reed and many others.

Detroit's Duplex Opens

Uniquely Modern Theater with Double Auditorium Is Officially Opened to the Public on Tuesday, December 14—Thousands Were Turned Away on the Opening Night—Policy of House, Officers and Directors.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DETROIT, MICH.—Detroit's most unique theater, and said to be the only one of its kind in the world, is now in operation. It is called the Duplex and is located on the East Grand boulevard, just a stone's throw from Woodward avenue. It was built by the Grand Boulevard Theater company and designed by Fuller Clafflin, a Detroit architect. When it was first announced that a two-auditorium theater was to be erected many exhibitors, as well as show people, Pooh-poohed the idea, claiming it was radical and only the hobby of Mr. Claflin. But those who have been in the Duplex can now see wherein the two-auditorium theater has immense possibilities for attracting people. Although the main idea of the Duplex is to have everyone on hand when the feature begins, thus avoiding the necessity of waiting for the next show in order to see the whole feature, each theater can be operated as a separate enterprise and as two distinct theaters, each running a different show, with a separate charge for each house, and yet the patron would not have to go outside of the building. Many people go to two shows in one evening. Why wouldn't they go to two shows if they were in the same building?

The Duplex was opened officially Tuesday night, December 14, to an invitation audience, and about 2,000 people—stockholders and their friends—were in attendance. The public opening took place the following night, and thousands were turned away. Fully 500 motor cars lined Woodward avenue, the Grand boulevard and the side streets.

The officers of the Grand Boulevard Theater company, which operates the Duplex are: Fred A. Aldrich, president; Dr. J. B. Kennedy, vice-president; Harry Hulbert, treasurer; Arthur Bergeron, secretary; Jacob Stahl, director; H. M. Payne, general manager, and Earl Hennessy, theater manager. Mr. Hennessy was formerly manager of the Fine Arts theater. In a later issue the Moving Picture World will publish a more complete description of the Duplex, illustrated with photographs.

NORWOOD THEATER SOLD.

A. Arthur Caille and Henry J. Guthard have purchased the Norwood theater on Woodward avenue, near the Grand boulevard, thus giving them three Woodward avenue houses in which they are interested, as well as several others in Detroit and suburban towns. The Norwood was built and successsfully operated by C. E. Rall, who sold the property to A. M. Henry, who immediately turned it over to the new owners. The Norwood is a strictly modern playhouse and has 600 seats on the main floor and a dozen auto boxes in the balcony. It is in the midst of a thickly populated district. The Duplex and the new Regent, now being erected, are within a stone's throw.

BIG NEW PONTIAC HOUSES.

The following communication was sent to our Detroit office from Pontiac, Mich.: (Pontiac is only an hour by trolley from Detroit.)

"From announcements made this week indications are that by next spring there will be three new theaters in Pontiac, costing from $50,000 to $100,000 each. As far as can be learned at present the enterprises are entirely separate and distinct from each other.

It has been authoritatively stated that a new picture theater will be built on South Saginaw street, seating 1,200 people and costing about $50,000. Building operations, it is asserted, will be started almost immediately, and it is the intention of the management to open within four months. The site and names of interested parties have not been given out. This enterprise is separate from that announced by August and Julius Kleist, which is also to be pushed forward at once.

Detroit capital has obtained an option on the Hotel Wenonah property on South Saginaw street from Pelton & McGee, its present owners, with the intention of erecting a $70,000 moving picture theater thereon. The plan calls for an ornamental building, with stores on the first floor. It will seat 1,200."

F. C. KIRKPATRICK TO BUILD.

Another letter has been received at the Detroit office of the Moving Picture World from F. C. Kirkpatrick, president of the Kimber Theater company, at Titusville, Pa., operating the Grand Opera house and the Orpheum theater, who states that he is working on plans on another new theater.

TWO UNIVERSAL LEADERS.

Herewith we show a picture of M. H. Hoffman, general manager of branches of the Universal Film Company, and George W. Weeks, manager of the Detroit branch. The photo was taken at the request of our Detroit correspondent. It is an excellent likeness of both "victims." The Detroit branch of the Universal under the management of Mr. Weeks is proving a great success. The branch has yet to report the loss of a single customer through poor film or poor service. Mr. Weeks is extremely popular and his popularity proves the folly of that old saying that "nobody loves a fat man." No exchange manager in any city could have more sincere friends and could be better thought of than our own George Weeks.

M. H. Hoffman and G. W. Weeks.

Southern Michigan Amusement Co.

The Southern Michigan Amusement Co., Paw Paw, Mich., has been organized and incorporated. Those associated with the enterprise are M. L. Decker, V. C. Decker and L. A. Packer of Lawton and Mrs. G. Metzger of Kalamazoo. The company has closed a deal for a theater in Watervliet and negotiations are pending for several other photoplay houses in the southern part of Michigan.

Crowds on Feature Days.

Jack Mowitt, manager of the New Empire theater, Detroit, reports a big business on feature days. The Empire is the only daily change theater in Detroit running first-class pictures only. It never shows a picture if it has been previously exhibited at any other theater. A. J. Gilligham owns the Empire.

Kalamazoo House Reopens.

The Orpheum theater, Kalamazoo, completely remodeled and redecorated, reopened December 11, under the management of P. C. Schram and P. F. Marquette, both of Kalamazoo. The Orpheum is located on Main street. Admission is five cents, as it is not a large theater. Performances are continuous from 11 a. m. to 11 p. m. The interior has been done over in mahogany finish, with ivory and old gold settings.

ITS PATRONS ARE FAMILIES.

Illinois Exhibitor Has to Enlarge Big House for the Early Shows.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

OAK PARK, Ill.—The trend of family patronage toward moving picture shows is seen in the decision of John G. Hodgson, proprietor of the Oak Park theater at Oak Park, to expend $50,000 in enlarging his theater so that he can handle more business earlier in the evening. He will add 500 seats, bringing his main floor capacity up to 1,300. The volume of business offered for the first show has become a problem.

Closed Sunday in Bushnell.

Managers of moving picture theaters in Bushnell have withdrawn from the city council their petitions for permission to operate their shows on Sunday afternoons and evenings.

Drama Languishes.

Springfield, Ill.—The future of the Chatterton Opera house at Springfield, one of the oldest theatrical houses in the middle west, is problematical. It seems to be unable to make a go with "legitimate" attractions and the Capital city has its quota of downtown picture houses. The Chatterton attempted a good line of dramas and musical shows this winter, but on a recent visit to Springfield the Moving Picture World representative was informed attractions just out of Chicago and New York with real stars were playing to but a handful of people.

New Companies in Illinois.

Certificates of incorporation in Illinois have been issued as follows: The International Motion Picture company, of Chicago—dissolved; The West End Amusement company, of Chicago—capital stock decreased from $60,000 to $6,000.

Illinois Changes, New Ventures, Etc.

W. G. Mack is building a new moving picture theater at Mansfield.

George Moore of Carthage has equipped the opera house at Bentley and Evanston with moving picture equipment and will book them for their owners.

Bodkin & Keane, who operate the Star and Grand theaters in Evanston, have purchased the theater on Main street, in that city, and have renamed it the Triangle.

Swango & Witt have sold the Luzon theater at Paris to T. C. Baker of Monticello, Ind. The new owner has renamed it the Orpheum theater, made it a ten-cent house and has booked the Kleine-Edison, Pathe Gold Rooster and Mutual Masterpicture services.

McKinley school, at Granite City, will purchase a machine and use moving pictures in education.

A. C. Nelson, former proprietor of the Colonial, at Rockford, is home from Colorado, improved in health, and may reenter the photoplay field.

E. H. Krenz has moved his moving picture theater to the Reisch building, in Middletown.

The new Spencer Square theater, at Rock Island, will be equipped with two Powers 6A machines.

Manager J. J. Reilly of the Princess, at Alton, has installed a new Seeburg organ.

Jesse Chance, new owner of the Dreamland, at Farmington, has changed the name to the Strand.

Illinois Showmanship Notes.

The Crescent, at Pontiac, did not reduce "Neptune's Daughter" to the nickel show level, but got 15 and 25 cents for it.

The Court, at Pekin, starts the Triangle service Dec. 14 at 10 and 15 cents.

The Colonial, at Rock Island, has been made a 5-cent house, except when features are shown.

The Hippodrome, at Maywood, has taken on the Pathe Red Rooster Service.

"Centralia Adopts a Baby" was a local film enterprise of the Gem at Centralia.

The Crystal, at North Crystal Lake, showed Odd Fellows and Rebekah lodge films for the benefit of the local Rebekah lodge.

The Echo, at Des Plaines, helped the free public library fund with a special show.

"The Great Silence," with Francis X. Bushman, was demanded again by patrons of the Lyric at Belleville.

Dreamland, at Canton, was run for a day by the Associated Charities.

The opera house at Carlinville has taken on the Paramount program, which it will use Wednesdays and Saturdays.

A travelog on "Starved Rock," the Illinois State Park, supplemented the regular program at the Primrose at Morris.

The Princess at Macomb had the showing of the local film, "Dutch's Romance." The interest in this was great because the marriage ceremony in it turned out to have been a real one.

Dreamland theater at Canton had "Ruth's Christmas," a local photoplay made by C. D. Tinsley of Des Moines, Ia.

"Just Jim" played a return engagement at the Capitol in Springfield.

Twenty-three business houses in White Hall issue coupons with purchases. It takes $4 worth of these to equal a ten-cent admission at the Princess theater.

"The Avenging Conscience" was run by the West theater at Galesburg as a benefit for the free kindergarten.

The Majestic at Paris announced both the Paramount and Fox "Carmen" films.

"The Melting Pot" was shown at the Grand theater in Aurora for the benefit of the European war sufferers.

Public schools in Monmouth, Ill., were dismissed so the pupils could see the Lyman H. Howe pictures at the Pattee.

"Damon and Pythias" was shown at the Abbey theater in Kirkwood, Ill., under the auspices of the local Knights of Pythias.

Merchants' matinees were given Monday and Thursday during the holidays at the Elite in Waukegan, Ill.

At one of its special Saturday morning shows for children the Strand in Evanston had an old fashioned Punch and Judy show and gave every child a Punch and Judy whistle.

The Princess at Monmouth, Ill., has installed a five-piece orchestra.

Vegetables of any kind were good for admission at Dreamland, in Kewanee, December 14. Manager Chris Taylor gave the proceeds to the poor of the city.

The Bijou at Monmouth has booked the Triangle service.

Manager Walter Friederich of the Capitol at Pekin has re-decorated his house and has a Colonial mansion stage setting for the screen.

W. J. West has started the Triangle, Fox and Mutual service at the Majestic theater in Kewanee. He is also using the Triangle-Keystone at the Willard, charging a five-cent admission.

"The Birth of a Nation" cut the attendance of the high school at Alton, Ill., in two. As it was at the Temple only two days, the matinees drew almost capacity. Interurban traffic was heavy because of the afternoon shows.

GRAND RAPIDS WILL CENSOR "NATION" FILM.

Mayor Calls Big Special Committee to See Film.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—After hearing long orations the mayor of Grand Rapids decided to have "The Birth of a Nation," which is booked for the Powers theater, beginning December 24, censored by the members of the common council, their wives and representatives of the negro race.

SECRETARY GARRISON PRAISES "GUARDING OLD GLORY."

Writes That He Would Like to Have All See It.

Coldwater, Mich.—A. W. Kormack, managing the F. O. Neilson feature, "Guarding Old Glory" for John G. Henley, owner of the Michigan state right on the big feature, writes to the Moving Picture World enclosing a copy of the following letter from the secretary of war:

The Secretary of War.
Washington, July 14, 1915.

Mr. F. O. Nielsen,
Chicago, Ill.:

Dear Sir—I have just seen your series of motion pictures entitled "Guarding Old Glory." They are faithful and accurate representations of the various branches of the land and sea forces in the service. They are extremely interesting and instructive, and I wish that every citizen could see them and thereby be induced to feel the personal interest and pride in the army and navy they so richly deserve.

Very truly yours,
LINDLEY M. GARRISON,
Secretary of War.

This is a good picture and Mr. Kormack has been exhibiting it with great success throughout the state. He attributes the pull of the picture in part to boosting which this paper has given it. It is a film that deserves boosting.

Atheneum at Jackson Changes.

Porter & Howson have given up their lease on the Atheneum theater at Jackson, Mich., and it has been taken over by the Majestic Theater company, which is composed of Wirt S. McLaren, William F. Phillips and Charles E. Ulrickson. McLaren established the Colonial, a successful Jackson theater, a year ago. The house will be renamed the Majestic. It will be closed until January 1, while $20,000 worth of improvements, including the installation of a pipe organ, are made. The front will be remodeled. Among the changes which will greet patrons upon the reopening are a circle of auto boxes, wicker furniture and uniformed girl ushers.

"Nation" Film Bookings.

"The Birth of a Nation" is booked at the Calumet theater in Calumet, Mich., for January 30-February 2. The Soo opera house at Sault Ste. Marie gets the showing for that city.

The film has been booked for the Ishpeming theater at Ishpeming January 27, 28 and 29, and the Marquette opera house at Marquette, January 24, 25 and 26.

Michigan Changes—Business Notes.

The Garden theater at Cadillac has taken its old name of the Princess, following its purchase by the Salisbury Film Company, which operates houses at Corrunna, Owosso and Grand Ledge. It will have a five-cent admission except for features. Oliver Salisbury will be manager.

The Kalamazoo Amusement Company has made the first break in its string of moving picture houses, having sold the Orpheum theater to P. C. Schram and P. F. Marquette.

T. S. Martin will remodel his building on Main street in Morrice into an opera house.

Nathaniel Robbins has purchased a site on Washington street in Grand Haven upon which he will erect a theater and dance hall to cost about $35,000.

F. C. Willey planned to open his "Delight" theater at 407 Asylum street in Flint on Thanksgiving Day with a Universal film feature program. The new house is 21x90 feet, seats 250 and is thoroughly equipped.

L. J. De Lano has resumed the management of the Pastime theater at Oxford. He showed "The Christian" to good business November 19.

Harry Rockwell has let a contract for the remodeling of his building in Alma into a moving picture theater, 26x88 feet.

WILL BUILD IN MINNEAPOLIS.

Alex Pantages Will Own House in the East.

By Grace E. Polk, Minneapolis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—A Pantages theater for Minneapolis is one of the latest developments in the local theatrical world. The new theater will be located in a new office building to be constructed at once in the heart of the downtown district, and Alex Pantages, well known on the Pacific Coast as both producer and manager, has secured a thirty-year lease on the location and will add it to his string of vaudeville houses.

The new theater will have all modern conveniences and improvements. Around the balcony will be a complete circle of loges with wicker chairs upholstered with cretonne and chintz. Rest rooms on each cretonne and chintz. Test rooms on each side of the lobby will be equipped with lounges and easy chairs, while a nursery for young children will be welcomed by tired mothers. This latter feature will be in charge of a trained nurse. A smoking room for men will also add to the conveniences. It is promised the attractions will be equal to those of the Orpheum circuit.

FILM MEN ENDORSE BOARD.

The recently organized Minneapolis board of censors, authorized by Mayor Nye to pass upon so-called objectionable films, will be endorsed by members of the Association Film Exchange managers, according to A. A. Hixon, secretary of the organization.

H. H. Buxbaum, of the Federal Film, is president of the managers' organization, and W. H. Stafford, of the Mutual Film, is vice-president. Meetings are to be held twice a month, and the Minneapolis Civic and Commerce association, the Traffic club, the Credit Men's association and other civic and commercial bodies are to be asked for suggestions as to better film service.

The Mayor Is Broad Minded.

Mayor Nye has proven that he proposes to be reasonable in the matter of censoring pictures, and when the board of censors disagreed a few days ago over "Inspiration," a film which has to do with an artist's model, he decided the lady in question wore quite enough clothes to satisfy the most fastidious and ordered the production to proceed.

Two male members of the board of censors had protested that they were shocked at the exhibiton. Two women members, on the other hand, said the production was all it should be. Mayor Nye went to see for himself and promptly voted with the women, much to the joy of the management.

Melba Borrows Dime.

"Lend me a dime, will you?" It was Mme. Nellie Melba who made the request of her manager at the close of a rehearsal at the Minneapolis Auditorium. Mme. Melba had left her purse in her private car and she wanted to go to a picture show. She didn't need taxicab fare; she could walk to the station, but she could not give up her show. She got the money and departed happily to see the show.

Chosen Items of Interest.

The Albert Lea Theater company, recently incorporated at Albert Lea, Minn., has the following incorporators: James A. Tyrer, John A. Van Wie, O. J. Rosendahl.

Clyde E. Parker has purchased the new Best theater at Brainerd, Minn., from Price & Levinson.

University of Minnesota students composing the Garrick club have been rehearsing a play in which several of them appear in feminine roles. Mrs. George E. Vincent, wife of the president of the University, has been coaching the boys in the gentle arts of feminine coquetry, and at dress rehearsal moving pictures were taken, which will be displayed at various Minneapolis theaters by the Tribune Northwest Weekly.

FIRST RELEASE—JANUARY

AMERICA is prepared for the Hearst-Vitagraph News Pictorial. America has been informed and notified through its greatest news publications of the advent into motion picturedom of Hearst-Selig's successor, the Hearst-Vitagraph. America has been told what it is to expect in the Hearst-Vitagraph.

America knows now what a news reel should be. America is in the frame of mind to accept the greater news reel.

Over the course of weeks, advertising is going forth all over the country announcing the

ADVERTISING

NOT only is Hearst-Vitagraph the product of the news-gathering staff of all the Hearst organizations—the International Film Service, International News Service, the New York Journal, the New York American, Chicago Examiner, Cosmopolitan Magazine, Hearst's Magazine, etc.—but the Hearst-Vitagraph will be promoted under a plan of merchandising and advertising such as hitherto has been confined to ordinary commodities.

If it is possible to sell Jack London's books or Ivory soap by a scientific campaign of sales, how much easier it is to sell a picture.

The men behind the promotion of Hearst-Vitagraph are experts in their line, just as the men behind the technical perfection are the best to be found.

The appeals that are going forth now, and are to go forth consistently as long as Hearst-Vitagraph exists, will be that sort of announcement which gets "under the skin" of the ordinary men and women and makes them go wild to see Hearst-Vitagraph. (Full schedule and proofs of advertisements mailed on request.)

PUBLICATIONS

Among the publications which will be employed in carrying forth the story of Hearst-Vitagraph to your folks will be not only the national publications, but the newspapers which are read every day by regular theatregoers. The list includes the New York Journal, the New York American, Chicago Examiner, Boston American, San Francisco Examiner, Los Angeles Examiner, Atlanta Georgian, Chicago American, Harper's Bazar, Good Housekeeping, Hearst's Magazine, Motor, Cosmopolitan Magazine and other equally powerful forces.

Lasting Advertising

While the advertising that is going forth now is to make known the advent of Hearst-Vitagraph, what we want to tell you about is that which is to follow.

At regular stated intervals there will be prestige-building announcements making more valuable the name of the Hearst-Vitagraph to your theatre and making your theatre more renowned in your city because of its connection with the Hearst-Vitagraph.

Making It Easy to Find Your Theatre

Whenever a big, sensational "scoop" is made by Hearst-Vitagraph—and you may be sure this will occur many times during the year—there will be telegraphic advertisements issued through our regular list of exhibitors.

At regular intervals a list of theatres showing Hearst-Vitagraph will be published as a handy pocket memorandum and will be given to the public to keep.

In this way we make it easy for those who are impressed with the greater news reel to find the theatres that are showing the reel.

The Advertising Value in the name

VITAGRAPH

If Vitagraph did no more than lend its name to the Hearst-Vitagraph News Pictorial you would have to consider that as big value for your theatre. When you consider the successes which have been made by the Vitagraph Company during the last few years, and you consider the tremendous advertising that is done by that organization in popularizing Vitagraph, you must add to the general advertising done by Hearst-Vitagraph. You must add to the advertising value in the name Hearst and all the Hearst newspapers and other organizations the advertising value of the name Vitagraph.

And then consider how Vitagraph is doing the work of making your news reel artistic and perfect.

Drafting Exchange Bill

Atlanta Motion Picture Trades Club Appoints Committee to Draft Sensible Exchange Bill—City Council's New Bill Is Drastic and Would Drive Exchanges from City—Council's Bill.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ATLANTA, GA.—Drafting a bill, which it is declared will safeguard the interests of the motion picture exchanges of Atlanta, and at the same time will afford ample protection from fire, members of the Motion Picture Trades Club Monday, Dec. 13, named a committee to present it to council's committee with the request that it be passed.

It is stated the enactment is to be offered as a substitute for the drastic measure recently prepared by the council committee, whose observance the motion picture men declare would kill the industry in Atlanta.

The committee named at Monday night's meeting is composed of G. T. Hardcastle, chairman and manager of the Kleine-Edison company; M. C. Hughes, manager of the General Film exchange; Walter J. Price, manager Consolidated Film & Supply company; George Allison, manager of the Pathe exchange, and Claude Buchanan, manager of the Metro exchange. The exchange men are greatly concerned as to the action of council, declaring that the passage of the ordinance as proposed and recommended will greatly injure the business in this city.

Main Sections of Bill.

The main sections of the bill drafted by the Atlanta Council and to which the Trades Club take exception follows:

Section 1. That it shall hereafter be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to store or keep on hand any inflammable motion picture films in quantities greater than five (5) reels, or aggregating more than five thousand (5,000) feet in length, without a permit granted by the board of fire masters of the city of Atlanta, upon recommendation of the chief of the fire department.

Sec. 2. That no permit for storing or keeping on hand any inflammable motion picture films in quantities aggregating more than five thousand (5,000) feet in length shall be granted within the territory bounded north by Cain street, east by Ivy street and Central avenue; south by Trinity avenue; west by Madison avenue to Cone street, and Cone street.

Sec. 3. No permit for the storage of any inflammable motion picture film shall be issued for any building which is situated within fifty (50) feet of the nearest wall of any public building occupied as a school or theater or assembly hall or college; or which is artificially lighted by any other means than electricity, and which is not equipped with an approved system of automatic sprinklers and which does not contain one or more approved fireproof vaults or safes.

Sec. 4. No permit for storage of moving picture films above the third floor of any building shall be granted, and any building so used more than one story in height shall be equipped with approved fire escapes under the direction of the chief of the fire department. Doors and windows leading to fire escapes shall have minimum width of 30 (thirty) inches and height of 78 (seventy-eight) inches, and no grating, bars, or any other obstruction shall be placed at or over any such openings. Unless in addition to fire escapes there is more than one means of egress from the building, all openings on the fire escapes shall be equipped with approved wired glass windows in metal frames.

May Drive Exchanges Out.

Atlanta is now rated as one of the country's most important film distribution centers. That the enforcement of the stringent ordinance regulating film exchanges, as proposed in the city council, will mean the removal of the most important exchange men, who are organizing to oppose the proposed law.

At a meeting of exchange men held Monday night, Dec. 13, in the Hotel Ansley, representatives of the Birmingham, Ala., and Chattanooga, Tenn., Chambers of Commerce, offered them inducements to remove from Atlanta to either the Alabama or Tennessee City.

The exchange men, however, prefer to remain in Atlanta, for many reasons, principally Atlanta's central location, and splendid shipping facilities, and are endeavoring to bring about necessary amendments in the ordinance.

GOVERNOR AND TROOPS PARADE

Call Attention to "Battle Cry of Peace" Showing at Armory.

A parade in the interest of military preparedness to insure peace took place in Atlanta Monday afternoon, Dec. 13, the principal object being to attract public attention to the moving picture "The Battle Cry of Peace," being shown at the Auditorium Armory by the Fifth Regiment all this week to arouse interest in preparedness and stimulate recruiting in the Militia. Governor Nat Harris rode in the parade in military uniform with a cavalry guard and other distinguished citizens. The military organizations taking part in full uniform were the Fifth Regiment, Troop L Cavalry, the Atlanta Artillery, the Georgia Military Academy cadet battery, the Marist cadet battery, the Boy Scouts and Confederate Veterans.

BIRMINGHAM THEATER OPENS.

S. A. Quinerly, manager of the Majestic theater, Greenville, S. C., is in the hospital in that city with an attack of appendicitis.

Sunday Shows for Charity.

Rome, Ga., had its first experience with Sunday moving pictures, Sunday, December 12th. A local theater operated all day, and was crowded to the door. No admission fee was charged, but the example of Atlanta theaters in placing contributing boxes at the doors was followed, the proceeds of the day being devoted to charity. It is understood that hereafter the moving picture theaters will operate regularly on Sunday.

The Strand and Odeon theaters, Birmingham, Ala., are conducting ticket-selling contests. The former offers a Maxwell automobile as a first prize, the latter a diamond ring.

Barry Aronson, manager of the Grand theater, Raleigh, N. C., was an Atlanta visitor during the week.

Dave Estoclet, outdoor advertising agent with "The Birth of a Nation"—a man with a splendid personality, and who knows the billboard advertising game from the front to the back of the book, is responsible for the magnificent showing the big picture has on the billboards over the entire state of Georgia.

Burn Part of "Nation" Film.

MASON CITY, IA.—Six reels of "The Birth of a Nation" were taken from a trunk in the operating room of the Cecil theater at Mason City, Ia., and burned in the furnace of the theater. The reels destroyed were Nos. 3, 4, 7, 8, 11 and 12, which includes the Ku Klux Klan and mob scenes. Bennie Johnson, colored, a former janitor at the theater, was taken into custody by the police. Sherman & Elliott, of Minneapolis, distributors of the film in the middle west, have offered a reward of $500 for the arrest and conviction of the vandal.

Tom Allen, the colored janitor, found at 5 a. m. the lock on the operating room had been broken and that one of the trunks had been taken. He called a policeman and in the tour of the building the missing receptacle was found in the furnace room and remains of the films were in the furnace.

EARNINGS OF KANSAS CENSORS.

Board's Net Profit for Last 7½ Months Amounts to $11,385.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

TOPEKA, KAN.—The censorship law in Kansas has paid the state well. Figures just made public by D. W. Ross, superintendent of public instruction, who was designated as censor by the state legislature, show that in the 7½ months the law has been in operation the state has cleared $11,385.29. That represents an actual profit, as shown on the books of W. E. Davis, state auditor.

The censorship office has collected $14,164 in fees, charging $2 for each picture reviewed. Enforcement of the law and expenses of the office have totalled $2,778.71.

The month of October was the largest for the office since it was created. Then 1,128 reels were viewed and the state received $2,256 for the work. November fell off slightly with the censorship of 1,114 reels, netting $2,228. The receipts for the other months since the law went into effect, April 12, are April, $930; May, $1,258; June, $1,480; July, $1,578; August, $2,202, and September, $2,232.

Griffith Talks of New Picture.

David Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," was in Kansas City a few minutes between trains last week on his way from Los Angeles to Chicago. While there he gave out newspaper interviews, saying he was completing a new film play on which he already had spent about $80,000 more than the entire dramatization cost of the Dixon story. He did not tell the nature of his new special.

To Make a Kansas Film.

The Mid-Western Film Manufacturing Company, Medicine Park, Okla., has joined with the Topeka Daily Capital, Topeka, Kas., for the filming of 'The Sunflower Princess," a fantasy on Kansas written by Mrs. Margaret Hill McCarter, the novelist. The company and the newspaper now are searching Kansas for one hundred girls—all must have been born in the state—to portray the various roles. The film will be produced in Topeka, where a studio will be erected. The plan adopted is for each town in the state to name one girl in a beauty contest.

Gov. Arthur Capper has promised his co-operation toward making it a distinctive Kansas film. George L. Keller, scenario editor, and E. P. Eslick, an executive officer of the Mid-Western company, now are in Topeka arranging the details of the production.

Didn't Need More Pep.

A film chase that had just been viewed on the screen of a theater at Franklin, Kas., last week, was re-enacted by the audience who poured out of the house to capture three men who, with revolvers, had forced the proprietor of a pool hall to give up the money in his till. As the men left the theater the house manager told them of the robbery and they set out in pursuit of the bandits. A battle took place when they were overtaken and two of the three men captured were wounded. None of the picture patrons were injured.

The three prisoners were identified later as the men who had robbed the proprietor of a dance hall of $250 the previous morning. They were taken to the county jail at Girard.

The largest staff of experts in all departments makes the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the one paper in the trade that fully fills the requirements of every reader.

Camera Man Walker Goes to Mexico.

F. L. Walker, staff camera man for Pathe, who has been statloned in Kansas City for two months, left this week for Mexico, where he will join the Carranza army to report its progress south to the City of Mexico. Mr. Walker's passports read that he is to enter Mexico at Eagle Pass. That's about all he knows now.

"Nation" Film Breaks Record.

"The Birth of a Nation" ran 70 performances at the Grand, here, going so far ahead of all records that there was no comparison. The attendance kept up to the very last, the afternoon and evening of the last day having most of the seats sold downstairs, and the galleries well filled, too. It was noted that many persons had come back for second and third views of the picture. One old gentleman was seen the last day bringing in several friends—and he had been there twice before with different companions. Some of the scenes were tragically familiar to him.

Charles Krafton, of Mulberry, Kas., has purchased the house there formerly owned by A. C. Willey, and now is conducting it.

C. S. Edwards, Jr., Kansas City representative of Pathe, reports the business of his company in the Kansas City territory has increased month by month throughout this year. Unlike some exchange men, Mr. Edwards is optimistic over future business and reports that advance sales for the new Pathe serial, "The Red Circle," to be released Dec. 18, are in excess of his expectations.

P. S. ALLISON HEADS INDIANAPOLIS EXCHANGE.

Change at Local Famous Players Film Service.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—A change in the management of the Indianapolis office of the Famous Players service was effected on the arrival of Paul S. Allison from Cincinnati to take the place of Samuel Plame. Mr. Allison was promoted from the position of assistant manager at the Cincinnati office in which capacity he had served for eight months. Mr. Plame has returned to Chicago to take the opening and management of a recently completed theater there.

Praised Competing Exhibitor.

Over in little old New York they are making a bit of noise over the fact that John Wanamaker recently took occasion in his advertising to name his competitor and speak kind words of him. In a signed advertisement of the Royal theater, Frankfort, Ind., announcing the fact that the house would reopen after some remodeling, J. C. Lockwood of the Princess theater was praised as follows: "We also want to thank the press of Frankfort and also especially Mr. J. C. Lockwood of the Princess theater, who gave us words of advice and encouragement."

If exhibitors want to start the town talking about them, just donate a little space to a few kind words about your competitor.

J. J. Riley in Town.

J. J. Riley, of Alton, Ill., the big town twenty miles up the Mississippi River, was a visitor to Film Row, on Olive street, last week. Mr. Riley is the proprietor of the Princess, the largest of Alton's four theaters. The Princess seats 700 patrons and has just been equipped with a new Seeburg organ orchestra.

Knickerbocker Changes Hands.

The Knickerbocker theater, at 3145 Park avenue, has changed hands for the first time since it was built, and was sold to Sterling & Kepta on December 2. The Knickerbocker was built six years ago by Meyer Brothers and Pracht, and was operated by them continuously since. It is one of the best and most popular theaters in its district; its seating capacity is 600, and there is a large airdome next door to it. Meyer Brothers and Pracht operate the Shaw theater, at Shaw avenue and 39th street.

Patrons to Get Presents.

George Angelich, manager of the Rainbow theater, on Broadway, at Pine street, has a large showcase full of souvenirs in the shape of silver-plated ware and toilet accessories of cut glass, that he will give away to the patrons of the Rainbow.

Local W. C. T. U. Want Federal Censors

A Federal censorship for moving pictures was proposed by the St. Louis W. C. T. U. in a resolution passed last week at a day of prayer at the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church. The resolution will be forwarded to Congress, with a resolution that has been presented before, asking for the enactment of national prohibition.

Children See Wild Animal Films.

The Victoria theater, on Delmar, at Grand avenue, at a showing of the John W. Ruskin Wild Animal Films, entertained more than 10,000 orphans during the run of the pictures. Several business organizations bought up all the seats for the entertainment of the children of all the charitable orphan institutions of the city, and turned the surplus over and above the actual expenses of running the theater to the Boy Scouts, who aided in preserving order, and ushered the children and patrons to their seats. The United Railways provided special street cars to take the children to and from the theater.

Signs in Yiddish.

Scherrer Brothers, who operate the Palace theater, at 13th and Franklin avenue, have a great many Jewish people among their patrons, and have found that signs in Yiddish are greatly appreciated. When Lasky's "Carmen," with Geraldine Farrar, was shown at the theater, a large muslin sign was stretched across the entire length of the building lettered in both languages.

Chosen Indiana Theater Notes.

The local photoplay, "Miss Tipton," filled the Martz theater, at Tipton, Ind., with the biggest crowd that ever went into the house.

The Bijou theater, Orleans, Ind., will move across the street.

The Franklin theater, Michigan City, is now under the management of Shaffer and Einger. Gus H. Shaffer is superintendent of the steel car department at the car factory in Michigan City. Mr. Dinger is a practical theater man from Chicago.

The American Seating company has obtained the contract for seats at the new Temple theater in Mishawaka, Ind. Every attention is being paid to ventilation in an effort to make the place entirely sanitary and healthful.

Two fine new door curtains were stolen from the Family theater at Elkhart, Ind.

Thomas Barnett, manager of the Garrick and Princess theaters, Madisonville, Ky., has renewed his lease on the Princess for another term of years.

Manager C. E. Rogers is donating the receipts from a Sunday night show at "Grump's theater, Columbus, Ind., to the "Good Fellows," a Christmas organization of Columbus, Ind.

Up in Fort Wayne, Ind., the Paramount pictures have made such a hit that one cleaning and dyeing firm has adopted the name, the Paramount Cleaners and Dyers, another downtown drug store is serving Paramount sodas.

O. J. Lambiotte has taken out a building permit to remodel the old postoffice building at Mishawaka, Ind., into a theater. The work will cost about $6,000.

A-VISITING IN ST. LOUIS.

Moving Picture World Men in South St. Louis in Off Season.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—The time of year has arrived when moving picture show managers apologize for no news and empty seats by saying, "Oh, well, Christmas time, you know; business will pick up after the holidays," and a poor correspondent is hard put to it to find enough live news for a letter.

He Finds Manager Skouras.

We just dropped in here and there in South St. Louis theaters to see how things were going, and the first place we struck was the Lafayette, on Lafayette and Jefferson avenues. We were not allowed to enter this theater, because there was no room for us—not even enough standing room for one thin with the thinness of a journalistic diet for several years. We found the proprietor, however, who took us to the beautifully furnished lounging room on the balcony floor, and even there we found scarcely enough room to turn around, on account of the people waiting for their turn to get seats in the auditorium. A Fox feature, "Lady Audley's Secret," was being shown, and Manager Spyros Skouras assured us that this crowded condition was a regular thing. The Lafayette is one of the most beautiful theaters in the city. It was among the first high-class neighborhood theaters to be built, and has had a highly prosperous career all along.

S. Warner, the original proprietor and owner, was forced to retire last year on account of illness, and the house was closed during the summer. The present management took possession in September. Mr. Skouras has made many changes in the house. He eliminated vaudeville and stock company work, which had always been a large part of the program, and made an all-picture house of the place, using big features with a daily change.

Prosperity at the Best.

Our next stop was at the Best, on Cherokee and Jefferson, and we found that Fred Wehrenberg, the proprietor, had just gone away on his annual hunting trip to High Ridge, Mo. The Best looked prosperous, however, and there was not a vacant seat in the house.

The Good Projection Man.

A few hundred feet further down the street is the Vandora. Charles Renzow, the manager, was still harping on his pet theory, "steady as a rock projection." That man puts in more time fussing around with his scheme to improve the projection of his theater! And he's got an operator just like him, and between the two they certainly give their patrons excellent pictures. Renzow had two vacant seats in the house, but the lateness of the hour made this excusable.

Not much apologies for poor business so far.

Finds an Invitation Night.

Across the street from the Vandora is the Cherokee, a house that is managed by the well-known local theatrical producer, Edward Westfield, of the Westfield Players, and his wife. The Cherokee did not have any pictures that night, as the house had been turned over to a dramatic and dancing teacher in the neighborhood, and the stage was full of cute kiddies doing their stunts, and the seats were full of enthusiastic parents and friends and aunts and uncles of the little tots. The Cherokee divides its time between pictures and dramatic performances.

A Look In at the Cinderella.

Diagonally across the street from the Cherokee is the Cinderella, which was one of the show places of St. Louis as a dancing palace a few years ago, when the dancing craze struck the country, and now it is one of the show places of the city as a picture theater.

The house is very large, seating 3,000 persons, besides having plenty of room on the sides and back of the seats for dancing, which is part of the program after the performances on Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday nights. The ceiling of the Cinderella is decorated with 4,600 colored electric bulbs that are left lighted all through the performance. The ceiling is so high tha they do not interfere with the projection. The lights are arranged in geometric designs, and make the Cinderella look like its fair godmother had taken up permanent residence there. Manager Harry Freund is not perfectly satisfied with the arrangement of the stage, and is having a new setting made, as well as putting in 200 more seats. A portico is also to be added to the front of the house.

Sees Some Workmen.

Mr. Freund is erecting a new theater at 1907-9 South Broadway, which will be operated by J. Martin, now in charge of the Carroll, at Carroll and Broadway. The Peerless, which is the name of the new house, will seat 1,000 persons, and will be equipped with all the very latest improvements in theatrical apparatus. Mr. Martin will continue to manage the Carroll as well as the new house. Mr. Freund's original intention was to build a high-class legitimate theater on the spot occupied by the Peerless, but when he saw the popularity and success of motion pictures he changed his plans and put up a moving picture house instead. Freund Brothers own several theater buildings in St. Louis, among them the Favorite, the Carroll, the Cinderella, the Peerless and others, but the Cinderella is the only one under the personal management of one of the brothers.

DENVER NEWS LETTER.

By Muriel Lee, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

"Battle Cry of Peace" Arrives.

DENVER, COL.—"The Battle Cry of Peace" and "The Birth of a Nation" both played in Denver the same week. "The Battle Cry of Peace" went on at the Paris theater Thursday, December 2. The picture roused a great deal of comment and is making a good run.

Manager Percy engaged a good, 17-piece orchestra, which plays under the direction of Mr. Sprackling. The Wurlitzer unit orchestra is also used with it. Mr. Percy has been doing some clever advertising in red, white and blue color scheme. He has engaged a good drum corps, which plays before the theater every night and afternoon, and a section of battery has been stationed before the theater. Several from the National Guard have been posted there with it, and it has been reported that many recruits have been gathered from among those who have seen the picture.

The interior of the theater has been appropriately and artistically decorated with American flags and bunting. The Paris is the largest house in town and has been showing at five cents admission for this picture. The regular price will be five cents in the afternoons, but 10 cents for evening shows.

Take New Highway Films.

Moving picture men took scenes from the formal opening of Bear Creek Canon highway Sunday, December 12, when fully 500 machines made the trip. This would afford an unusual picture, as the highway passes through wonderful mountain scenery.

Metro Bookkeeper Goes to Los Angeles.

F. E. Booth, who has for many months been the bookkeeper at the Denver Metro office, has been transferred to the Los Angeles office of Metro. Mr. Booth came here from New York City, where he was affiliated with General Film. He made many friends during his stay here, who will miss him, but who are glad for his promotion. Miss Jones, who has been in the office of Metro for several months, has taken Mr. Booth's place.

"Nation" Film Begins.

"The Birth of a Nation" began its run at the Tabor Grand Sunday evening, December 12. There have been mass meetings of colored people, with delegations from every colored organization in the city. The arrangement that was finally decided upon to settle the matter was that there should be a chosen committee of twenty-five, who should see the picture and pass upon it. With the city commissioners, there were present some colored people and ministers. It was decided that the picture should be allowed to run.

The audience at the first performance was more than enthusiastic. Time after time they broke into enthusiastic cheering when some especially dramatic moment was reached.

The Tabor Grand, which is the theater in which "The Birth of a Nation" is showing, is one of the oldest theaters in the town, and one that has stood for great dramatic things. It was built in the days of the great mining boom and at a time when money was spent like water.

The interior of the theater is lavish in every detail. The woodwork is of black walnut, hand carved, and the hangings are of rich dark red velvet. Always having stood for all that was best in dramatic productions, the Tabor has recently decided to go into moving pictures. It was fitting that the first to be shown there was "The Birth of a Nation." After the protracted run which will be made there it will be converted into a high-class picture house.

Texas Paramount Sued

In Fort Worth, the Hippodrome Company Claims Breach of Contract and Gets a Temporary Injunction Against Exchange and Strand Theater on December 9—Strand Closes on "Madame Butterfly."

By S. A. M. Harrison, Dallas Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

FORT WORTH, TEXAS.—The Hippodrome Amusement company, of this city, proprietors of the Hippodrome theater, has entered suit against the Texas Paramount Pictures company of Dallas, southwestern representatives of the Paramount Pictures corporation, to enjoin the showing of Paramount pictures in Fort Worth and for $5,000 damages.

The suit is based on the contract alleged to have been entered into by the Paramount people and the Hippodrome company. Under this the Hippodrome was to have first run on the Paramount releases and they were not to be shown again in Fort Worth inside of forty-five days. This agreement the Hippodrome company claims has been violated, hence the suit.

As a preliminary a temporary injunction was granted against Paramount, the Strand theater of Fort Worth, of which J. D. Wheelan is maanger, and against everyone connected who could be rung in as interested, on December 9, and the Strand was compelled to close its doors on a production of "Madame Butterfly." Permanency of the injunction and the question of damages is yet to be fought out.

GENERAL GETS NEW MANAGER.

C. C. Ezell, Dallas manager for the General Film company, has resigned that position and been succeeded by D. Prince. Mr. Prince has been with the General for some years, having worked his way up through the various departments to his present responsible place. He says there will, in all probability, be no changes in the local personnel of the company, but expects to make an aggressive campaign for business. Mr. Ezell has made no connections at present.

A BLIND EXHIBITOR.

One of the most interesting personages in the film world of the Southwest was in Dallas recently, calling on the film trade, a guest of the V-L-S-E branch. This is T. J. Ashford, of Camden, Ark., who, although totally blind, is a successful exhibitor and and enjoys "witnessing" a moving picture show.

Mr. Ashford is proprietor of the B. & O. theater at Camden and will shortly gain control of a house in Eldorado, same State. (B. & O., by the way, does not refer to the railroad, but means "Band and Orchestra.")

Mr. Ashford was born in Eldorado, Ark., some thirty-five years ago and lost his eyesight in a hunting accident while a boy. He is an accomplished musician, leading his ample orchestra, which consists mainly of members of his own family, besides teaching music.

T. J. Ashford on the left.

The B. & O. theater is a little different from most picture houses in that only two shows a day are given, at the usual matinee and evening hours observed in legitimate houses. Only features are shown, and apparently the business is paying well.

Of course, Mr. Ashford must witness the pictures through other eyes, but his perception is so keen that very little need be said to him for him to grasp the picture. While attending a performance of "The Battle Cry of Peace," in company with J. B. Dugger of the Big Four force, he showed such a grasp of the picture that Mr. Dugger says it seemed as if he really saw it. Also he has a splendid memory, being able to recognize an almost stranger the moment the latter speaks.

B. & O. Theater.

One must conclude, after seeing Mr. Ashford, that the loss of a sense surely does not mean the loss of sense.

V-L-S-E TO HELP EXHIBITORS.

Dallas, Texas.—The V-L-S-E Dallas office is endeavoring to give unusual aid to exhibitors using their releases. Under the oversight of J. B. Dugger, a publicity department has been installed and all kinds of good readers are worked up for newspaper publicity. Mr. Dugger also writes ads when requested, and uses every effort to make these of local interest. He also acts as a sort of clearing house for "stunts," passing on every new one he gets. One of the hobbies of this department is to take up coming exhibitions with local newspapers so the paper will take the initiative in securing the ads. Better results are thus obtained than when an exhibitor goes after the space, which argument sounds very reasonable.

HOUSTON TO HAVE FINE HOUSE.

A three-story reinforced concrete picture theater building, to cost $35,000, is to be erected at Milan street and Prairie avenue, Houston, Texas, by Hugh Hamilton. Application for a building permit has been made and the contract awarded, and work will commence at once. The structure is planned to contain offices on the front of the first and second floors, and the theater auditorium will take up the rear. The entire third floor will be devoted to offices.

Texas Trade Personals.

Ed Besserer, of the Besserer-Marshall interests, Austin, Texas, was in Dallas arranging holiday bookings. He was accompanied by R. S. ("Skinny") Pryor, of the same concern.

Werdman Bros., Wichita Falls, have added a 1916 Motiograph to their equipment, purchased from Barnett.

Bowie Amusement company, Bowie, Texas, are putting in a Power's 6-A to augment their apparatus in use.

Robertson & Craddock is a new exhibition firm at Beeville, Texas, buying a complete set of equipment. Mr. Robertson was formerly located in Winnsboro, Texas.

N. Lewis, of the Electric Palace, Tyler, Texas, spent a day in Dallas recently, anent the holiday stuff.

WESTERN GENERAL FILM BRANCH MANAGERS MEET

Talk Over New Policies and Map Out Campaigns.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—A meeting of the Western branch managers of the General Film was held at San Francisco a short time ago for the purpose of talking over the new policies of this concern and mapping out campaigns for the future. This meeting was called by Western Division Manager H. H. Hicks, who had just arrived from New York, and was held a little sooner than was originally planned in order to allow the men to see something of the great Exposition before it ended. Those present were: George J. Ekre, Spokane, Wash., C. P. Merwin, Seattle, Wash.; L. A. Todd, Portland, Ore.; A. L. Johnson, Butte, Mont.; M. H. Cree, Denver, Col.; R. P. Madden, Salt Lake City, Utah; Frank L. Hudson, Los Angeles, Cal.; Leon Bonres, San Francisco, Cal., and H. H. Hicks, Western Division Manager, with headquarters at San Francisco.

This concern has made arrangements to have a fireproof building erected at Golden Gate avenue and Leavenworth streets for its exclusive use and will move from the present location on Eddy street early in the spring. Plans for this structure have been completed, and it is the intention to have the finest film exchange building on the Coast when it is completed. A feature will be the fireproof vaults, and these will be large enough to accommodate the releases that may be expected for several years. A small theater will be installed in the basement, and nothing will be overlooked to expedite the handling of film. This building will be the second one on the Coast to be erected exclusively for exchange purposes and to be occupied by a single firm.

FILM EXCHANGE BOARD OF TRADE MANAGER RESIGNS

R. E. Stebbins to Accept Responsible Position with Progressive.

R. E. Stebbins, who has been manager of the Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco since its organization, more than a year ago, has resigned to accept a responsible position with the Progressive Motion Picture company. His services have been greatly appreciated by the exchange interests of the city, and it is realized that it will be difficult to find a man who can fill the position acceptably.

NEW MANAGER FOR UNITED.

Fred S. Peachy has resigned as manager of the Pacific Coast interests of the United Film service and has been succeeded by David D. Tompkins. Mr. Tompkins is a very energetic young man and has been with the local office for the past two years. He has a wide acquaintance among exhibitors and is now making short trips into the interior to meet customers.

NEW EXCHANGE OPENS.

The Picture Playhouse Film company, Inc., has fitted up splendid exchange quarters at 100 Golden Gate avenue and now has a stock of films on hand. Manager E. H. Emmick is well satisfied with the manner in which business has opened, having made several good bookings during the first week of business.

TRIANGLE PLACES SERVICE.

Manager C. Mell. Simmons is making splendid headway in placing the Triangle service in this territory and during the past week has completed arrangements for placing this in all of the districts of San Francisco, except the downtown section. Triangle films will be seen at the Palace theater, Market and Seventeenth streets; the Devisadero and Union street houses of Cory Bros.; Knowles' Acme theater, the Irving theater, the Progress theater on Fillmore street and the Grand theater in the Mission district.

EXCHANGE MEN INCAPACITATED

The past week has been a rather strenuous one for local film exchange men, at least two of them having made visits to the hospital. Robert Quive, manager of the San Francisco office of the V-L-S-E, had the misfortune to fall and break his arm, while C. Mell Simmons, with the Triangle Film, was compelled to submit to an operation on his jaw, which had become infected from an ulcerated tooth.

WORLD FILM EXCHANGE GROWS.

The substantial increase in business enjoyed by the World Film corporation of late has made it imperative that additional space be secured for the local exchange on Golden Gate avenue, and arrangements are being made for taking over an adjoining store, this being the second time that the quarters have been enlarged in this manner. It is also planned to install a fireproof vault of large capacity to accommodate the heavy stock of film now carried at this branch.

Denham Palmer, formerly Eastern division manager for this concern, arrived here recently to take charge of the Western division, and will make his headquarters in this city. Several changes have been made in the exhibition room at the local branch of late, including the installation of a new Powers Cameragraph No. 6A, a new screen and new chairs.

UNIVERSAL COMPANY VISITS.

Cleo Madison and company have been here during the past week from Universal City getting some exteriors that could not well be secured elsewhere. The party will remain here for a week longer.

San Francisco News Briefs.

C. O. Davis, of the Wigwam theater, Reno, Nev., was a visitor here this week.

Mr. Simmons, of the film of Simmons & Keyworth, Lovelock, Nev., was a recent visitor here and announced that a new theater would be opened in that city shortly. A prize is being offered for the best name suggested.

Davis Bros. have made arrangements to handle mounted paper for the Triangle Film, and are also Equitable advertising matter of this class.

W. R. Rothacker, president of the Industrial Motion Picture company, of Chicago, was here recently for a short stay and has since left for the southern part of the state.

E. M. Asher, who went to Los Angeles recently to handle the Metro program for the Golden Gate Film exchange, has returned to this city, as the Metro interests have opened their own exchange there.

C. Anderson, of the Liberty Film company, of San Mateo, Cal., was in town recently and announced his intention of making a business trip to New York at once.

Col. James P. Anderson and Cary Wilson, of the Fox Film, were here this week on their way to Australia, and W. R. Sheehan has reached Los Angeles with William Farnum and company.

The New York American pictures of the European war are to be shown shortly at the Columbia in this city, the projection to be handled by G. A. Metcalfe, who will install a gold fiber screen for the engagement.

Although G. A. Metcalfe has sold a number of Powers Cameragraphs No. 6B, he is now showing this model on the floor of his supply house for the first time.

The Pastime theater on Market street, this city, managed by N. K. Herzog, has added two Motiographs of the latest type, in preparation for a busy season.

J. F. Spickett, of Juneau, Alaska, was a recent visitor here, and plans to spend considerable time in California. He conducts a moving picture house at Juneau, another at Douglas, and furnishes film for the Treadwell club.

California News.

The Rex at Clovis, Cal., has been sold by F. E. Brown to A. C. Weaver, formerly of Fresno.

F. H. Smith of Lindsay, Cal., is preparing to erect a fine theater at an early date. At present he is giving one show a week at the Arborctum.

The Theater Visalia, Visalia, Cal., has changed its policy and is now using a high grade feature service in place of road attractions.

Edward H. Kemp, of San Francisco, has disposed of a complete Motiograph outfit to F. E. Simmons of Lovelock, Nev., who will use it on the road in Nevada and northern California. He has fitted an automobile with an electric power plant to furnish lights.

Two Powers Cameragraphs No. 6A have been installed in the Rex at Vallejo, Cal.

D. S. Cashin has sold the Jitney at Fresno, Cal., to J. Eul and will open a new house there shortly, having purchased a Baird machine.

PORTLAND LETTER.

Notes from Salem, Oregon.

The Wexford theater, Salem, Ore., was totally destroyed by fire December 7. The loss was $5,000, fully covered by insurance. The building was owned by Judge P. H. D'Arcy and leased to E. K. Dennison.

The Grand opera house, F. L. Waters, owner, has been remodeled and fitted with a new front. The house specializes in Paramount pictures and vaudeville.

Astoria, Ore., Theater Changes Hands.

Straus & Dean, Inc., consisting of Jos. D. Straus, Harry W. Dean and Henry Newman, has purchased the controlling interest in the Crystal theater company and the company's theater, the Crystal. Norvin Hass, who has managed the house successfully for several months, will remain.

Personal Notes from Local Exhibitors.

L. A. Todd, manager of the General Film, Portland, attended the meeting of the Pacific Coast managers called by H. H. Hicks in San Francisco, where the new policies of the company were discussed.

O. F. Woody, brother of J. S. Woody, supervisor of Northwest offices of the Mutual, has come to Portland as road man for that concern.

C. W. Murphy, Pastime theater, The Dalles, Ore., has sold his pipe organ to the Electric theater, Hood River.

C. C. Smith has nearly completed his new house in Dallas, Ore. It is one of the best appointed houses in the Willamette valley.

Will Rosenthal, Seattle manager of Apex, was a visitor in Portland recently en route to Montana.

M. Rosenberg, Northwest Feature Film, who recently returned from San Francisco, has gone to Chicago to purchase features. His brother, Al Rosenberg, has been engaged as road man for the firm.

PORTLAND PICTURE MEN TO COMBAT CENSORS.

The Rothapfel-Mutual tour made motion picture history here.

An evidence of the great enthusiasm aroused by Mr. Rothapfel's "message of success" is given in the fact that immediately after the dinner the exhibitors announced that they would hold a meeting with the Board of Trade in a body Tuesday to take up plans to combat the local censorship ordinance.

At the dinner a message from President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film corporation, by whom the Rothapfel-Mutual tour is being conducted, was read.

The exhibitors took occasion to ply Mr. Rothapfel with questions on individual house problems. There was a decided note of appreciation of the generosity of the Mutual Film corporation in sending out Mr. Rothapfel on this tour of the United States.

Among those in attendance were: G. T. Haltzclaw, W. A. Graeper, A. C. Harrington, J. B. Washtok, Edwin S. O'Neil, Eric J. Hallgran, Abraham Nelson, C. A. Malarkey, E. Shamwald, Louis B. Christ, Oskar T. Bergner, H. L. Thompson, O. F. Woody, E. J. Myrick, C. F. Regan, Sol Baum, A. J. Smith, J. S. Woody and Miss Peggy Curtis.

BUYS UNITED EXCHANGE.

The Service Film company, Portland, Stone and Pumphrey, owners, has purchased the Seattle and Portland interests of the United Film service. W. A. Stone returned recently from Seattle where he negotiated the purchase and M. Feldstein, representative of the United from New York City, has been in Portland to close the transaction. By this sale, the Service Film company takes over all the business of the old United in Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana.

"SMILING AL" SATHER."

Al Sather, Portland, Oregon's singing manager, has enjoyed remarkable success in the moving picture field and his rise to his present position, manager of the Ideal theater, has been the result of his untiring efforts to please the public. Mr. Sather is a booster; his business card says so and the crowds at his theater are evidences of the fact.

He was connected with the People's Amusement Company for more than five years, serving as manager of the Star theater, now the Pickford, Portland, the Star theater, Medford, Oregon, the Tivoli and Crystal theaters, Portland, and was recently employed by the Ideal Amusement Company to manage their theater. Mr. Sather believes the success of suburban houses depends on special nights and to carry out his idea, he arranges to run his serials on Monday and Tuesday, educational features for school children on Wednesday, amateurs on Thursday, big features on Friday and Saturday and a blended bill on Sunday. He does not vary from this plan and his patrons know each night what they are going to get. Mr. Sather sings at each performance.

Al. Sather.

A New Kind of Censorship.

Film men in this territory report that they have been confronted with a serious problem respecting films showing characters in the nude. It is said that after "Hypocrites" came home after showing through the territory, it was but a shadow of its former self, operators, it is presumed, having cut out and retained parts of the film, left after the various censor boards had gotten through with the picture, for their own amusement. To forestall anything of this kind happening to "Inspiration," it is said that the local Mutual office has extra prints of portions of the picture.

A Bas les Snakes

Portland, Oregon, Censor Board Seeks to Eliminate All Snake Scenes in Films—Patrolmen Seize "The Stolen Magic," a Triangle Keystone at Columbia Theater and Censors Cut 33 Scenes.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

PORTLAND, OREGON: but Shades of St. Patrick of Ireland!

The Portland censor board has declared war on all snakes within its jurisdiction. Comedy snakes as well as serious minded snakes are barred. E. J. Myrick, manager of the Columbia theater, had this fact brought home to him when the Triangle Keystone film, "The Stolen Magic," was seized without a warrant on December 9 and held at the police station while appropriate eliminations were being made.

Mr. Myrick advises that he received a request from the censor board about noon to make eliminations which he proceeded to do. At 4:30 he received further notice in writing asking that more eliminations be made. The picture was being run at the time by virtue of a permit to exhibit and the eliminations ordered were being made between shows when two patrolmen entered the lamphouse during Mr. Myrick's absence and seized the films. They were taken to the police station where they were held from 6:30 till 8:30. The eliminations that were then made in the film required the cutting of 33 scenes. Aside from eliminations in a scene showing a sinuous dancer, all the cuts ordered by the board concerned snakes. Scenes showing snakes crawling on the floor, on stairs and near people were ordered eliminated; snakes in the whiskers of one of the characters in the picture and a snake used as a walking stick were permitted to remain. Two viewers who believed the eliminations were not being made as expeditiously as they might be reported the matter to Mrs. Colwell, secretary of the board, who engineered the seizure by telephone.

But the Keystone film was not the only one where snakes met with official disfavor. The day after "The Stolen Magic" was seized it became known on Film Row that the censor board was going to hold another mecting for the purpose of eliminating the snakes from "A Night in the Show." This picture has been showing in Portland for over a month.

NATIONAL BOARD PROTESTS.

The address of Mrs. E. B. Colwell before the Oregon Civic League reported in a recent issue of the Moving Picture World has prompted Orrin G. Cocks, Advisory Secretary of the National Board of Censorship, to write a letter to the Portland members of the advisory committee of the executive board of the national body resenting the statements made by Mrs. Colwell decrying the work of the National Board. In Mr. Cock's' letter, after expressing surprise at Mrs. Colwell's arguments, he says:

"The facts of the case do not bear out her arguments in connection with the integrity of the National Board of Censorship, and I feel certain that she knows it. In her desire to establish her points about the necessity for local regulations, she has charged this National body as being under influence that would destroy its value."

After discussing the work, personnel and source of revenue of the National Board, Mr. Cocks continues:

"Mrs. Colwell has assumed that only a limited number of persons in any city have 'the education to pass upon the intricate questions involved in the decision of whether or not a picture is moral in its influence upon the public.' The nub of the question is just here. The police are excluded from the cultured group, the politicians are excluded, the common people are excluded, the motion picture exhibitors are excluded, the workers are excluded; indeed, all those are excluded who have not sufficient intellectual and moral attainments to detect 'the hair which divides the false from the true.' That the National Board believes that justice can only be done when the opinions of other classes besides those mentioned are discovered and registered. There is not a city in the country that wants its amusements regulated by any class, sect, educational group or artistic coterie. We make progress not by foisting the opinions of a cultured few upon the many but by slowly and painfully gathering and enforcing the opinions of the real public."

WILL HEAD SEATTLE'S METRO OFFICE.

C. J. Kerr, Portland Mutual Manager, Gets Good Job.

C. J. Kerr, formerly branch manager of the Mutual Film Corporation in Portland, was selected to head the Seattle office and as special representative and supervisor of Northwest offices of the Metro Pictures Corporation when Grombacher and Bailey disposed of their Metro agency. Mr. Kerr took a leading and active part in the various campaigns by the film men against unjust film legislation while he was connected with the Portland Mutual office and was a member of the film men's committeee of the Portland Chamber of Commerce, whose untiring efforts placed the relation of censorship to business in a true light before Portland's representative business men.

C. J. Kerr.

Mr. Kerr entered his film career as manager of the Circle theater, Portland, later becoming booker for the Mutual, and rising to manager within a short time in the building now occupied by Metro.

Portland Metro Office.

J. V. Lynn People's Publicity Man.

J. V. Lynn has been engaged to take Mr. Stille's place as publicity manager at the People's. Mr. Lynn is a showman from the Puget Sound territory, resigning a position with the Olympic Theaters company to come to the People's.

Pictures Are Ottawa's Chief Theatrical Amusement

Russell Theater, the City's Only Large Legitimate House, and the Dominion, Its Only Vaudeville House, Are Showing Films.

By Carl J. Ketchum, Ottawa Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

OTTAWA, ONTARIO.—With the Russell theater here, the only large legitimate theater in the city now open, and the Dominion theater, the only vaudeville theater in town, changing over to pictures, Ottawa will shortly be entertaining its public entirely with moving pictures. The Dominion is adopting the policy of the big Hippodrome theater in Toronto and entering into an arrangement with a number of Eastern Canada houses, which will result in the showing of an extensive moving picture program, and only a couple of acts of vaudeville. The Dominion management has installed a complete moving picture equipment, and will put its new policy into effect the end of this month. Mr. J. F. Clancey will continue in charge of the house, and is now quite confident of improved business. He will come down, of course, to the popular picture prices.

PICTURE STAR CONTEST.

Great enthusiasm has been stirred up here over the moving picture star contest which has been conducted through a local paper, The Evening Journal. The contest has been running for three weeks and has brought in a remarkably large number of votes. Of the female stars of the day, Clara Kimball Young seems to be Ottawa's favorite, with Anita Stewart and Mary Pickford in second and third places respectively. Carlyle Blackwell has been voted the most popular male star, with Chester Burnett, Henry Walthall, Harold Lockwood, Earl Williams and Francis Bushman, all coming in the order named.

HARRY BROUSE MADE MANAGER.

Mr. Harry Brouse, of Ottawa, has been made general manager of the United Motion Picture Theaters, Limited, operating a chain of theaters in Canada and the United States, including three houses in Ottawa. With the appointment of Mr. Brouse the headquarters of the company have been moved from Buffalo, N. Y., to the Imperial theater building, Ottawa, Ont.

OTTAWA BRIEF ITEMS.

Business Notes—Changes—Personal.

Mr. A. P. Lombard, of the Simplex Machine Co., New York City, was in Ottawa this week, doing business with some of the local exhibitors.

Mr. A. Lalumiere of the Pathe concern in Montreal and Mr. A. H. Fischer, booking the Warners Features from the Montreal office, were visitors in the city during the week.

Mr. Walter Davidson of the Toronto office of the Universal Film Company, and Mr. J. Glazer of the Famous Players' office in Toronto spent a few days in the Capital, booking for their respective firms.

Mr. Darnaby of Toronto, booking the Caviara production in Canada, and Mr. Carnegie, also of the Queen City, placing the Williamson submarine pictures, were here this week.

Commencing on Monday, Dec. 20th, the Family theater will show an entire Fox Feature program.

Mr. Erroll Elting, one of the prominent local managers, has had considerable success taking pictures locally. He has obtained splendid moving views of the Canadian troops in training in different parts of the city, and other pictures, all of which he shows each week in a Review of Events.

"Mary's Lamb" was the feature at the Clemmer; "Lessons in Love" at the Colonial; "The Prince and Pauper" at the Alhambra; "The Lily and the Rose" at the Liberty.

NEW TORONTO EXCHANGE.

United Photoplays Company Formed to Distribute Film.

By W. M. Gladish, Toronto Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

TORONTO, ONT.—Henry Fischer, of Toronto, has announced the incorporation of the United Photoplays Company, Ltd., with a capital of $250,000, under the laws of Canada, for the purpose of engaging in the distribution of moving picture films, etc., throughout the Dominion. The president will be Mr. A. H. Fischer and the treasurer is Mr. Henry Fischer, of Toronto. These men, who are brothers, bought out the Canadian business of the United Film service when the latter failed last summer and both have been in charge of exchanges in Canada for some years. They looked after the United and Warner interests, and previously they were with the Canadian Film company, which formerly released Universal and Famous Player films in the Dominion.

Mr. Henry Fischer intimated, in conversation with the correspondent of the Moving Picture World, that the new company was preparing to handle a new program service which would be ready in the new year. They already have two offices, one at 360 St. Catherine street West, Montreal, and the other at 37 Yonge street, Toronto. They also intend to open a branch in Winnipeg to take care of the western business.

CANADIAN MUTUAL MOVES.

The general headquarters of the Mutual of Canada have been moved from 215 Victoria street to larger and more suitable premises at 178-180 Victoria street, Toronto. These headquarters accommodate the office of the Canadian general manager, Mr. C. B. Price. The address of the Toronto branch of the company remains at 15 Wilton avenue.

FRENCH WAR FILMS.

Canada is having her full share of French war pictures, of which there are, apparently, three different brands. All have been welcomed, however, in view of the fact that a large percentage of the country's population is of French origin. Two sets were being shown in Toronto during Christmas week, the French Government pictures, "Fighting in France," being exhibited at the Grand Opera house, under the auspices of the Toronto Daily News, and another set of a different brand being shown at the Royal Alexandra theater, under the auspices of the Toronto World.

FOX OFFICIALS VISIT.

Manager Granby of the new Toronto Fox branch, 12 Queen street East, Toronto, has just received official visits from two important officers of the Fox corporation. One was Assistant General Manager Robbins from the New York head office and the other was Mr. Harry S. Campbell, of Boston, who has been appointed Canadian general manager. Mr. Granby, who reports good progress in placing Fox features throughout Ontario, is also looking forward to an inspection by Winfield R. Sheehan, of New York, general manager of the Fox company.

FARRAR'S "CARMEN" DRAWING.

In spite of the newspaper agitation which greeted the showing of Lasky's "Carmen" at Massey hall, Toronto, because of the allegation that Geraldine Farrar was pro-German in sentiment, Mr. Phil Kauffman, of Toronto, general manager of the Famous Players' Film Service, has announced that he has secured bookings for the same film for Ontario theaters through to next February, and the run will probably be longer. Moreover, the Lasky Carmen was exhibited before packed houses at The Playhouse theater, Toronto, after it had been shown at the big auditorium.

Mr. Kauffman declares that it is true that he did not secure the patronage of the masses at Massey Music hall for the famous picture play, but he attributes this to the fact that invariably high-class attractions, such as concerts of prima donnas, recitals, etc., are given at this house and the audiences for these are very select. Thus, the nature of the house never invites great numbers of people. Carmen was seen, however, by representatives from the Government house each night and by many military officers of high rank, who ignored the protest against the operatic star. Mr. Kauffman does not believe that the demonstration against Geraldine Farrar has hurt the value of the picture.

Lasky's Carmen has also been booked for many of the Western Canadian theaters, including the Allen at Calgary, the Monarch at Edmonton and many others.

SEATTLE LICENSE BILL SLEEPS.

Special to Moving Picture World from Seattle News Service.

SEATTLE, WASH. — Councilman Hesketh's bill to license film exchanges in Seattle, Wash., is slumbering in one of the councilmanic committees.

The city dad had an idea that by placing an annual fee on each exchange he would provide a means for the municipality to regulate also the price of films to exhibitors. He contended they were paying too much to the middle man.

However, the bill didn't elicit any tremendous enthusiasm from any source, and, from present indications, it will be permitted to slumber peacefully on.

Rival "Carmen's"—Rival Press Agents.

Seattle was treated recently to two productions of "Carmen" at the same time, with Theda Bara being featured at the Clemmer theater and Geraldine Farrar at the Liberty theater.

This soon developed into a battle between the two live-wire press agents of these houses. Bart Bertelson, of the Clemmer, one night got a brass band out on the downtown streets and lighted up the principal block in the city with red fire.

Not to be outdone, Gordon Fullerton, of the Liberty, secured a big Holstein bull, weighing about a ton, attached the same to a huge cart which bore a sign reading: "See How the Bull Is Thrown at the Liberty."

A Point of Difference.

Jim Clemmer, owner of one of the prettiest theaters in the Northwest, and William Fox, the moving picture impresario, are in perfect accord in one respect. In another, they differ radically, according to Bart Bertelson, the Clemmer press agent.

"Jim has more hair on the top of his head and Fox has more on his upper lip," says the truthful Bart. "That's where they differ."

From the same source, it is learned that they are in entire harmony as to the value and quality of Fox pictures. Clemmer has the exclusive privileges to the Fox productions in Seattle.

Features in Seattle.

If "Mary's Lamb" Got "Lessons in Love," would "The Prince and the Pauper" Pick "A Lily and A Rose?"

The above was the headline which appeared in the Seattle Star by way of introducing some of the new bills at the local theaters for the week beginning Sunday, December 12.

The same week, the Mission showed "Hearts That Are Human" and "Inside Facts." At the Melbourne, the bill featured "The Bludgeon," while at the Class A the star attraction was Blanche Sweet in "The Lonedale Operator." At the Grand, Dr. Haiselden, the Chicago physician who refused to operate on a defective baby permitting it to die, was shown in pictures, and at the American theater, the new bill featured "The Bigger Man."

"PEACE" PICTURE IN SPOKANE.

Booked for Clemmer Theater—Ticket Books for Gifts.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Spokane, Wash.—Dr. H. S. Clemmer, manager of the Clemmer theater, Spokane, outstripped his competitors this week by booking "The Battle Cry of Peace" for three weeks, starting in January. He announces that he will run this at top prices, as did "The Birth of a Nation." The picture, Dr. Clemmer believes, will again fill his house with capacity audiences.

Dr. Clemmer has also arranged for novel Christmas presents by having printed books containing 11 15-cent tickets, to be sold at $1.50; 11 10-cent tickets, to be sold at $1, and 11 five-cent tickets for children, to be sold at 50 cents. He is advertising them as acceptable Christmas gifts.

Class A Books Metro.

C. J. Kerr, of Seattle, representing the northwest office of the Metro Film company, signed with Manager Lee S. Forbes of the Class A theater a contract calling for the presentation of the Metro features at that house.

The new service will start December 22. One Metro feature will be shown each week, opening Wednesday, to run four days. Mutual masterpictures will be shown Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, as now, and the two-reel Keystone comedies will be shown three days each week, starting December 19.

W. Potter Becomes Manager.

G. A. Hager, who has been manager of the Universal Film & Supply company local office, for two years, has gone to Butte, Mont., where he will take charge of the Butte exchange for the company.

Mrs. Hager, who worked with him in the office here, will accompany him to Butte, and will have charge of the auditing department.

W. Potter has taken charge of the office here. He has been in the moving picture business for the past eight years. Of this time the first seven was as an exhibitor in Eugene, Ore., and in Seattle, Wash. He has been with the Universal for the past year in the Seattle office.

Gold Roosters at the Casino.

Will T. Reed, manager of the Casino theater, has contracted for the Pathe film service. The features will be the Pathe gold rooster plays, and he will have the choice of the Pathe weekly, appearing twice a week. The Bray animated cartoons and the Pathe scenic and educational split-reels will also be shown. The Casino will continue to offer the Fox attractions for the four-day program.

Takes Over the Empress.

Charles Packeritz has taken over the Empress theater, which has had a checkered career for the last three months, and has reopened it as a picture theater exclusively. He opened with "The Apaches of Paris."

The General Film company will provide the Empress service. Six reels will be shown on each program and programs will be changed three times a week.

Mr. Packeritz was a resident of Spokane for several years following his arrival here in 1890, then went to Seattle and returned two years ago. This is his first theatrical venture here. His previous experience has been in Seattle, where he operated first the Arcade theater, then the Union theater.

Programs at the Liberty.

The Griffith historical production, "Martyrs of the Alamo," which lead the current Triangle program at the Liberty theater, attracted the attention of both teachers and pupils. Manager Ralph Ruffner made special rates to students during the engagement and at each performance several parties were in evidence.

A New Amalgamation

Vancouver Picture Theaters Are Still Maneuvering to Form a More Economical Basis for Operating—Would Get Better Service and Use Less Newspaper Advertising Space—Houses and How They Stand.

By E. C. Thomas, Vancouver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—Negotiations on the contemplated amalgamation of leading Vancouver moving picture theaters are still progressing, but as yet no definite settlement has been made. Meetings of the interested parties have been frequently held, and all angles of the matter discussed.

Although the original arrangements contemplated the amalgamation of all leading houses in Vancouver and Victoria, some have definitely decided not to enter the combination, and it is stated by some that this may result in an important change of plans. The houses included in the present discussions are the Rex in Vancouver, controlled by W. P. Dewees; the Dominion in Vancouver and the Dominion and Majestic in Victoria, controlled by J. R. Muir and associates; the Columbia, Globe, Maple Leaf, Princess and Bijou in Vancouver, the Columbia and Bijou in Victoria, the Bijou and Nanaimo opera house in Nanaimo, and the Empire in North Vancouver, all controlled by the National Amusement company. Manager James W. Pilling of the Orpheum refused to enter the combination, and the same stand was taken by Hector Quagliotti of the Colonial in Vancouver, and his brother, L. J. Quagliotti, of the Variety, Empress and Romano in Victoria. According to an announcement by Manager James E. Finch of the local Universal office, the two latter exhibitors have just signed Universal contracts for six months.

It is stated that the plan of those engineering the amalgamation is to pool the interests of all concerned, and form a corporation to conduct all the houses, with a man not necessarily an exhibitor installed as general manager. It is probably felt that with a large proportion of local theaters in this company, it would then be possible to secure service from exchanges on a more favorable basis. A large cut in the amount spent for newspaper advertising is also contemplated, and reports also state that an effort will be made to induce the papers to lower their rate on theatrical advertising. Mr. Dewees is at present importing V-L-S-E subjects from Seattle, and Mr. Muir, through the Dominion Film exchange is distributing one World Film feature per week, so that a concerted action of other local exchanges could not altogether shut off the supply of film, if developments should warrant such a move. The amalgamation interests are also known to be negotiating for another well-known program, which is at present not represented in this territory.

Meanwhile, exchangemen are sitting tight and awaiting developments.

PUTS UP PRICES.

W. P. Wilson, manager of the Lyceum theater in Winnipeg, has announced that hereafter evening prices at that house will be 15 cents, with the afternoon admission remaining at 10 cents, as before. Productions on the World Film program are now being shown.

MANAGER PILLING TO STAY.

Although it was announced that Manager J. W. Pilling of the Orpheum in Vancouver had resigned, and was to leave for Calgary, Mr. Pilling stated to the World man that he had since been prevailed upon to remain in his present position. Although Mr. Pilling stated that he had no official information on the subject, it is rumored that, beginning very soon, half of each week will be given over to vaudeville, with either W. V. M. A. or Orpheum acts playing the house. The fact that the popular manager has been induced to reconsider his resignation indicates that there may be something in the rumor.

ANOTHER BACHELOR PASSING.

Happy occurences do not come singly to Oscar Hansen, bookkeeper and cashier of the Portland branch of the Mutual office. Besides being Christmas day and also Mr. Hansen's birthday, December 25 has been set as the day of his wedding with Miss Hazel Smith, of the Isis theater, Seattle. A. J. Smith, booker at the Mutual, will serve as best man and the threefold event promises to be a joyous occasion. Mr. Hansen is well known in Portland and surrounding towns as a singer in moving picture theaters.

Blue Cross Benefit in Oak Bay.

Elaborate plans have been made by the Victoria Blue Cross Committee for a benefit which is to be held on December 17 at the Avenue theater in Oak Bay. The program will include songs, dances, and moving pictures, including "Saved by the Blue Cross," and the entertainment will run from 3:30 p. m. until 11 o'clock. Afternoon admission will be 10 cents, with a flat rate of 25 cents in the evening.

Kiddies Ready for Royal Victoria's Tree.

The Rotary Club Christmas tree committee have begun visiting the homes of the children who are to be invited to the club's entertainment to be held in the Royal Victoria theater on Christmas Eve. The committee is making inquiries of mothers as to what presents would be most suitable for each child, and the sizes of shoes and garments required, so that the presents may be really useful ones. More than two hundred children will be invited to share in the distribution of gifts, which will take place following a special moving picture show at the theater.

CHOSEN BRIEF ITEMS.

Kiggins and McGill, owners of the Rex and U S A theaters in Vancouver, Washington, have purchased the Grand, at Camas, Wash., from Thomas Miller. The house will be decorated and remodeled.

R. J. Richardson has opened a picture theater at 28th and East Ankeny streets, Portland, purchasing an Edison machine from the Service Film company.

The Orpheus, Klamath Falls, Ore., which was damaged by fire some time ago, has reopened.

Sam Sampson, president of the electric company at Stevenson, Wash., has opened a new theater in that town. The seating capacity is 250.

A. Gordon, road man for the Sutton Feature Film, Seattle, Wash., was a recent visitor in Portland.

Recent Feature Hits.

Manager J. R. Muir of the Dominion, Vancouver, is showing "The Eternal City" all this week at regular prices, and is doing capacity business every night. For a long time each evening the lobby is packed with waiting patrons.

"The Birth of a Nation" played a successful week at the Empire in Edmonton, the week of December 6, and on Tuesday it was decided to give daily matinees. On the opening night all soldiers in uniform were admitted for half price. The picture opened a week's engagement at the Grand in Calgary December 13.

The general tendency toward higher prices was strikingly shown at Regina a short time ago. The Rex showed "The Eternal City" at 25 and 35 cents, and at the same time the Rose had the Selig production of "The Rosary" at the same prices.

The Edison in New Westminster raised from 10 cents to 15 cents during the showing of Vitagraph's "The Juggernaut."

NEW YORK

Triangle Productions
for Week of December 26th

The continuation of TRIANGLE Quality week after week, the upholding of TRIANGLE ideas month after month, and the consistent production of motion picture plays so far above the average that comparison is impossible is now assured. A word about the plays to be released for the week of December 26th may still further emphasize this point.

There is "The Edge of the Abyss," which gives Mary Boland, the popular Broadway actress, her first opportunity on the screen. An especially strong piece of modern appeal, a gripping story of intense interest form a particularly entertaining play. Every woman will want to see this play of a vital domestic problem—and see it again.

"The Penitents," with Orrin Johnson in the title role, is another play of a distinctly new type based on the fantasy of a queer religious sect who flourished in Mexico in the seventeenth century. Marvelous scenic effects, wonderful acting and a tense story combine to give this play the strongest appeal.

And as for the Keystones, the first, "The Submarine Pirate," featuring Syd Chaplin of the famous Chaplin family, is a four-reeler which the New York press declared to be the very best Keystone ever produced. The Navy Department permitted the use of a U. S. Government Submarine and after witnessing the picture decided to use it for recruiting purposes. "The Hunt," with Ford Sterling, the other Keystone, furnishes more than its share of laughter with its swift-moving merry-making, and completes a week of exceptional excellence.

"A SUBMARINE PIRATE" will Increase Box Office Returns

Increased box office returns are assured with such a feature as "A Submarine Pirate" on any house program. In addition to the well-known Keystone Quality, here we have a roaring, tearing four-reeler that will simply drag an audience into the theatre.

"A Submarine Pirate" is so good that the U. S. Navy Department wants a copy of it. It is so good that you can thank your lucky stars that it is yours for these days. The New York press is a unit in its praise:

"Shudders and laughs close together run into one long tremor—that's the effect of seeing 'A Submarine Pirate.' Its melodrama is so funny that one can't merely thrill, and its comedy is so exciting that one can't merely laugh."—N. Y. Sun.

"The new Triangle-Keystone comedy, 'A Submarine Pirate,' is one of the most amusing films of the season. It is thrilling as well, for it sets a new limit in stunts."—N. Y. Tribune.

"'A Submarine Pirate' is one of the funniest comedies shown here in many a day."—N. Y. Press.

"'A Submarine Pirate' is one of the best comedies Mack Sennett has ever produced."—Philadelphia Ledger.

"A sensational film, 'A Submarine Pirate' is the chief attraction at the Knickerbocker Theatre this week."—N. Y. Eve. Post.

These are the kind of comments this wonderful picture has secured. Many others of equally glowing praise have appeared in the other New York, Philadelphia and Chicago papers. When "A Submarine Pirate" was shown at the Knickerbocker Theatre during the week of December 12th for the second time, the criticisms were as pleasing as at first.

BIG FOUR FEATURE PLAY

From the Same Materials—

Some men build mammoth plants—others, pigmy workshops.

The essentials of a successful film feature are common knowledge—

Yet the number of such features which are released is woefully small.

That this company's productions have become a guarantee of sterling merit, is due not alone to that which is put into them, but also to how that material is applied.

Back of each there are painstaking efforts, unequaled experience and resources, and a sincerity of purpose which make for a finished product of the highest order.

And with each there goes a selling service designed to promote that feature to the best advantage of its exhibitors.

All of which, when summed up, simply means that those who book V-L-S-E features may bank their profits in advance.

My dear Mr. Partridge:

While you did not request us to comment on the feature, "A Nations's Peril," which we showed Sunday at our Majestic Theatre, we wish to state that we are really compelled to say a word or two in appreciation of the tremendous outburst of applause, and the approval of this great production by the public. As far as Box Office success, it was the biggest in the history of the house.

We are using the best features the market produces, and consider your, "A Nation's Peril"--"THE ONE BEST BET." Give us a few more like them.

ESSANAY.

BROUGHT HOME—(Two Parts—Dec. 28).—The cast: Dorcas Dale, an orphan (Ruth Stonehouse); Jack Marston, a millionaire (Richard C. Travers); Billy Tyne, another orphan (Billy Harper); George Rodney, Marston's attorney (Edmund F. Cobb).

Dorcas Dale, a little orphan girl, leaves the orphanage to go to the city home of Louise Edgeworth, where she is to work. Miss Edgeworth fails to meet her at the train, and while wandering in the streets is run over by an automobile. The driver proves to be Jack Marston, a young millionaire, who that day had been declared insane by specialists and was attempting suicide.

The accident clears his mind, and Dorcas is taken to his home, where she is nursed back to health. While there, Billy Tyne, another little orphan, visits her, and Marston takes a fancy to him. Marston sends Dorcas away to a convent, then takes Billy out west, where they live on a ranch. Years later Dorcas, now a grown girl, goes west and finds Marston, who is overjoyed at seeing the little waif who had made life worth while for him.

THE FABLE OF THE HEIR AND THE HEIRESS—(Dec. 29).—The cast: The workhorse (Charles J. Stine); Bertrand, his son (Earl Stanhope); Isabel, his daughter (Peggy Sweeney).

Once upon a time there was a Work-horse who had Morman whiskers and a Mackeral Eye. He was out for the Kale, and would lie awake nights scheming how he could Corner more Collateral. He was going to provide for His family. His wife was a Good woman and never wasted money on jewelry or Cut flowers. The Fond parents saved and skimped. They wanted Bertrand and Isabel to go through life on Ball Bearings.

The parents finally went to their Reward. When Pa locked his desk and started for the Pearly Gates, he left behind a good "Man Friday" to take care of the Books and do the Collecting. The Slave decided it was his Duty to leave his family Well Fixed, and Bertrand is now Obliging Night Clerk in a Louisville Hotel, while Friend Brother-in-law works in a Nickel show. Moral: Somebody must rake up the leaves before the Young People can Have a successful Bon-Fire.

THE PRISONER AT THE BAR—(Three Parts; Jan. 1).—The cast: John Allen, a fisherman (Darwin Karr); Shirley Harwood (Warda Howard); James Allen, a young lawyer (William Burns); Ambrose Stanton (Hugh Thompson).

Ambrose Stanton, a millionaire, is found murdered in his home. In the midst of the inquest John Allen, a weather-beaten fisherman, enters the house and confesses that he did the killing. At his trial he is defended by a young lawyer by the name of Allen. The prisoner tells the story of his life—how he and Stanton had worked together in a small town bank. They were rivals for the hand of Shirley Harwood.

Allen won her, and Stanton, in revenge, stole the bank's funds, shifting the blame of Allen. When Allen was sent to prison Stanton stole his wife and boy. Years later Allen was pardoned and became a fisherman. By chance he rescued a woman from drowning who proves to be his wife. After hearing her story he goes to Stanton's home and kills him. Allen is acquitted by the jury, and the young lawyer who defended him proves to be his own son. There is a happy reunion in the court room.

KALEM.

THE MISSING MUMMY—(Jan. 4).)—The cast: Bud (Bud Duncan); Spike, his pal (Charles Inslee); Ethel (Ethel Teare); Jack, her sweetheart (Jack McDermott); Prof. Earnest Worker (Gus Leonard); Prof. Andy Deluvian (Charles Mulgro).

"Bud" and his pal secure jobs as guardians of a valuable Egyptian mummy. A jealous professor steals the mummy, and it is decided that "Bud" must take the mummy's place for a demonstration on the next day to save the guardians' jobs. The fun that follows may be imagined. It reaches a climax when the demonstrator declares, "To show that this is a real mummy I will drive a spike through its nose."

THE HONOR OF THE ROAD—(Episode No. 7 of the "Stingaree" Series; Two Parts; Jan. 5).—The cast: Stingaree (True Boardman); Hardcastle (Thomas Lingham); Duncan (Frank Jonasson); Howie (Paul C. Hurst); Sergeant Lansing (Edward Clisbec); Ethel (Marin Sais); Mrs. Hardcastle (Ollie Kirkby).

A rancher, after a dispute with his partner, kills him, and makes it appear that Stingaree, the famous bushranger, was guilty of the deed. For "the honor of the road" Stingaree sets about to weave a net of evidence around the real culprit, which he does in a surprising manner and after narrowly escaping capture himself several times.

CROSSED CLUES—(Episode No. 11 of "The Ventures of Marguerite"; Jan. 7).—The cast: Marguerite (Marguerite Courtot); Bob Winter (Roland Bottomley); Peter Enright (Richard Purdon); Hawley (Forrest Cummings); Swartz (Hassan Mussali); Borden (Joe Sullivan).

The heroine becomes involved in the machinations of the spies of a foreign government when her lover discovers a chemical that is of interest to the United States officials. Marguerite falls into the hands of the ploters when they are escaping on a fast sloop and there are many exciting water scenes before the inventor and Secret Service men overtake the sloop in a speedy power boat and the plotters are brought to justice.

VITAGRAPH.

TRIED FOR HIS OWN MURDER (Broadway Star Feature—Three Parts—Jan 8).—The cast: D'Arclay (Maurice Costello); Irene Gardner (Leah Baird); Ransford (Van Dyke Brooke); James Gardner (George Stevens); Peter (Harry Fisher); Martha (Mrs. Phillips).

Irene Gardner, a blind girl, living in the mountains with her invalid father, has but one friend, Ransford, a man of the world, who comes up there to shoot, and is greatly attracted to the child of the woods. John D'Arcley, an embittered cynic, comes there, meets Irene, falls in love with her purity and innocence, and marries her. He takes her away and has an operation performed which promises to be successful, and in their new home they are very happy at first.

But many of Irene's childish ways and her innocent enjoyment of life, awaken distrust in her naturally distrustful husband. He imagines she is beginning to love Ransford, a stranger whom John has never met. Irene regains her sight suddenly, goes to look for her husband and, mistaking Ransford for him, runs into his arms. D'Arcley sees this, and, imagining his worst fears have come true, goes away. At the river's edge he finds a suicide, exchanges identities with the dead man, whose body is found with D'Arcley's clothes on and supposed to be murdered.

Irene mourns for her husband, while Ransford tries in vain to win her consent to marry him. Later D'Arcley meets his wife, and saves her life but she does not recognize him and falls in love with him. But Ransford, learning of this, discovers that the thumb print found on the dead man coincides with the thumb print of the man Irene is in love with! Ransford gives up the evidence, and D'Arcley is arrested for his own murder. Believing Irene is married to Ransford, D'Arcley keeps silent for her sake and he is condemned to death. Before it is too late, however, Irene recognizes D'Arcley when she accidentally puts her hands on his face as she used to before she could see, and explanations ensue which straighten out the tangle.

THE LITTLE TRESPASSER (Jan. 3).—The cast: Lillie (Jewell Hunt); Her Father (Harry Fisher); Jack (Arthur Cozine); Uncle (John Costello); Gardener (William Sellery).

Lillie's parents are caretakers of the property adjoining Mr. Montgomery's estate. He is a wealthy bachelor. Lillie's pleasures consist in shooting, boating and gathering flowers, while roaming through Mr. Montgomery's woods and gardens. Cobbs, the grouchy gardener, has orders to keep all trespassers off the grounds and tries in vain to keep the troublesome Lillie away. Jack, the owner's nephew, arrives on a visit, and starts out to frighten away the trespasser, but instead falls in love with Lillie and she introduces him to her parents.

A pleasing romance follows and the young people get a head of fun out of fooling the old gardener and Mr. Montgomery, but Jack always reports that the little trespasser cannot be found. When Jack wins her promise to marry him, however, he introduces the girl to Uncle in a most astonishing manner and announces his engagement. When the latter has recovered his breath, and sees the engagement ring, he gladly gives the young people his blessing, laughing heartily at the little joke they played on him.

WHEN HOOLIGAN AND DOOLIGAN RAN FOR MAYOR (Unit Program—Jan. 3).—The cast: Dennis Hooligan (Hughey Mack); Dooligan (William Shea); Mrs. Hooligan (Flora Finch); Mrs. Dooligan (Kate Price); Patsy Hooligan (Nitra Frazer); Jack Dooligan (Donald MacBride).

Mrs. Hooligan and Mrs. Dooligan are friends until their husbands are both nominated for mayor by different parties. Then jealousy changes them into enemies and a fine feud is soon under way. The night before election a joint debate is to be held in the town hall by the two rival candidates. Mrs. Hooligan and her son, Patsy, dress up as very poor people, and tell Dooligan a hard-luck story with the idea of luring him away from the meeting. But Dooligan is not idle, and he has his boy Jake put a package of sneeze powder, unobserved, into Hooligan's handkerchief just before meeting time.

Dooligan is greatly delayed by the supposed "old lady" and little boy, makes a dash for freedom and his hat and coat, and Mrs. Hooligan locks the wardrobe closet door on him. After a long wait, the chairman starts the meeting without Dooligan, and Hooligan starts in with a rush to deliver his harangue. Every few minutes he is interrupted by applause; but dire calamity overtakes him when he uses his handkerchief. The meeting breaks up in hilarious disorder, everyone laughing at the comical grimaces and actions of the sneezing Hooligan, and the upshot of the whole affair is that neither gets elected. Straightwater, the Prohibition candidate, steps into the breach and carries the election by a large majority.

WHO KILLED JOE MERRION (Unit Program—Four Parts—Jan. 3).—The cast: William Rufford (J. Herbert Frank); Sir Phillips' Wife (Rose Tapley); Butler (George Stevens); Sir Philip Randall (Joseph Kilgour); James, His Son (S. Rankin Drew); Vivienne (Betty Gray); Her Maid (Mabel Kelly); Merrion (Denton Vane).

James, a scapegrace son of Sir Phillip Randall, Judge of the King's bench, is banished from home by his father, on account of the boy's persistent follies. Lady Randall is greatly attached to her son, and dies of a broken heart. On her deathbed she makes the Judge swear that should his son appeal to him for help he will not refuse.

Vivienne Stevens, ward of the Randalls, is secretly in love with the exiled son and rejects William Rufford, the county squire and her father's choice for her suitor. One year later, Joe Merrion, a bookmaker, is found dead in a railway carriage, and Rufford, who was last seen with the dead man, accused of killing him. He is placed on trial before Judge Randall, who cannot believe the man guilty, but on circumstantial evidence, Rufford is sentenced to life imprisonment. The only real clue is held by Sir Randall: a small bit of cardboard which was found in the victim's hand, evidently broken from a photograph in a struggle.

Meanwhile James Randall, the son, continues his fast life at the races, and finally, dead broke, writes his father for help. The Judge, in conformity with his promise to his dead wife, does so, and to his horror, finds among his son's pawned effects, a photograph of his wife, with the corner torn. The little piece fits it exactly and the Judge is stunned by the realization that his own son is a murderer. Rufford, that same day escapes, and the Judge writes a confession to the prison authorities. He sends for Jimmie and the boy confesses the whole truth his story revealing that the killing was an accident. The Judge then allows him to escape but Rufford, who blames the Judge for his imprisonment, enters his home and stabs him just as Vivienne enters. Finding the letter the Judge had written, Rufford is stricken with remorse, and to atone, burns the letter and gives himself up to the law. Jimmie returns, and he and Vivienne go away to start life anew as man and wife.

HIS WIFE KNEW ABOUT IT (Featuring Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew—Jan. 7).

Mr. and Mrs. Pantomus have agonizing experiences with cooks. They think they have a jewel, but when the soup arrives at the table Paul indignantly inquires if it is "elysmic soup," or "Puree of appollinaris." Another one concocts a dish she proudly calls "peach cutlet with Camphor ball garnishing." Finally they discover a gem of the rarest quality in Tillie. How she can cook Mr. and Mrs. Pantomus even dare to invite some friends out to dine with them. Showers of praise and wonder follow, but Paul's complacency gets a shock when Tillie announces that it's too lonely where they are living—she wants to go to the city and see a bit of life.

Rendered desperate, Mrs. Pantomus suggests Paul take the cook to dinner at Gufanti's, and he somewhat nervously agrees. When they see the cook's get-up, Paul nearly has a fit, but he is game, and during the excruciatingly funny incidents which follow, he carries himself with dignity. A couple of fellow-club members see him with the unknown and are filled with wonder. Mrs. Pantomus enters, takes in the situation and decides to have some fun. She sends Paul a note, then enters the cafe. The two friends act very foolish trying to keep her from seeing Paul and the unknown lady, but after further complications end a big laugh, all is explained, then each drinks a toast to Tillie.

THE WANDERERS (Broadway Star Feature—Three Parts—Jan. 1).—The cast: Clem (William Duncan); Lorraine (George Holt); Roy (Jack Mower; Kate Brown (Mary Ruby); Muskeg Jake (Otto Benninger); Babette (Hazel Buckham); Old Blacksmith (Otto Lederer); Camp Blaeksmith (J. C. Weatherby); Pete, Lorraine's Tool (Chris. Enriquez).

Clem, the blacksmith, known as the Wanderer, buys out the shop of an old blacksmith and starts life in the little town. He falls in love with Kate Brown, the village school teacher, but overhears her address a stranger in apparently endearing fashion and, broken-hearted, follows the wanderlust and goes to Athabasca Landing. There Clem makes the acquaintance of Roy, the fellow he saw talking to Kate, but does not recognize him. The two wanderers get work in the blacksmith's shop under Lorraine, the camp boss and bully.

Roy and Clem save "Old Kentuck" from the boss' wrath and in return he gives them the only thing he has—a bunch of stock certificates in a supposedly useless oil company. Once again Roy has a run-in with the boss when the latter tries to force old Muskeg Jake's daughter into a marriage with him. The old man refuses and Lorraine kills him, for which brutal act Roy gives the bully a thrashing which nearly kills him. Fleeing from a threatened lynching, Lorraine falls over a precipice in the mountains into Devil's Swamp and perishes in its awful depths.

The oil stock held by Clem suddenly takes a rise when a huge gusher is found and he and Roy find themselves rich men. Roy sends for his sister, and to Clem's amazement and delight, she proves to be Kate Brown, his former sweetheart. The conversation incident is satisfactorily explained and Clem gives Kate a bear hug, while Roy goes straight to Babette, Old Jake's daughter, proposes and is accepted. The Wanderers have found the end of the trail.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURE

EVERYGIRL (Three Parts—Dec. 24).—"Everygirl" and "Everyboy," ill-fitted by the blind worship of their parents to fight the powers of evil, reach a stage in the development of their characters when Satan carefully lays his plans for their destruction. In Hades he calls before him "Eviladvice," "Indifference," "Flattery," "Greed," "Wealth," "Fame" and his numerous other agents, trained by evil thoughts to do his bidding, and sends them to Earth to meet "Everygirl" and "Everyboy" in the City of "Temptation."

"Everygirl" begs her parents to allow her to go to the Metropolis to gain fame and fortune and they weakly consent. "Everyboy" is petted and praised at home and at college and wins the consent of wealthy parents to leave his home town and see life in the Metropolis. "Everygirl" is met by "Eviladvice" as she steps from the great depot to a theatrical boarding house, but not until she has greeted "Everybody," who recognizes her as a girl from his home town. In the boarding house Satan appears in the form of "Flattery," the friend of an agent who hires cabaret singers. The landlady, "Indifference," recognizes Satan but allows "Everygirl" to fall into his hands. She becomes a cabaret singer and is seen singing in a gay restaurant by "Everybody," who recognizes the innocence of "Everygirl," although he, himself, is fast becoming a lover of the "White Lights." The cabaret manager sells "Everygirl's" contract to another manager, who comes to claim her. She is annoyed by a guest of the cabaret and "Everyboy's" attempt to protect her starts a brawl which causes him to be arrested and thrown into a cell, while "Everygirl" is carried away by her new manager during the excitement. She awakes in a strange house and, unable to escape, places a note in a small bottle and throws it from a window into the river. Later she is aided to escape by another girl in the house who helps her descend from a window by the aid of a fire ladder. She falls, however, and "Everygirl" loses her memory as the result of her fall, wandering aimlessly until she finds "Kindness" in the home of "Poverty."

"Everyboy" is aided by an unknown hand which causes the water from a broken sewer to crumble the wall of his prison and he finds himself on the river bank where he picks up the bottle containing "Everygirl's" plea for help. With "Justice," a detective, he finds the taxi driver who carried the girl to her hiding place and locates and enters the house. There he meets Satan who escapes during a disturbance, as he does not care to be seen in other than respectable society. But "Everygirl" is not found. She finds work in the factory of "Avarice" and is met there by "Everyboy," who is forced by ill fortune to earn his living by also working for "Avarice." "Everyboy" is not recognized by "Everygirl," but decides to watch over her. In the form of "Murderer," an influential politician, who helps "Avarice" evade the fire laws, Satan meets "Everygirl." He causes her home of poverty to be visited by "Sickness," and decides that the time for her destruction has arrived. While she is struggling with Satan in the office of the factory a lamp is overturned and the building catches fire. The girls, who are all trapped in the top story, are finally rescued by "Everybody," who also saves "Everygirl," but he hurls Satan back into the flames, where he is forced to reveal his real identity and return to the lower regions while the factory burns to the ground.

"Everygirl," having her memory restored by her experiences, thinks only of the happiness of her parents while Satan recognizes his defeat and drives his friends before him into the very recesses of Hell.

THE MYSTERIOUS BRIDE (Three Parts—Dec. 31).—Ardently courted by two wealthy young men, Banker Alden's daughter, Stacia, is equally fond of both and uses her woman's wit to treat them alike. At cotillions they both receive her favors and when both insist upon serving her with refreshments, she even pretends to want a double portion. But the time comes when she is pressed for a definite answer, and when her friends laughingly suggest that Bob and Jack mount their favorite horses and race for her hand, she agrees to accept the winner. The event takes place in the presence of a gay company and Bob rides home first amid the loud cheers of the onlookers.

Stacia accepts his engagement ring and the fact that Jack has met with an accident, receiving a bad fall from his horse, is not learned until the engagement is announced. Convalescent, Jack calls upon Stacia, but she refuses to change her decision and causes a serious quarrel between the two men. On a beautiful moonlight night the wedding takes place. Jack seeks a last look at Stacia by climbing a high wall and hiding in the garden during the wedding celebration. Stacia sees him and seeks to comfort him by allowing him to take her little lace handkerchief to keep as a token of everlasting friendship. The handkerchief is covered with blood from a cut which Jack has unconsciously received in his hand while climbing the wall and he leaves a trail of blood as he secretly leaves the garden.

When the guests have all departed Stacia playfully runs away from her husband and hides in a closet which is entered by means of a panel opened by a secret spring. He is unable to find her and she discovers too late that the spring has broken and she is doomed to die a horrible death. Almost insane, Bob directs the suspicions of the police to Jack, who finds himself tangled in a web of circumstantial evidence which causes him to be sentenced to life imprisonment.

Five years later finds Jack employed in the hospital of the penitentiary as an assistant physician. A patient dies and is placed in a canvas bag in the morgue awaiting burial. Jack steals the key of the morgue and, hiding the corpse, sews himself into the canvas bag in its stead, and is thrown into the sea where he succeeds in cutting his way out of the sack and, reaching a small fishing village. He becomes a respected member of the community and falls in love with a fisheran's beautiful daughter, thus making a bitter enemy of a rival for the girl's affections. The discovery of Jack's escape by the prison authorities leads to a determined effort on the part of the police to locate him and he is found just as he has succeeded in winning the love of the girl and the consent of her father, whose life he saves by a splendid act of daring.

In the meantime Bob has lived a sad and lonely existence in the mansion in which his bride of a few hours was so mysteriously lost to him. His mind is affected by his brooding and Stacia appears to him in spirit form striving in vain to tell him of her fatal accident and Jack's unjust punishment. As the time for Jack's capture by the police arrives, her spirit becomes more active and as Bob stumbles blindly in pursuit of it through the gloomy halls of the mansion, he falls against the door of the secret closet and the skeleton of his unhappy girl-wife, still wearing the bridal raiment, is exposed to his view. Jack's escape to the mountains, his capture by the police and his return to prison are quickly followed by his complete vindication through the efforts of the unhappy Bob, and his marriage to the fisherman's beautiful daughter marks the beginning of a happy life.

UPS AND DOWNS (Dec. 31).—Plaid Jabbs has lots of money and a beautiful daughter. While out in the park one day feeding the ducks, the beautiful daughter, Ethel, is accosted by Shifty Mike, who endeavors to carress her and impress a kiss upon her lips. Jabbs, nearby, hears her scream and hurried to the rescue. Administering a sound thrashing to Shifty Mike, he kicks him away. But Shifty Mike is not so easily gotten rid of. He immedlately summons his two assistants and with orders to them to repair to their rendezvous, he proceeds to follow Jabbs home. Pokes is Ethel's favorite and arrives upon the scene shortly after Jabbs leaves. Ethel, forgetting her troubles, reposes comfortably in the arms of her sweetheart. Marriage is the question, but Pokes is broke and Ethel informs him work he must get. So he starts out to hunt it.

The confederates about this time have finished their task of getting ready a warm reception for Jabbs. Shifty arrives, but a brave man is needed to put their scheme into execution. A poster card is written and placed upon the front of their residence. Numerous applicants arrive and last of all, Pokes, who, upon seeing the sign "Little work and big pay," immediately applies. As we might expect, Pokes is the successful applicant, and with Shifty's two assist-'ants' as watchers, he starts out to perform his task. Numerous obstacles present themselves, which are finally overcome.

Arriving at the side of Jabbs' residence, Pokes throws the missile through the window. It travels some distance and is handled by various people, when arriving back at Pokes' feet, it explodes. In his journey up and down he passes through a room full of card players and the sides of a house, only to fall back into the very room where Jabbs is sitting, unhurt. Shifty, during this time, has captured Ethel upon the street, while she was walking with a friend. Pokes and Jabbs rought it up a bit, and Jabbs tosses Pokes through the open window. Unconsciously, but just in time, Pokes knocks Shifty head first into a rain barrel and rescues his sweetheart. Ethel, proving "It is indeed an ill wind that blows nobody good."

THIS WAY OUT (Jan. 7).—Hotel men have their troubles and the Eagle Hotel is no exception. All the help have quit and the place is in pandemonium. Something must be done and quick. The clerk rushes out. Plump and Runt are plying their trade, street cleaning. The clerk rushes out, sees them, brings them into the hotel and presses them into service as porter and bellboy.

Baths are being rung for and ice water, too. The new crew starts to work, and after administering a bath to the cranky old grouch who had been ringing for an hour for ice water and eating part of the cake that the waitress had baked for her sweetheart, the clerk, order is once more restored. Jabbs and his wife arrive at the hotel accompanied by mother-in-law. They are no sooner in their room, when a telegram calling Jabbs out of town arrives. Mother-in-law and wifey accompany him to the station.

On their return, an insipid flirt accosts them. He is repulsed, but follows them home, even into the hotel. The wife and mother-in-law ring for the porter and bellboy and demand protection, which is gladly given. In return, the porter and bellboy are treated sumptuously to cake and wine. Jabbs misses the train and returns home. He, being the first arrival after the porter and bellboy have agreed mutual protection, he is promptly ejected as the suspect. Jabbs must get into his room. He tries the ladder route, but is hustled out again. He secures a hamper, has himself expressed to the hotel, is delivered and signed for.

The flirt, who has been in the room all this time, thinks it is about time to make his getaway and tries to get out just as wifey and mamma are returning. The porter and bellboy are again summoned and are going to throw the hamper down the stairs, when Jabbs emerges from it. Recognition takes place. The flirt is found, and but for the appeal of the women would have received a sound thrashing. So he quickly slinks away with the porters' words ringing in his ears, "This Way Out."

THE LITTLE PURITAN (Dec. 23).—Sam Hubert, a theatrical manager, learns that his greatest rival in the theatrical field has signed up a new and brilliant star—Corinne, the dancer—whom Hubert has never met. He feels that he must do something to counteract this scoop and decides to leave at once for Philadelphia for the purpose of signing up a certain European celebrity who has just arrived from abroad. Accordingly he motors over.

Corinne, the dancer, in an early morning country spin, meets with a smashup. She seeks refuge in a little Quaker cottage nearby and is given a Quaker dress and outfit to wear while her own is being repaired. She insists on being allowed to help around the house and starts off for the spring.

Hubert—his trip to Philadelphia a failure—is returning. Pretending that his radiator needs water, he hurries to the spring and meets the fair Quakeress. She recognizes Hubert and sees an opportunity for fun and publicity. So she pretends to fall for Hubert when that man makes gallant advances to her and he readily falls into the net she spreads for him. He returns to the cottage, introduced there as Corinne's chauffeur.

They decide to elope. She secretly writes a telegram to her husband (the rival theatrical manager) and her press agent, giving them the full details of the affair for publicity purposes. The story is printed in every newspaper in town that night.

Eventually Hubert and Corinne arrive at Hubert's theater after an all night machine ride. The press agent, who has been waiting for them, rushes forward to meet them and hands Hubert a morning paper as he helps Corinne out of the car. Corinne laughingly introduces Hubert to her husband and, as Hubert recovers from the shock, she points to the newspaper and saucily strolls away with her lord and master. Hubert gets shock number two when he reads the article and realizes that he is an "honorary member of the Patsy Club."

FATHER'S CHILD (Three Parts—Dec. 29).—The cast: Da-Da (Harry Myers); Mamma (Rosemary Theby); Little Precious (James Rosen); Bum Burglar (Louis Leon Hall).

Mr. and Mrs. Newlywed live in Babyville, a very hot place, not only because Old Sol is busy twenty-four hours a day, but because Little Precious wants individual and continuous attention from his parents. The next morning after a sleepless night, Da-Da is cooling his fevered brow by fanning himself when Little Precious wakes up and demands that Da-Da fan him. After keeping his cooling device going for a long time on his son, Da-Da manages to escape to the office. It was just as hot in the office as it was in the cute little bungalow, where Little Precious was lord of all he surveyed. The boss was foaming at the mouth. The other clerks felt it an imposition that Mr. Newlywed was late, and he got a very cold reception for such a hot day. When noon-time came Mr. Newlywed found that his desk was already deep in papers.

At this juncture things began to happen at home. Little Precious was asleep. Mrs. Talkemblind ran in to see Mrs. Newlywed, and they chewed the rag so loud that they awoke Little Precious. Mamma called Da-Da home and he immediately began another session with the fan. Result: Precious snoozes again and he is taken up to the roof with Mamma. Then Da-Da had a grand idea. Why not pacify the angry spirit of his militant son by playing to him on the new pianola? Little Precious heard the music and signified his pleasure. Then he wanted the instrument brought up to him on the roof. Da-Da nearly faints, as the pianola weighs nearly 300 pounds. Love will find a way, and parental affection apparently gave him the strength to move the three-hundred pound pianola up on to second floor on its way to the roof. But here it stuck. Papa fell and the pianola fell on his chest.

"My husband has a piano on his chest," Mamma cried hysterically.

"Why a piano?" asked meek Mr. Henpeck. "Ain't a porous plaster easier?"

Mamma finally gets enough men into the house to relieve Da-Da of the piano. After much exertion Da-Da and Mamma eventually get the instrument up on the roof. Then Mamma takes him downstairs and puts him to bed. Little Precious starts to bawl and, in order to pacify the militant spirit of the peace disturber, Da-Da has to bring the pianola downstairs. Precious snoozes again and Da-Da and Mamma retire.

Just at this juncture a bum burglar decides to enter. He has heard that the spoons are almost silver, and he wishes to verify and profit by the rumor. The dog hears noise, and cleverly calls father's attention to the fact that he is wanted below. Mother realizes the dog's intent, and fearful lest the burglar wake up the baby, she urges Papa to go down and warn Mr. Burglar to be very quiet. Their worst fears are verified, for the burglar is an extremely undesirable looking character, and he is eating up the gold fish. In their agitation Da-Da's gun accidentally explodes, and the burglar makes a hurried exit. Also Little Precious wakes up, and pandemonium breaks loose when the dog catches sight of the maltese mouser on the top of the piano, where she had no business to be. But half an hour later another day in the peaceful lives of Mr. and Mrs. Newlywed comes to its close, and they prepare to meet the vicissitudes of another sun.

A TRIBUTE TO MOTHER (Special—Two Parts—Dec. 31).—The cast: James Randall (John Maurice Sullivan); Mrs. Randall (Mrs. J. M. Sullivan); The Traveler (Morgan Thorpe); The Mother (Nellie Grant); Randall, the boy (Andie Clark); Nellie, the sweetheart (Violet Debichorle); The Father (Bert Busby); Ames, the Cad (Jemes Alling).

James Randall is an austere business man, and often keeps his stenographer working for hours overtime. Randall's neglect of his wife induces her to encourage the attention of Fred Ames, a social parasite. The evening when Mrs. Randall has gone to the theater with her admirer, Randall, who is sitting by the fireside, falls asleep. In a vision he sees the curtains in the room in which he is sleeping part and there appears The Traveler who urges Randall to forget business and follow him. He is taken by The Traveler to the top of a high mountain, and looking down they see the squalor of the city below. Randall wants to give money to a group of little children, but The Traveler stops him and says that happiness cannot be purchased with money.

The Traveler then takes Randall into "The Little Church Around the Corner," where they see the choir boys singing, and it brings back to Randall memories of his young days. In his reverie, the austere business man sees himself again as a young man escorting Nellie Good home from school. Later he has a rough and tumble fight with another school boy. The teacher sends him home, but instead he goes to a swimming pool where he is joined by the other boys after school. For this disobedience his father gives him a spanking, but his mother comes to his aid. The other scenes of Randall's boyhood follow in rapid succession, until we see him grown into young manhood. Nellie Good married another young fellow, but Randall's mother comforts him until he finally finds the "right girl" and marries her.

Years later he has become a successful business man, but his desire for riches has so warped his nature that he has entirely forgotten his mother and has developed into a severe man of business. Randall comes out of his reverie just in time to hear the minister at "The Little Church Around the Corner" say, "How many of those in my congregation have a mother?" He is overcome with emotion, and The Traveler takes him out of the church and leads him into a scene showing his boyhood home. He knows his mother is there and just as he is about to open the door the scene fades out, and he finds himself in his library. He is weeping with bitter remorse as his wife, who has become tired of her admirer, comes in. Mrs. Randall regognizes by intuition that a change has come over her husband, and he takes her in his arms, saying, "Let's go home to mother."

THE DAWN ROAD—(Two Parts; Jan. 1).—The cast: Fred Armstrong (Sherman Bainbridge); Roso (Florine Hanna); Edith Langdon (Edna Payne); Frank Langdon (Herman Ilmer); Jay Carney (Norbert A. Myles); Dave (William Crinley); Dawn (Rex De Rosselli).

Fred Armstrong, a young physician on the way to Landerman to start a practice, stops at Gilmore, the stage terminal, awaiting the arrival of the stage. He drops into a saloon and dancehall owned by Dawn while waiting for the stage. Jay Carney, agent of the express company, who is a coward, is in the saloon. He tries to force his attentions upon Rose, one of the girls of the dancehall. Fred interferes. Carney's cowardly nature is exposed by Fred. Armstrong establishes his practice in the new town, and among the first of his patients is Frank Langdon, an invalid, who lives with his daughter, Edith. There is mutual attraction between the two, and they finally become engaged.

Carney has long desired Edith. Thinking that the girl is lost to him forever, he decides to revenge himself upon Armstrong. Dave, the express mesenger, is in Carney's power. Carney, some time before, has caught him horse stealing, and holds this knowledge over his head, and Dave is forced by him to join a plot to ruin Armstrong. Back at the dancehall Roso has decided she cannot bear the life any longer, and she leaves for Landerman to seek aid from Armstrong, who had given her his card and told her to call upon him when she needed aid. Armstrong has left town to attend a patient, and Carney sees the opportunity for which he has been waiting. He plans with Dave to pull off a fake holdup, incriminating Armstrong as the bandit.

Rose goes to the doctor's office and, finding him out, begins to straighten up his office. Edith has to transact some business for her father at Gilmore, and on the way to the stage she stops in at Armstrong's office. She sees Rose straightening up the office and gets the impression that the girl is either the sweetheart or wife of Armstrong.

When the stage reaches the appointed place Carney holds it up. Dave is ordered off the box. The horses become frightened and run away with Edith inside helpless. The terrified Dave tells Carney that the girl is inside, but they are unable to asist her. They hide the stronx box, then set out for Landerman. It happens that the cabin where Armstrong is making his call is near to the place where the holdup takes place. As he returns by way of a short cut, he sees the runaway stage and gets a glimpse of Edith hanging on. He manages to stop the stage and rescue the girl. She shrinks from him, and he is puzzled at her manner. When he questions her about her manner, she asks him why he did not tell her that he was married. Armstrong is bewildered by her question, and then learns of the strange woman in his office. He denies knowing who the woman is.

Carney and Dave have hastened back to town, and hurry into Armstrong's office. Rose, seeing them coming, hides in a closet. She sees the two crooks hide their masks and other incriminating evidence in Armstrong's desk, and they hurry to report the robbery to the sheriff without seeing Rose. Carney suggests they go to the doctor's office for treatment, and the sheriff accompanies them.

Rose has just started to remove the articles from the doctor's desk when the three arrive. She again hides. Edith and Fred, coming in, are very much surprised when Fred is accused of being the bandit. Rose comes from her hiding place and tells of the frame-up. Dave starts to tell the sheriff. Carney surmises his intention and tries to shoot him, but is frustrated by the sheriff and Fred. Fred then notices Rose and Edith, and explains the circum-

Christmas Greetings . . . Joyous Tidings to All Producing Companies

Florida now has for your convenience one of the most modern and complete plants in the country for the production and development of pictures.

You need bring only your principal performers and directors—everything else will be furnished.

Eagle City is beautifully located just across the St. Johns River from Jacksonville. The transportation facilities are excellent, the ferry taking you from Jacksonville to Arlington Heights in twelve minutes, and from there to Eagle City—four-fifths of a mile—by the company's auto service.

Eagle City has been made into a veritable Eden, with artificial lakes, tropical plants, flower gardens, quaint arbors, rustic bridges, pergolas; in fact everything to make it a wonderland of art and beauty. It contains a building 40 x 60 feet and two and one-half stories high, in which is installed a developing and printing plant with the capacity of 500,000 feet of film a week, and with plenty of room for expansion; buildings with a projecting room fitted with every modern improvement; carpenter, paint and plastic shops, dressing and lounging rooms for the performers; electric light and water plants. There is an outdoor stage 55 x 85 feet, modern in every way, with natural lighting effects; a glass building with stage 55 x 85 feet, with modern ventilating system, etc. There is ample fire protection for all plants and the surrounding bungalows, built for the convenience of directors, performers, etc.

We are prepared to take care of every tropical and every ancient or modern scene called for. We have listed and indexed by still photos everything in the way of architecture—Roman, Spanish, Mexican, etc.; interiors of home, buildings, forts, factories, hotels, etc., and thousands of various locations in and around Jacksonville. We also have a list of 5,000 experienced extras and their wardrobes. This will insure you quick action with no loss of time.

We have every branch or division of the business under the supervision and direction of experts of the highest standard and can furnish you with expert cameramen, scenic artists, electricians, mechanics, carpenters and automobiles for production work.

WHEN IN FLORIDA DON'T FAIL TO VISIT EAGLE CITY

stances of her coming to him. Fred tells Rose that he and Edith will help her to make a new start in Landerman; but she thanks them and says that she only stopped on the way to the city to thank him for his goodness to her. As Rose stands aside she sees a vision of a beautiful lane (The Dawn Road), which leads to a new life and opposite this a vision of the dancehall. She selects the Dawn Road.

NESTOR.

WHEN THREE IS A CROWD—(Dec. 25).—The cast: The Boy (Neal Burns); The Girl (Billy Rhodes); Lord Herbie Hind (Ed Burns); The Other Girls (Jane Waller and Bess Holbrook).

Neal, while he has the pick of the girls, selects as his choice Billie, a little brunette, who, unfortunately, is engaged to Lord Herbie Hind. At a dance, Neal, in order to escape the attentions of the girls, takes refuge in the conservatory and there meets Billie. Lord Herbie leaves Billie in Neal's charge, while he has a dance with another girl. Neal proceeds to make love to the girl in a violent manner; she likes his lovemaking and, although she is careful to tell him she is engaged, she encourages him to a slight extent.

A short time afterward Lord Herbie's friends give a stag supper in commemoration of his coming marriage. Neal is among those present and indulges unwisely in strong drinks. The toastmaster of the occasion comments Lord Herbie on his decision and says it is the duty of every American to take unto himself a wife. Neal, being slightly intoxicated, takes this advice to include himself and sets out to the house of one of his girl friends. It is a little bit late for a call, but when the girl learns that Neal has come to propose she hurried to meet him. At his proposal they plan next day to marry. Leaving Jane's house, Neal goes to the house of another girl friend, Bess, and, having met her mother, tells her that he has come to propose to Bess. The mother makes record time in getting the girl awake and down to accept the proposal. Neal leaves after making preparations for the marriage next day.

Next morning Neal has a sore head. He receives an early call from Jane, asking him what time he will be over to meet the preacher—he does not remember his actions of the night before—when she tells him they are engaged to be married that day. Bess comes and tells him of his proposal. He almost has heart failure, and in trying to forget his troubles wanders into Billie's house. He tells her his troubles. She is all attired for her marriage with Lord Herbie and sympathizes with Neal in his distressful position. Sympathy leads to love and they forget everyone but each other. Neal tells her the only way out of his troubles would be for her to marry him and they decide on a quick marriage. Of course, the other girls are disappointed and Lord Herbie is heart broken.

SOME CHAPERONE—(Dec. 27).—The cast: The Old Man (Harry Rattenberry); His Daughters (Betty Compson and Ethel Lynn); The Secretary (Eddie Lyons); The Chaperone (Lee Moran).

Eddie and Lee are broke, and cannot pay their board bill. Eddie receives an answer to his application for a secretaryship, which informs him to call and be examined. Eddie calls and finds his prospective employer suffering with the gout, but he makes a good impression and is hired. Among the first things the new secretary notices is that his employer has two fine-looking girls, but Betty is much better looking (to him), and he at once begins to interest her. Betty finds much to interest her in the handsome new secretary, and they become very chummy. Eddie thinks of his partner and decides that he must have a job at the house in order to take Ethel's attention from him and Betty.

Father's gout gets worse and in a moment of peeve he fires his housekeeper. Father then announces that he is going to take a sea voyage for his gout and tells the secretary to go out and get tickets. The girls tell father that they cannot go, as they have no chaperone, and Eddie in a moment of inspiration thinks of Lee and tells father that he knows a nice old lady that will just suit. Lee disguises and is accepted for the place and the party set out on the ship.

Eddie finds cause for discontent as Lee takes charge of the girls, while father insists that the secretary stay and amuse him, but gets back at his partner later. Lee, in order to insure his job, flirts with father, and father then decides to have Lee read to him, giving Eddie charge of the girls. Lee is peeved, but unable to help himself. One day he goes to sleep with his head on father's chest, and in the tossings of his sleep the wig he wears becomes disarranged and comes off. Father wakes, sees a man's head and there is trouble adrift. Lee, not being a helligerent, takes to his heels and father chases him. In the excitement father forgets his gout and Lee is caught. Eddie then explains matters, stating his partner was almost dead with gout and the only thing that would save him was a sea voyage. Father, having a fellow feeling for a gout sufferer, forgives the boys for their deception and that evening as the sun disappears father holds his chair alone while in a quiet corner sit the couples, happy in their new-found love.

GOLD SEAL.

Lord John, brother of the Marquis of Haslemere, receives word from his friend, Carr Price, in New York, that the latter's dramatization of the detective story written by Lord John will not be purchased at all. This decision was brought about by Roger Odell, the millionaire friend of Julius Felborn, who has a strong animus toward Lord John, even though the latter does not know Odell. Odell arrives in London, but returns when he learns that Grace Callender is bound for New York. He books passage on the same steamer. Lord John learns of the hurried departure of Odell and determines to follow.

On the boat Lord John hears Grace say to Odell in reply to his request to marry him. "No, Roger, do you suppose I could let you die like the others." Lord John's curiosity aroused, he opens his journal wherein he keeps notes to help him in his story writing, and sees that Grace had been successively engaged to Perry and Ned Callender-Graham, her cousins, but that in each instance just one week before the wedding each man was found dead in exactly the same place and each with a bunch of keys in his hand. No one could explain the cause of these deaths, and Grace vowed never to become engaged again and expose her affianced husband to the mysterious "curse."

By the employment of an artifice, Lord John becomes acquainted with Odell, from whom he learns that the Marquis broke the heart of Odell's adopted sister, Maida, by canceling her presentation before the court. Lord John promises to atone for his brother's act, and before leaving the ship he makes an appointment with Odell to be in Felborn's private office within twenty-four hours.

With the aid of Carr Price, Lord John is given permission by Yelverton of the police department to go through the records of the Callender-Graham case; and he learns that ten years ago Marian Callender, who was acquainted with Paola Tostini, a famous tenor, and who refused his offer of marriage, was given an inheritance on condition that she remain single and act as guardian over Grace. Tostini lost his voice and it was rumored that Marian shared her fortune with him, but her love for Grace was established when she urged her niece to accept Antonio, brother of Paola, notwithstanding that she would lose her income even in such an event.

In an apartment occupied by a couple known as the Paulings, Lord John discovers a lock from which a needle containing poison projects when the knob is turned. The needle extends just far enough to touch the hand of the person opening the door. Lord John then goes to the country home of the Paulings, but the place is empty. The Lord, however, notices a picture of Marian Callender on the wall.

A futile attempt is made by the Tostinis to steal the Egyptian mummy belonging to Maida Odell. The brothers are confederates of Dr. Rameses, whose present cult is hypnotism and Egyptian occult lore. Dr. Rameses has a twin sister who is the head of an organization known as The Gray Sisterhood, but in reality it is a branch of Dr. Rameses operations. Lord John writes a note to Grace Callender telling her to be at Felborn's office with her aunt in the morning. Marian Callender, the aunt, tells Dr. Rameses of the note and he informs her that she better go, as she cannot avert anything by staying away. He and the Tostinis follow her and stay outside the building. Lord John hides Roger Odell in the safe, and when Callender women appear he tells them that the double murder was carried out by two men and a woman, those interested in keeping Grace unmarried. Paola, a skilled chemist, compounding the poison. A woman was called upon to write the note decoying the brothers to a fiat on the pretext of learning a grave secret. Keys were enclosed for a midnigbt visit. The Callender-Grahams never learned the secret, being poisoned by the deadly needle only to hurry away and drop dead on the street. Marian Callender's hand resting on Grace's chair is so tightly clenched that her glove splits, revealing the poisoned ring which Dr. Rameses had given her. Lord John says: "I accuse the wife of Paola Tostini, still known as Miss Marian Callender."

Marian attempts to get the ring to her lips. Grace struggles to prevent her and Roger bursts out of the safe in time to catch Grace, who is hurled aside. Marian eludes Lord John, and horrifies all by leaping out of the window to the pavement below. Lord John, Roger and Grace hurry out of the building, but find it is too late.

AS THE SHADOWS FALL (Two parts—Dec. 28).—The cast: Marshall Faxon (Herbert Rawlinson); Winnie Perry (Agnes Vernon); Bertha Winston (Dorothy Bebb); Eddie Winston (Barney Furey).

Marshall Faxon is a philanthropist, and in order to carry out his work is in charge of the Municipal Employment Bureau. In this position he comes in contact with the seamy side of life and is thus enabled to give much needed assistance to those who really deserve it. His fiancee, Bertha Winston, is a society girl. She does not like the idea of Faxon associating with what she thinks is the lower class. Winnie Perry, a hardworking stenographer, is persecuted by the attentions of Eddie Winston. She does not know Winston's real name, and in order to force his attentions upon the girl Winston succeeds in having her discharged from different positions. The girl is penniless and is forced to accept Eddie's attentions to a certain extent.

One day a friend gives her a card of the Municipal Employment Bureau. She calls upon Faxon, telling of her trouble and persecution, and he readily agrees to assist her. She is given a note to the manager of a large store, where she secures a position as a stenographer. Eddie has seen her call at the store and that evening as she is leaving he confronts her and threatens to have her discharged unless she will go with him. Desperate for fear she will lose this place, she reluctantly agrees. At the time Winnie had called upon Faxon Bertha was present and had taken a violent dislike to the girl because Faxon had seemed to take an interest in her.

Before the arrival of Eddie that night Winnie regrets her promise and thinks in vain of a solution. She determines to call upon Faxon for help. She calls at his house and is informed he is at the Winston home. Faxon and Bertha are enjoying a quiet evening when the phone rings and Bertha receives the call. She recognizes Winnie's voice and on the spur of the moment, through jealousy, fails to deliver the message to Faxon. However, she leaves the phone off the hook. The girl, thinking Faxon had refused to talk to her, accompanies Eddie to a well known restaurant. Winnie's escort tries to force her to drink, but she flatly refuses. Later on he proposes they go to a hotel and she is forced to accompany him.

A maid at the Winston home finds the receiver down and calls Bertha's attention to it. She flustered, and on the spur of the moment tells Faxon of the girl calling for him and she (Bertha) had forgotten to deliver the mesage. Faxon realizes the girl must have been in trouble to call him that time of night, and hurriedly tries to reach her. The landlady tells him she has gone out with a young man, and seemed very reluctant to go. Faxon secures a detective to institute a search. Winnie and Eddie are traced to the hotel, and Faxon and the officer start upstairs.

Meanwhile, alone in the room with Eddie, Winnie resists all his advances and threatens to jump out of the window if he tries to embrace her. In the scuffle his pocketbook drops to the floor unnoticed. Winnie, preferring death to dishonor, leaps through the window just as the detective and Faxon enter the door. Eddie escapes unnoticed and the two, looking out the window, see the girl's form below. Faxon finds the pocketbook and on learning who the owner is is filled with conflicting emotions. The girl is taken to the hospital and found to be seriously injured. Faxon and the officer return to the Winston home and find Eddie with his sister. He is taken in charge for the murder.

Later Winnie is pronounced on the road to recovery. Through her long illness Bertha has been a friend and comforter. She refuses to make any charge against Eddie, who is sent to Europe in the hope that he will reform. Faxon calls upon Winnie and finds Bertha cheering the girl up. A misunderstanding had naturally arisen between Faxon and Bertha and Winnie realizes that she has unconsciously been to blame for it. She joins their hands and expresses the wish that they be happy once more. Faxon realizes that Bertha can now be really of some help to him and his work. The story ends happily by the two telling Winnie her troubles are now over.

BIG U.

BABBLING TONGUES (Dec. 31). The cast: Martin Lowe (Murdock MacQuarrie); Little Lowe (Edna Payne); Mrs. Haswin (Lydia Yeamans Titus); Ned (Arthur Moon).

Martin Lowe is treasurer of the village lodge. He and his grandniece, Lillie, live at Mrs. Haswell's boarding house. Lillie is in love with Ned, the son of the boarding house mistress. This youth is out of work and has been a little wild lately. Martin knows the young people love each other and believes the boy is good at heart and comforts Ned's mother with faith in the boy. On account of rumors of the village bank's liability the lodge members withdraw their funds and place them in charge of Martin until the next day, when they expect to carry them to another bank. Martin is loath to accept the trust imposed upon him, but the members insist and finally he agrees.

At the boarding house lives Mrs. Haswell's father, an old man. He and Martin are good friends, and when Martin brings the funds home he feels the uneasiness of all and watching, sees Martin hide the funds in a tin box beneath his pillow. Next morning Ned is gone, leaving a note to his mother telling her that he is leaving and expects to return later with money to help her out of her difficulties. Martin finds the money missing and is in despair. Mrs. Haswell shows Martin the note he left, and, against his will, Martin is forced to connect the missing money and the missing youth. The lodge members arrive to take Martin to bank the money and he parries their questions in an effort to gain time. He realizes his responsibility and, going to a loan office, tries to raise funds on his land to meet the shortage, but without avail. The lodge members have seen his suspicious actions and call on him, demanding their funds.

While they are arguing, the youth returns, having failed to get work. Martin takes him to task and the youth asserts his innocence. Martin seeing Lillie still believes in him comes to the same conclusion. Mrs. Haswell's father has heard the argument and leaves for the yard. Martin, looking out of a window, sees the old man dig up a tin box and, tottering, brings it to the house. Martin has resolved to protect the boy at all costs and goes back to defy the lodge members. Old man Haswell comes up with the box and tells them that he feared for the safety of the money and, to aid Martin he stole it from him and hid it. The funds are restored and Martin pleads the boy's forgiveness for his unjust suspicion and turns Ned over to Lillie for comfort. News has arrived of a good position for the boy in a neighboring town and all ends happily.

THE HONOR TO DIE—(Three Parts; Jan. 2).—The cast: Countess Joanna (Rita Jolivet).

The action takes place in the year 1693, when the French were fighting the Duke of Savoy, who was allied with Austria. The Countess Joanna, a beautiful Frenchwoman, is the favorite of the Duke, but in her heart she is still true to France, and is employed as a spy by his Majesty Louis XIV. She is traveling on her way to meet the Duke. At the roadside inn Count Montburn has taken refuge, with his orderly, from a heavy storm. The weather forces the Countess also to break her journey at the inn. Count Montburn, however, who has been ordered to join his regiment, prepares to set out. The Countess asks him to guide her coach safely through the flooded river. He consents, and they ford the river safely. The Countess and Montburn separate to continue their journeys alone.

Arrived at their different destinations, each is sad and regrets the absence of the other. The Countess is distracted from her musing by a mysterious visitor from the King of France. She declares that she is still a Frenchwoman, and undertakes a mission to the camp of Pinerolo, which is being besieged by the French. Her intimacy with the Duke makes it possible for her to enter the camp. Montburn is fighting, his life barely saved by Lapore, and, wounded, he enters the inn. Here he meets Joanna, who bandages his wound. Montburn is ignorant of the spy's mission. He visits her frequently at her lodgings, where she overhears him explaining to some of his men that the ammunition of the allies is nearly exhausted. This is the clue that she has been waiting for. She writes a letter to the French Field Marshal conveying to him the valuable information. Her messenger is sent off with the letter.

In the meantime Lapore has discovered a subterraneous passage which leads from the woods to the cellar of the Royal Inn. He makes plans to explore the wine cellar that night. Montburn pays his evening visit to the Countess. Her messenger has been captured with the French Field Marshal's answer to her information, and the Duke has received the answer instead. But the lovers are in ignorance of their threatening fate. The Duke is on his way to the Royal Inn to capture the treacherous spy and put her to death. Joanna and Montburn hear a noise, they run out of the room. They meet the cook of the inn, and Montburn threatens him. At that moment Lapore comes through the trap door leading to the subterranean passage. Montburn and Joanna bid a hasty farewell, and she goes down the passage with Lapore.

Montburn remains to face the Duke. The Duke shows him the intercepted reply to Joanna's stolen information and accuses him of being the accomplice of a common spy. Montburn, horrified at her treachery, protests his loyalty. "I wanted her life. If she escapes I shall take yours," says the Duke. "You shall have it!" replies Montburn. While Jonna returns to the safety of her chateau in France, the Duke endeavors to escape with his army, but the French attack and surround him. A brave volunteer is needed to break through the enemy's ranks. Montburn offers his life, already forfeit. He charges at the head of his men, and attains the honor to die for his cause. Joanna is left in France with her memories.

is an intensely jealous man, becomes suspicious of his wife and, for some reason, imagines that she is bestowing her affection elsewhere. The wife, before her marriage, was a widow with a grown son, but, fearing her husband's anger, she delays telling of her son, and finally marries without the news becoming known. The wife writes a letter to her son and the husband sees her as she goes to post it. He becomes very angry and thinks his suspicions are justified. A short time later the family returns from an outing and Wilder sees his wife receive a telegram, which causes her much agitation.

The daughter realizes that something is wrong between her father and his wife and begins watching the wife in order to help matters. The telegram was from Mrs. Wilder's son, telling her that he was on his way to visit her and, instead of telling her husband the whole truth, she again hesitates, fearing his anger. She meets the boy in the grounds instead of bringing him into the house, and there is seen by Lillian. Wilder happens to witness the meeting, too, and tries to slip up on them with a pistol. Lillian sees his action and, realizing the tragedy in the air, grabs the cloak from her stepmother and, hastily pushing her aside into the shrubbery, takes her place before the man. When Wilder confronts them he finds his daughter in the man's arms and, while greatly surprised, as he expected to find his wife, tries to make light of the pistol which he has in his hand.

The girl briefly tells her father that this is her sweetheart, but after he leaves the boy's mother tries to thank her, and she turns on her in a fury. The mother then explains that the boy is her son and tells the reason why she has never spoken of it to her husband. And the secret was kept until a short time later, when Lillian speaks to her father of getting married, and tells him that the young man's family will prove satisfactory to him, as he had married the boy's mother. The affair ends happily for all concerned, and the wife resolves never again to keep any secrets from her husband.

THE LITTLE UPSTART—(Three Parts; Dec. 30).—The cast: Nana Clauson (Stella Razeto); Sam Myers (Charles Lyke); William Newell (Mark Fenton); Paul Newell (Fay Belasco); Mrs. Newell (Mrs. Wright); Vera Levin (Laura Oakley).

Nana Clauson searches all the incoming clothes in the laundry in which she works for valuables that may have been overlooked. Sam Myers, her lover, is one of a gang of "near" crooks. One day Nana discovers a note in a pocket of a shirtwaist and that night Sam is shown the note. As the note has been written by a prominent merchant to one of the chorus girls of a popular show, a scheme of blackmail comes to his mind. Nana allows him to take the note, against her own wishes.

In a few days Sam appears resplendent in new clothes, but he keeps the source a secret between him and Mr. Newell, the writer of the note, upon whom the blackmail scheme was a success. He offers Nana many new trinkets, but she refuses to accept the costly clothes he picks out for her. Sam buys a roadster and takes Nana out for many joy rides. Soon she, too, gets the feeling of having money, and at last accepts several beautiful gowns from Sam. One night as she and Sam are returning from an opera they find the car missing, and Sam goes in search of it, leaving her beneath an awning. Paul Newell, seeking shelter from the rain, discovers the girl, and they become acquainted. He invites her to share his taxi home, and she, delighted with the appearance of the young sport, accepts his offer and gives a fictitious address at a fashionable boarding house. In the excitement she unconsciously gave the name of the girl to whom Newell had written the letter, and leaves Paul with the impression that she is some new society bud.

Sam has been unsuccessful in his search, and returns to find the girl gone. He also fails to find her at home, and just as he leaves Nana returns with the excuse that she decided to walk. Sam is suspicious and decides to watch the girl. Paul takes Nana under his charge. Newell, Paul's father, learns that his son is going around with Vera Levin, and suspects at once that Vera has had a hand in the blackmailing. He is afraid to say anything, however, for fear his wife will hear of his little excursions. Paul has the girl accompany him to a fashionable reception, and tries to get his father to meet her; but the old man, still suspicious, makes a hasty exit. Sam finds his suspicions are verified, and, while the girl treats him with all her former friendship, he sees her heart is wrapped up in Paul.

Paul has bought a roadster, which happens to be the one Sam lost (it having been stolen by some of his former companions, repainted and sold)—and Sam thinks that the girl and Paul have double-crossed him. He accordingly puts the detectives on Paul's track, recognizing his car. Paul finally corners his father and forces from him why he will not meet the girl. The son is then told of how the father was blackmailed over a note to Vera Levin. Paul is arrested; and while Sam is "panning" the girl he is recognized by Newell, Sr., who decides that things are not what they seem between the girl and Sam. The whole thing comes out in the paper, and the real Vera, seeing her name being used, investigates. The whole matter is finally straightened out, when Paul takes "the little upstart" to the elder Newell for his blessing.

POWERS.

NATURE'S MONSTROSITIES (Half reel—Dec. 9).—The first wonderful microscopic arrangement which Curator Ditmars invented for filming insects shows us the Peruvian Tegu, a powerful but ugly looking monstrosity, whose principal amusement seems to be the robbing of poultry coops. This particular specimen apparently has had a successful career, for he seems well fed and has difficulty in getting out of his domicile. Next we are shown the Gila Monster, the only one of the lizard tribe which is poisonous, and there are two thousand of them. It is an inhabitant of Arizona and New Mexico, and the one in the Bronx Zoo is one of the very few which have been able to live in Northern latitudes. Another variety of the same family, although looking very much more like a frog, is the Mexican toad. Next we see the Zonue and Aspikey, the latter a resident of African deserts, and one of the strangest freaks of nature.

Another member of the lizard family, which comes from Australia, is called the shingle-backed lizard. Though gifted with a great bump of curiosity, he wisely decides not to bother the gigantic spider. Next in this one-ring circus we are introduced to the clowns, African chameleons, whose physiognomy nature has cast into a form grotesquely resembling the clown's makeup for the sawdust ring. These little animals apparently have had to climb most of their lives, for they are provided with wonderful apparatus for climbing any obstruction which stands in their way.

THE BACHELOR'S CHRISTMAS (Three parts—Dec. 19).—Cast: Hugh Travers (Ben Wilson); Ruth Warren (Dorothy Phillips); Jimmy Warren (Matty Rupert); Toots (Lois Alexander).

Hugh Travers, a wealthy bachelor, unconcernedly signs papers foreclosing a mortgage which his real estate agent presents to him. We next see the old family lawyer in the Warren's handsome drawing room. He tells Ruth, who is 18, and the two kiddies, Jimmy and "Toots," whose respective ages are 8 and 4, when their father died he left nothing and that as Mr. Travers has foreclosed the mortgage on the house and furniture, it will be necessary that they find another home at once. After she is settled with Jimmy and "Toots" in their new tenement house home, Ruth goes out to look for work. After applying at numerous places she finally accepts the only available job open to her, namely, in the chorus. Thus things go along until the day before Christmas.

As soon as Ruth has gone to the matinee Jimmy takes ten cents from the family hoard and buys as many papers as he can with the sum, selling them at a small profit.

The scene now shifts to Hugh's club, where he is enjoying himself with several other members. One of the men suggests that they take in a show, and Fate decrees that they go to the theater where Ruth is playing. Hugh becomes fascinated with Ruth, and he throws her a flower. Hugh's two friends seem a trifle exhilarated and after the show is over they take Hugh's car around to the stage door where they induce the doorkeeper to pass them in. One of the "exhilarated" club men inquires in loud tones which one of the chorus girls will kiss him for a ten-dollar bill. He is almost suffocated in the ensuing rush for the coin, Ruth being the only one who holds back.

Fighting off the willing ones, the club man approaches Ruth and intimates that he prefers to kiss her. Ruth dodges behind Hugh for protection and he saves her. She is then called away by the stage manager.

That night Toots takes the eleven cents he has earned selling papers out to buy some toys. Hugh meets the children on the street and goes home with them. Ruth, meanwhile, has lost her position at the theater. She is alarmed at the children's absence, but is relieved when they come home with Hugh. After greeting the children she recognizes Hugh as the gentleman who had thrown her the flower at the theater. Hugh leaves and Ruth puts the two kiddies to bed. Shortly afterwards Hugh returns with a car, in which are numerous toys and a large Christmas tree. Then he and Ruth proceed to dress the tree and surround it with the toys.

A SCANDAL AT SEA (Dec. 29). The cast: The Captain (Dan Russel); The Masher (Ray Griffith); The Captain's Wife (Louise Orth).

Captain Barnacle, a fiery tempered man, who is master of a steamer, is very jealous of his wife, and when he finds her persecuted by a masher he chastises him and warns him to leave town in one-half hour, under threat of death. The masher takes this very seriously and stows away on a ship. Judge of his horror when he finds he is on the same craft with the captain's wife—she screams and the husband appears, who is the master of the vessel. Imagining the silly dude has followed his beloved wife on board, he makes his life terrible. The crew finally mutiny and scuttle the ship. The dude is hurled into the hold and becomes a hero by stopping the leak in an ingenious manner.

PANTS AND PETTICOATS (Jan. 2).—The cast: Reggie (Reggie Morris); Fat (Fatty Voss); Gertrude (Gertrude Selby); her father (Dave Morris).

The Judge's daughter loves Reggie, who has a rival in Fat. Gertrude does not care at all for the latter, but he refuses to remain away. Reggie almost runs down Gertie's father in his automobile. The father, who is a judge, vows to punish the driver. He does not recognize Reggie, but when he learns he was driving the car he turns him from the house and insists that Gertie marry Fat. Gertie sees Reggie kissing his sister, and not being aware of her identity, she breaks her engagement with him and accepts Fat as her fiance.

Reggie, in order to compromise Fat as a flirt and thus discredit him in Gertie's estimation, dresses as a girl and waits for him. The judge meets the disguised Reggie and is smitten by him. He invites Reggie to dinner and is made to pay a heavy bill. However, his infatuation for the supposed girl is so strong that he overlooks this and writes on his business card an invitation for the "girl" to meet him at his office.

Then Reggie meets Fat and embraces him. Fat is arrested and Gertie repudiates him and Reggie's exultation is changed to dismay as he is arrested for impersonating a woman. He is dragged to the court and he and Fat are brought before the judge, who is none other than Gertie's father. He gives Reggie twenty-five years. Gertie wails and pleads and Reggie produces the judge's card and he dismisses the case and gives Reggie the girl.

JOKER.

LEMONADE AIDS CUPID (Jan. 1).—The cast: Tilly (Lillian Peacock); her pa (Max Asher); her ma (Gale Henry); Jake (Milburn Morante); Hank Boggs (William Franey).

Tilly and Jake, the grocer boy, are in love. Pa has higher ambitions for his daughter, and has decided that none but Hank Boggs can have the girl. Hank makes a call upon his lady love and is warmly welcomed by Pa and Ma. While they are talking a hand-bill is thrown into the room telling of a big entertainment that night. Pa persuades Hank to accompany the family to the sociable. At the hall where the entertainment is to be given a lot of old maids have just finished decorating the place and instruct the janitor to clean up the place. The janitor, who is addicted to liquor, drops a bottle of whiskey into the lemonade made by the old maids.

When Jake learns that Hank is to escort his lady love to the entertainment, thoughts of vengeance fill his mind, and he saws the shafts in such a way that they will break when the family are half way to town. He tells Tilly of this and she promises to be ready when he arrives to escort her. The scheme works fine and Pa's party is stranded. Jake and his rig drive up and he offers Tilly a place in his conveyance. Pa and Ma, too, are allowed to sit in the back, while poor Hank is forced to walk to town. The entertainment is a big success. Pa, being thirsty, has discovered the lemonade. The liquid has a most elegant taste and Pa takes copious draughts. The lemonade makes Pa very happy, and he picks out the prettiest girl in the place and dances with her. She, too, drinks of the lemonade and likewise becomes happy. Shortly afterward Pa and the girl seek seclusion in a quiet spot outside.

Jake and Tilly sneak away from the crowd and hide behind a bush. In the midst of their love making, Jake hears a noise on the other side and, peeping over the bush, sees Pa and the girl making love. He and Tilly confront the old man and threaten to tell Ma if he does not agree to their engagement. When the girl finds out that he is married, she leaves him in disgust. Jake and Tilly are unable to get Pa's consent and hurry inside to break the news to Ma. Hank, meanwhile, has arrived at the hall and finds his way to the lemonade stand. He decides that such a mixture is too good for the old people, and taking the entire bowl, he finds a secluded spot in a shed and forgets everything but the lemonade. Pa, fearing Ma's wrath, hastens in just as Jake starts to tell on him, and hurriedly announces the engagement of his daughter and Jake. Everything ends happily and the last that is seen of Hank he is in a dead stupor.

MUSTANG.

THE CACTUS BLOSSOM (Two Parts—Dec. 31).—The cast: Beulah (Anna Little); Reed Avery (Frank Borzage); Dave Foster (Dick La Reno); Chegup (Chief Big Tree).

Dave Foster and his daughter, Beulah, live alone on a claim which Foster has staked out. Slowly the prospector is coming to realize that his claim is worthless. Then by chance, Foster befriends Chegup, a wandering Indian who has fallen into the hands of the rough element of a nearby cattle town. The Indian shows his gratitude to the man who has befriended him and in return for Foster's kindness, Chegup offers to take him to a secret gulch which he knows to be rich in gold. Father and daughter and the old Indian establish a new home and, true to the Redskin's prediction, Foster strikes it rich. But an unprincipled Mexican follows them. Not far from the new claim is a cow camp of evil reputation. The tough element is led by one Reed Avery, though the real evil genius of the settlement is Duke Wilson, who operates the gambling hall. The Mexican who has followed Foster plays into the hand of Wilson.

Meanwhile the cowboys are excited by the presence of Beulah. All are anxious to make the acquaintance of the young woman whom they have come to call "The Cactus Blossom." Reed Avery is torn by conflicting emotions. His baser impulse emphasizes the alluring charms of the girl while the instinct is deep in his heart to pay, and compel others to pay, the gentle respect rightfully due the young woman. At first, Reed's manner to the girl is the manner he has shown to all women of his acquaintance, but her rebuff of him is so complete that he unconsciously goes to the other extreme and he is rendered dumb and awkward in the presence of "The Cactus Blossom." Beulah laughs and he mistakes her meaning. Thinking the laugh a scornful one he vows that she shall pay for it with a kiss. Beulah handles the crisis well and her actions completely transforms Avery and he becomes the staunch champion of the girl.

Fighting to protect her from his rough companions, Reed is wounded. Lying at death's door, his head propped on his saddle, Beulah kneels beside him and imprints a willing kiss on his lips. Avery has won, but he has also lost for the smile that brightens his face remains transfixed in a mask of death.

elated at his departure for she is of the inconstant type that relishes the attentions of a multitude of men. At present she is infatuated with Claude Hope, a handsome young man whom she has completely captivated. Arrived at his uncle's bedside, Drummond is told that at the old Baron's death the entire estate and all that it embraces, shall descend to him. Also pains are taken to inform him that a psychic spirit which haunts the castle is to be given into the care of the heir. Drummond is a believer in psychic phenomena, and determines at once to test his pet theory that the spirit of one long departed can be summoned from the astral world. His theory is that if a soul in the astral world is in love with a reincarnated being, the astral soul can be summoned and will appear only before the vision of the one reincarnated. Love above the type of the worldly Drummond believes can effect such phenomena.

In his dying breath the old Baron tells Philip of a direct ancestor and a cousin who were sweethearts and whose murder has been a mystery of a century' duration. A painting of the ancestor betrays the likeness to Philip. In the boudoir of the ancestor's sweetheart, Drummond materializes the spirit. The wraith appears before his vision and re-enacts before his gaze the details of the crime itself. Drummond learns from the spirit, Dorothy, that the feudal ancestor was himself in his former visit on earth. He learns, too, that the Claude Hope of today, who is in love with his, Drummond's, wife, was the Sir Berton Gregory of long ago who slew him and later caused the death of Dorothy. Recognizing the astral visitor as his true soul mate, Drummond spends all his waking hours in company with the ethereal visitor.

The aged Baron dies, and Drummond succeeds to the title. Forgetting her infatuation in her greed for the title, Drummond's wife hastens to England. She bursts into the boudoir where Drummond holds communion with the ethereal Dorothy. She finds her husband dead. Had Drummond established his theory or is the whole affair a chimera of the mind? That is the question.

BEAUTY.

KIDDUS, KIDDS AND KIDDO (Dec. 28).—The cast: Kiddus (John Sheehan); Kitty Kidd (Carol Halloway); Mr. Kidd (John Steppling); Kiddo (Clifford Callis).

The Kidds are blessed with Kiddo, a precocious youngster who relieves the monotony of the Kidd home by carelessly throwing about father's loaded revolver, yanking the plumes from mother's imported hat, breaking bric-a-brac and other fascinating indoor activities. Kiddus, a young and handsome bachelor, goes out in search of a shave, while Kidd, the proud father, seeks a haircut. Meanwhile Kiddo disappears and Kitty Kidd sallies forth in search of him. Kiddo, fired with the zeal of adventure, comes across Kiddus' auto, climbs in under the robe in the back seat.

Kiddus emerges from the barber shop as Kitty Kidd comes wailing down the street hunting for her Kiddo. Sympathetic Kiddus tries to comfort her and thereby incurs the hostility of Kidd, who rushes from the tonsorial parlor in a state of semi-shampoo and ferociously attacks Kiddus with his storm stick. The diplomatic Kiddus pacifies the pair and, fired with ambition to aid the charming Kitty Kidd, he starts on a hunt for Kiddo.

All kids look alike to Kiddus and he collects a heterogeneous mass of squirming youngsters, and in so doing is pursued by sundry fathers, mothers, maids and policemen. He stops at his home to get his gun. Kiddo crawls out from in hiding, enters the house and hides in the closet. Then the irate Kidds arrive and find their dimpled darling, who is in the act of cutting up books, demolishing lamps and statues, and so on ad lib. Kidd is restrained from killing Kiddus. Kiddus attempts to square himself by buying off the angry mob, but he is left trembling under a deep, dark cloud of police suspicion.

SETTLED OUT OF COURT (Jan. 1).—The cast: Darby (William Carroll); Joan (Lucille Ward); their son (Frank Borzage).

Old Darby and Joan, after sixty years of married life, reach the conclusion that they "jess can't get along" and together they go in search of a divorce. Joan alleges that Darby persists in smoking a foul smelling cob pipe. Darby countercharges that Joan insists he dress up "even if they ain't no company." It's a case of "draw up your papers lawyer" as the two, wrangling, leave the attorney's office.

Soon after a stranger enters and asks for old Darby and Joan. The lawyer vouchsafes the information that the two are about to be divorced. The stranger proves to be the son of the aged couple, returned from a life of wandering. To the lawyer he relates how his boyhood fondness for yellow-backed novels and a longing for the wild and woolly West "where the Redskins bite the dust" led him to run away from home. He had resolved never to return, but as the years sped on, the young man who had struck it rich, fearing that his parents might be in need, had returned to seek the shelter of the parental roof once more.

Darby and Joan return to the lawyer's office to sign the papers. The attorney informs them that the young stranger is his partner who will handle their case. The young man tactfully strikes a sympathetic chord when he asks if the two have children. He continues in this strain and tearfully old Darby and Joan decide that they don't need a divorce. "What we need," said Darby, "is jess a little horse sense," and arm in arm the aged couple leave for their home. Joan presents Darby with a new corn cob pipe and Darby appears "all dressed up even if they ain't no company." Just then the young "lawyer" drops in—their runaway boy returned home.

AMERICAN.

THE TRAGIC CIRCLE (Two Parts—Dec. 27).—The cast: Cater Clifton (Harold Lockwood); Celia (May Allison); Dr. Morton (William Stowell); Alan James (Ashton Dearholt).

Cater Clifton, an able young writer, walking along the beach, comes upon a young man about to commit suicide. Clifton prevails upon the young fellow to go with him to his home. In Clifton's library the young man pours out his story. He has been spurned by the girl he loves. Life is no longer worth living and hence his attempt to end an unhappy existence. Clifton listens as the young man talks and then he in turn tells a story.

Madge Morton, a clever and accomplished young woman, is bored with her doctor husband, who is utterly engrossed in his work. Clifton had loved her when she was a girl. He comes back and Madge tells him of her unhappiness and its cause. Dr. Morton's young cousin, Alan James, is beset with heart trouble. He comes to the home of Dr. Morton in search of health. He becomes infatuated with Madge, though younger than she. The Mortons go to their place by the sea and Madge and the boy are thrown more and more together. Alan makes love to Madge and implores her to flee with him. She refuses, though refusal is hard, but she invites Clifton to come and visit them, and for Alan she invites Celia, whose girlish sweetness Madge thinks Alan soon will capitulate.

Celia falls in love with Clifton, who has given his heart long ago to the unsuspecting Madge. Alan, as was expetced, promptly falls in love with Celia. His heart gives way and he is forced to take to his bed. He asks that Celia read to him. She does so and he proposes marriage. Celia cowers back, covers her face and sobs out her refusal. The excitement is too much for Alan, whose weak heart cannot stand the strain. He gasps for breath and falls back, dead.

Clifton finishes his story with a vision of the characters: the woman, bored and unhappy; the man, lonely and sad; the girl, sobbing her heart out in secret; the lover, dead. Only Peter, the man who put work first in his life, has found content.

The young man thanks Clifton for the story and departs declaring that all his energies henceforth will be devoted to work. Clifton, as the young man leaves, smiles whimsically. The door of his study opens and in comes Celia. The long sleeve of her neglige gown sweeps from its stand, the vase with which Clifton had toyed as he talked to the would-be suicide. She stoops to pick up the fragments, a rueful expression on her face. Clifton stops her. "Don't bother, dear. You've broken my Tragic Circle about which I've been inventing a woeful story for the good of a lovesick young man."

THE MENDER (Dec. 31).—The cast: The Mender (William Carroll); the man (E. Forrest Taylor); the woman (Helene Rosson); the child (Rosemary MacMakln).

The Mender lives in a world all his own, which he himself has created with his high ideals. No urchin passes him unobserved and no form of life is to lowly for the love of this gentleman.

Baby Bess lives in a lonely world all her own—a world of loveless childhood. But little sunshine crosses her tiny horizon. Wealth and dissatisfaction together crowd from the baby soul, the rightful heritage of parental affection.

The Mender, coming upon the sobbing little Bess in the garden path, presents her with a tiny puppy. In gratitude the child invites the old man to her home. There the Mender learns the true state of affairs—the child's parents are on the eve of divorce. The Mender attempts to reconcile them, but his efforts are useless. He leaves with a heavy heart and returns to his lonely home and there conceives the idea of reuniting the parents through their mutual love for their only child.

He returns and kidnaps Baby Bess, taking only the kindly cook into his confidence. The parents discover the loss of the child and as days pass with no word from the little one, the bond of common sympathy between the two is drawn tighter. Day after day the love of the husband and wife grows greater until the cook, who has watched from a secret corner, finally reports to the Mender that his scheme has proved a success. Bess is returned and her presence marks the dawn of a richer and fuller love of husband and wife, and of both for their daughter.

The old Mender, his face wreathed in smiles, resumes his itinerant tinkering.

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURE.

THE DEATHLOCK (Five Parts—Dec. 30).—The cast: Dal Darous (Fred J. Butler); Nell, his foster daughter (Wilma Wilkie) Ford Worthing, her lover (David W. Butler); Jerry (Patrick Dempsey); "Scotch Mack" (Graham Pettie).

Dal Darous, a Westerner, adopts the baby daughter of homesteaders who have been killed by the Indians. Darous discovers the father of the child dead, his legs twisted about the trunk of a slender tree and securely knotted in the fatal 'deathlock" of the Apaches.

Fourteen years later finds Darous a notorious gambler, and his foster daughter, Nell, trained to act as her father's decoy. She helps him in his cheating game by standing just behind the shoulder of the victim and holding a small mirror at such an angle that the gambler is able to see reflected in it his opponent's cards. On board a steamer to the Klondyke, Darous fleeces of a large sum of money Ford Worthing, a young chap on his way to the gold country. The money has been confided to Ford by his uncle, and in desperation at having betrayed his trust, Worthing attempts to blow out his brains. He is standing alone in a deserted corner of the deck, with the barrel of a gun pressed to his temple, when a window in the cabin behind him is steathily opened, and a hand snatches the weapon away.

Darous and Nell are entrapped by Jerry, a Westerner, who has constituted himself the friend and guardian of Dixie Ward, a young widow, going to claim her late husband's gold mine in Alaska. Darous also has an eye on Dixie's property. "Scotch Mac," an old pal of his, has tipped him off, and the gambler is making this expedition to the Klondyke purposely to buncoe the young widow out of the mine.

Since cheating at cards means death, the gambler's daughter sets fire to the ship, and a hasty landing is effetced some ten miles from Dawson. In the confusion and excitement, Nell and her father escape. Later, they meet Ford and Jerry at the Arctic Saloon in Dawson. A Canadian, bringing plans of the mine to Dixie, is intercepted by the gambler and robbed of his papers. Nell finds Darous on the point of going to claim the property before the widow's friends can find the place. Nell's conscience recently has been stirred by her friendship with Dixie's little girl, and by the strange, new feeling she secretly entertains for Ford. She begs her father not to carry out his scheme. He offers her her choice between holding her tongue or jeopardizing the life of Worthing. She promises to be silent, and the gambler gives his oath not to shoot Ford.

A few hours later, Ford discovers the absence of Darous. He guesses from Nell's silence the rest. Fearing punishment for the girl as an accomplice, he decides to stop Darous at all hazards and protect the widow's claim. Ford gives chase with the fleetest dog team in the world. Nell determines to overtake Ford and, despite her promise, to warn him. She follows on skees. Meanwhile, the gambler has discovered Ford on his tracks. Remembering his oath to Nell, he refrains from shooting the young man, but resorts to the Apache deathlock as a more terrible means of having his longed-for revenge. Ford, half insane from the cold, and from many nights of fighting off hungry wolves, is found and rescued by Nell. They realize that they love one another, and Ford learns that it was she who saved him from blowing out his brains on the steamer. Days later, the gambler is found dead of the snow-madness, and torn by his dogs whom he had abused until they turned upon their master. Ford and Nell are free to begin a new life together. Dixie and Jerry marry, and they divide the mine with Ford and his bride.

CUB.

HEARTS AND CLUBS (Dec. 24).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Shorty (George George); Lewis Hayden (Jefferson Osborne); Father (Louis FitzRoy); Madge (Belle Bennett); Housekeeper (Janet Sully); Bill (Gordon MacGregor); Sheriff (Arthur Munns); Mounted Policeman (William Jackson).

Jerry again has the police on his trail and wanders through the park. Here he sees a mounted policeman strolling along with his arm around a girl's waist and leading his horse. Jerry cuts the bridle reins, mounts and rides off, the policeman being too engrossed to discover his loss until some time later. Shorty and Madge are lovers. Shorty leaves a note for Madge in their private 'postoffice" in a big tree at the side of the road, asking her to meet him that evening. She writes a note consenting. This little exchange of notes is witnessed by Lewis Hayden, Madge's father's favorite for his daughter's hand. He purloins the note left by Shorty and takes it to Madge's father. Jerry also has seen the entire proceeding and, impelled by curiosity, ascertains the cause for the state of ecstasy and surprise of the young people just as Shorty comes up. A wordy battle between Shorty and Jerry ensues, but is smoothed over when Jerry explains Hayden's visit, and the two become friends.

At home Hayden shows Father the note, who calls Madge and insists that she marry his choice. Madge creates a rumpus. Father and Hayden decide to punish Shorty, whom they have never seen, but for whom they mistake Jerry. They gloat over the surmised fact that he is only "four feet tall and easily licked." Madge informs Shorty of her father's plans and also of his mistaking Jerry for Shorty. The friends decide that they will go forward, anyway, and meet the foe. At the trysting place Shorty dons Jerry's clothes and, after sending Jerry up into the tree, Shorty kneels alongside to appear the height of Jerry. Father and Hayden arrive with clubs to pounce on him. But Shorty is too quick. He rises like a shot to his full six feet two, grabs each by the hair, batters their heads together and sends them off.

The next morning Father is up early, and so are Shorty and Jerry. In order to insure against Madge's escape Father nails strips of lumber across her window. Resourceful Jerry suggests to Shorty that he (Jerry) dress to represent Madge, tell Father that daughter is to be married, and while Jerry rides away dressed as Madge Father will follow, and Shorty and Madge can have the marriage ceremony performed during his absence. The scheme is carried out as planned. After a hard chase Father catches up with Jerry (whom he supposes to be Madge), takes her home, only to find Madge there with Shorty, just married. A disentanglement of all difficulties, wherein the policeman gets back his horse, Madge is forgiven and Shorty accepted as a son-in-law closes the picture.

JERRY'S REVENGE (Dec. 31).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Lieut. Smith (George George); Professor Knutt (Louis FitzRoy); Prince Bushmund (Robert Kenyon); Father (Jefferson Osborne); Mother (Janet Sully); Daughter Amy (Belle Bennett).

Jerry and his sweetheart, Amy, secure a vantage point in order to view a passing military parade. Amy, quite a flirt, is attracted by a first lieutenant and waves to him, but not without notice of the jealous eyes of Jerry. They have a wordy quarrel, long drawn out and extending until after the ending and disbursing of the parade and which leads to Amy accepting the company of the lieutenant (met during their later stroll), and the dismissing of Jerry in a very unceremonious manner. Injury is thus added to insult, by the lieutenant kicking Jerry out of the way, so he has just cause for revenge. Walking along, planning dire punishment for the lieutenant, Jerry comes up to the residence of Professor Knutt, a hypnotist, who places him under his spell, makes him do most ridiculous things and tells him what he has been doing when he returns to consciousness. Jerry is astonished, and inquires how the Professor does it. He is told it is the ring the Professor wears that is the influence. Jerry gets the ring in his own inimical way and without expense.

With the ring on his finger, Jerry accomplishes much to his own amusement before entering on the program he had in mind when he determines to secure it. He makes passes on a couple of cops and gets them into a fight; he makes a cigar store clerk give him a bundle of bank notes in change for a mythical small coin; casts his spell over the lieutenant, who commits breaches of the peace that land him in jail; intercepts a prince as he steps out of his equipage to make a call on his sweetheart's father and here he appropriates the prince's raiment and, using the prince as a servant, is admitted as the dignitary. As they enter Jerry pulls the prince's only covering off him, disclosing him as sans breeches and underwear, but wearing a corset and hightop boots. Such a costume at a reception riles Father, who uses a double-barreled shotgun to expedite the nondescript's exit. Jerry, alarmed at the belligerent action of Father toward a counterfeit, also runs off, fearing his duplicity may be discovered, but this act proves his undoing, for later he is sought for by the Professor, with the ald of officers, to punish him for taking forcible possesion of the Professor's magic ring. The result is that Jerry's revenge proves a boomerang when he is locked up in the same cell with the lieutenant and the rightful prince.

THE HOMESTEADER—(Two Parts—Jan. 6).—The cast: Carey Graves (Margaret Gibson); Shirley Wells (John Oaker); Hamilton Osborne (Roy Watson); Carey's mother (Jane Keckley).

Carey Graves, a school teacher, is advised to take her semi-invalid mother to another climate for the benefit of her health. Accordingly, she goes west, where she plans to homestead a Government claim, build a shack on it, and develop it into a ranch of her own, while she gives her mother the benefit of the climate and a chance for health. About the same time Shirley Wells, a wealthy young clubman from Boston, weary of conventional life, also goes west, accidentally selecting the same spot chosen by Carey.

The place selected is in the region around Rock Crest, Nev. Hamilton Osborne, a wealthy ranch owner and a domineering sort of man, rules over the region. He looks upon women as playthings, and immediately upon the arrival of Carey attempts to work his way into her good graces. His manner is so insulting that Wells steps in to protect the girl. The result is a spirit of enmity between the two men. Carey settles upon a parcel of land owned by the Government, but used by Osborne for cattle grazing. Osborne resents what he pleases to term an intrusion and orders Carey off. Carey drives him away with a rifle.

In the meantime Wells has done everything in his power to make Carey and her mother comfortable and a bond of interest springs up between them. Osborne notes the turn of events with growing jealousy and decides to take drastic action to turn things in his favor. One day while strolling among the foothills Carey discovers a puma lair. She fondles the cubs playfully. Osborne, who had been following her, seizes this opportunity. Carey's screams attract the attention of Wells, who is out puma hunting. He hurries to the scene, but before he can intercept the puma, which he had been hunting, leaps towards the lair, lands upon and seriously injures Osborne. Wells raises his gun, fires and kills the puma before it can attack Carey.

Carey and Wells take Osborne to a near-by hut and gradually nurse him back to health. He is so grateful to Carey for her assistance and so charmed by her treatment that he offers to marry her, but she tells him that she loves Wells. Osborne overcomes his natural jealousy, calls Wells, and repeats Carey's declaration. Wells proposes to Carey, is accepted, and Osborne, as a wedding gift, offers to set them up for life. Wells, however, refuses the kindness and then reveals his identity, adding that he is wealthy and needs no help. The story then fades out into a picture of happiness.

RIALTO STAR FEATURE

A PRINCE OF YESTERDAY (Three Parts—Dec. 29).—The Prince of Balanza is the young ruler of a principality of contented subjects. Since the Prince is now twenty years of age, his councillors wish him to marry. A Princess of a neighboring realm is suggested, but the Prince will not consider a young woman whom he has never seen. Not even yet in love with love, the Prince persuades his friend and adviser, the Duke of Perrettino, to take him in search of adventure to foreign lands. The Duke lays his plans to bring about the marriage on which the councillors have set their hearts. The Prince in his travels comes at last to the walls of the Convent of Palladio. Gazing upon a casement, he sees framed there, the most beautiful young woman he has ever beheld in all his life.

The Prince of Ballanza breaks a red rose from a bush and throws it to the divinity. He is further encouraged to see that she hides the flower next her heart. Little does the youth know that the lady is the Princess of Cellini, the one whom his state councillors wish him to marry. The crafty Duke persuades the convent gardener to take the young Prince, who remains incognito, as his assistant. This brings him into his lady's presence. She does not spurn the admiration of the gardener's handsome assistant, since she does not know of her own high station in life.

Notes pass between the two. When at last the Princess brings herself to confess that she loves him, she learns immediately after leaving the note at the accustomed hiding place, that she is a lady of high degree. At the same time the Mother Superior tells her that affairs of state require her immediate presence at Cellini. Knowing something of royal customs, the Princess recognizes sadly that she must give up the youth who has won her heart. Accordingly she leaves a second note for him, saying that they will never meet again, as she is going into a far country. The Duke follows to Cellini with the Prince. The lady has already refused the Duke of Florenze, who has asked her hand in marriage, and is overjoyed to find her friend of the convent garden has followed her to Cellini.

Willing to abjure her rank for love, the Princess listens to his story, still unconscious of the fact that he is the Prince of Ballanza. Prompted by the Duke, the Prince elopes with the Princess, and all ends happily.

VOGUE.

SAMMY'S SCANDALOUS SCHEME (Dec. 27).—The cast: Sammy Burns (by Himself); Dottie (Dot Farley).

Sammy is in love with Dottie, but she does not care for him. Instead she is head over heels in love with a photoplay hero—none other than His Honor, Charley. Sammy calls and is told by Dottie's mother that the girl has gone to a picture show. Sammy goes in search of his lady fair, and finds her rhapsodizing before a poster bearing the well-known likeness of her idol. Dottie permits Sammy to escort her home. Then she hurries to her room and writes two letters—one is to Sammy Burns, in which she tells him that hereafter she and he are nothing to each other—the other, she pens to Charley, inviting him to call the following evening. Her mind abstracted by thoughts of love for Charley Dottie, encloses Charley's letter in Sammy's envelope and vice versa.

Sammy receives the letter which Charley should have had. Then and there he concocts his scandalous scheme. Procuring a pair of trousers four times too large, a pair of flat-boat shoes, the inevitable hat and also inevitable cane, Sammy proceeds to disguise himself. Enroute to Dottie's home, Sammy is universally mistaken for Charley. Arriving at Dottie's home, she goes into ecstasies over her famous visitor but after a few famous antics, father and mother are not so keen for Dottie's caller. As Sammy's visit progresses, Dottie finds her love for Charley waning, aided and abetted by the sight of the Honorable "Charles" doing a giant swing from the parlor chandelier.

When the family hears the caller gurgling his soup, it becomes a case of enough is too much, but ere the disguised Sammy departs, he leaves Dottie and father and mother buried beneath a mass of fallen plaster as the result of a farewell acrobatic antic on the chandelier. The doctor arrives and all are restored to consciousness. The erstwhile visitor is branded as unspeakable. Then Sammy, undisguised, pays Dottie a call. The terrible story of what has happened is poured into his ears. Sammy is horror-stricken. With a wink of triumph he gathers the girl in his arms, and henceforth Sammy is the favored suitor.

NOVELTY.

THE FIDDLERS (Dec. 20).—Hans is kicked out of the German band. Meanwhile, the Sausage King, who is bringing out his young daughter, Lina, that evening, is on tenterhooks because the world-famous violinist has failed to arrive. Hans stumbles up the steps of the mansion. He is dragged indoors and presently finds himself the lion of the occasion. Ravenously hungry, Hans snatches the refreshments in fistfuls and jams them down his throat. The Sausage King begs to remind his friends that the man is "Eccentric, you know. Oh, very!" Lina already has lost her heart to the temperamental youth, and when he is challenged by Count Wanterpence to a duel there is terrible excitement at the coming-out ball of the daughter of the Sausage King. Hans is laid low. He recuperates, however. Then the unsuspecting Count gets his. Lina is in ecstasies. Meanwhile the arrival of the real violinist promises to expose the ex-musician of the German band. But the Sausage King is of no mind to have the sensation of the evening spoiled in the society column. So he buys off the great Strensky with a check for $500. Hans and Lina plight their troth and mamma rejoices.

THE INNOCENT SANDWICH MAN (Dec. 22).—Felix Fillander and Simon Morse are rival inventors. Felix invents a vocometer to register the number of words his wife is able to articulate in one minute. He puts it over the dining-room door, when there is company at dinner—and when the loquacious Mrs. Felix discovers her husband's trick she wags her nimble tongue until he flees the house. Fillander chances to see a sandwich sign man on the street. The back of the sandwich sign is too tempting to be resisted. So Felix takes out his draughtsman crayons and begins to draw on the sandwich sign a model of his next invention. He is deeply absorbed when Simon Morse happens along.

Simon awaits his opportunity, and as soon as his rival is out of sight, proceeds to erase parts of the design and substitute certain improvements of his own. The back of the sign originally reads to the effect that on that day only a certain restaurant keeper is offering a twenty-five cent luncheon free with every 3 for 50c cigars purchased in his establishment. When the inventors get through with it, it announces that the cafe manager is giving away twenty-five cents with every 3 for 50c cigars. The people swarm after the sandwich man. But delight turns to rage when the crowd demands that mein host shall "come on with those quarters."

At last the sandwich man is dragged in by the excited multitude to prove their point. The rear sign is convincing, but the front sign remains as originally written. The proprietor is obliged to carry the dispute to court. There it is agreed that the rear sign is the one which counts. So, unconsciously, the two inventors benefit the masses, who reap a harvest of twenty-five cent pieces.

THE GIRL AND THE GAME (Mutual Special Feature—Episode No. 1, "Helen's Race With Death"—Two Parts—Dec. 27) The cast: Helen (Helen Holmes); Seagrue (George McDaniel); Storm (Leo Maloney); Rhinelander (J. L. Farley); "Spike" (J. P. McGowan).

Helen Holmes, age three, accompanies her father, General Holmes, president of the C. W. R. R., to the beach depot each morning as he departs for his office. The nurse takes her to the park, and while her erstwhile guardian chats with the family chauffeur Helen forms a chance acquaintance with a stray dog. The pup, unused to affection, runs away and Helen goes in pursuit. Nearby is a miniature railroad and Storm, an orphan newsboy, seeking to learn the mysteries of the small engine, has struck up an acquaintance with the engineer. Storm is ambitious; he has dreams of operating a real locomotive when he grows up.

The miniature train pulls out with its load of passengers. The pup, with Helen in close pursuit, runs in front of the train. Throwing aside his newspapers, Storm dashes forward and, seizing Helen, throws her out of harm's way. Helen likes her rescuer and he tells her of his great ambition—to run a big locomotive just like his father before an accident ended his life. Meantime the nurse and chauffeur gather Helen up and she waves a farewell to her new found friend.

The years roll by. Helen, raised in luxury, has developed into a beautiful young girl, in whom is centered all her father's affections. She receives a message from her father, telling her to meet him on No. 19, and that he is bringing home his nephew and a friend of the latter's. After years of disappointments and hard work, Storm has become a fireman on the road presided over by General Holmes. On this day he pulls out on No. 245 over the Black Rock Pass. Half way over the grade the air pump on his engine breaks. The long train is brought to a stop. Connecting up an emergency telephone, the conductor, talking to the despatcher, receives orders to "bring on train by hand brakes."

With the crew on decks, No. 245 is again in motion. Passing the summit, the crew realizes it can no longer control the long drag of cars, for the freight's speed has put it on the schedule of No. 19, the passenger aboard of which is General Holmes. The crew decides to

INDUSTRIAL MOVING PICTURE COMPANY

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER, President

223-233 West Erie Street - - Chicago

In the moving picture industry the difference between success and failure is quite often the identical difference between wisdom and foolishness in the expenditure of an advertising appropriation.

Circulation Value

THIS issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, though it carries our Christmas greeting to the trade, is none other than a regular number. We have not solicited an extra line of copy of any kind. Nevertheless this issue, consisting of 202 pages, carries 92 full pages of advertising.

Our last number, bearing date of December 18th, consisted of one hundred and ninety-eight pages in all, of which ninety-seven pages were advertising. We could go back for any length of time and still show that we have carried more paid Moving Picture advertising, by many pages, than any other medium in this field.

Every inch of advertising space that we carry, is carried for one particular reason—our bonafide and unapproachable circulation is the reason.

When our representatives solicit accounts, they do not try to sell space on extended open account, nor do they offer free editorial space for advertising. The Editorial and Advertising departments of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD are conducted absolutely separate and apart from each other. At no time or in any way has one department been subsidized by the other.

Our advertising space has always been sold entirely on its merits. Our steadily increasing circulation, which is now well past the EIGHTEEN THOUSAND mark, sells this space for the publication, and has always produced unequalled results for those who have taken advantage of it.

If you have any article at all to market, whether it be pictures or accessories, they can be sold through the advertising columns of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, the market place of the Film Industry. Convince yourself of the truth of this statement. TRY IT.

The one sure thing when circulation is under discussion is expressed in FIGURES THAT DON'T LIE. This indisputable fact is kept constantly in mind in the conduct of the Moving Picture World.

cut off the caboose and escape, but Storm doggedly insists on sticking to the engine. Writing a message on a white signal flag and wrapping it around a wrench, the conductor hurls it through the window of the first telegraph office they pass. The operator wires news of the runaway to the next station, but it is too late—No. 19 has left. This put the passenger in the path of the runaway. Helen learns of the danger from the operator, where she is waiting.

She rushes out and mounts her pony and rides for the bridge, but reaches it just as it is raised to permit the passage of a battleship. Digging her spurs into her mount, she makes a wild attempt to reach it, but fails. Into the river go horse and rider. As she rises to the surface Helen strikes out for the opposite shore. The two trains are drawing closer together. Arrived on shore, Helen mounts her pony and resumes her race with death. Down the track she gallops to a switch, the lock of which she breaks with a stone. Seizing the lever, she throws the switch as the head end of the freight thunders into the passing track. The hind end just clears the switch as the passenger tears by. At the far end of the passing track three box cars are standing. As Storm, still at his post, see the impending collision he jumps to safety. Helen rushes forward and picks up the gallant fireman. She has repaid her debt to her newsboy hero.

THANHOUSER.

AMBITION (Three parts—Dec. 21).—The cast: Youth (Gladys Hulette); Ambition (Howard M. Mitchell); Friendship (Morris Foster); Aristocracy (Morgan Jones).

William MacAlpin is a young Westerner whose powers in tracking down a notorious bandit and, single-handed, hurling him to his death down a steep cliff, has put him in the sheriff's office. MacAlpin believes in self-advertising. He writes the thrilling story of the bandit incident for a New York newspaper. On the strength of the hit he makes, he later is given an influential position on the paper. Here he develops into an unscrupulous office seeker who uses his position to push his own interests. He meets Carolyn Bartlett, the daughter of an eminent financier, and by sheer force of personality wins her promise to become his wife.

Carolyn's father's bank falls into difficulties. Bartlett is convinced that in a short time he can restore it to a firm footing. While he is engaged, however, in preserving the savings of hundreds of poor people, his future son-in-law learns of the state of affairs. MacAlpin deliberately publishes the story, causing Bartlett's ruin, but winning for himself the position he has coveted at the head of his paper. Bartlett is saved from taking his life by Wallace Holmes. Holmes loves Carolyn, but she has rejected him for MacAlpin. Now she learns the real character of each of the young men. She breaks her engagement to MacAlpin and gives her promise to Holmes.

"The Man of Ambition" is going up higher every day. He has lost love, and to all the finer things of life his nature has become completely calloused. But he is still climbing.

RELIANCE.

THE OPAL PIN (Two parts—Dec. 19).—The cast: Remar (A. D. Sears); Phillip Hanson (Alfred Paget); Reginald Mason (Jack Brammell); Mrs. Mason (Irene Hunt); Mrs. Hanson (Margie Wilson).

Ed Mason, manager of J. Jacard & Son, jewelers, New York City, and his wife are spending their vacation at the beach. News has been received through the paper of the recent robbery of the great Kaffire Diamond. Also of its recovery by Remar, the great detective. Mason and Jim Hanson, the proprietor of the Ocean View Hotel, are seen in a room talking over the possibilities of Mason stealing the Kaffire stone. Mason's wife in the next room overhears the plot. Later Mason's wife reproaches him and a quarrel ensues, which is overheard by several guests. Late that night Mason's wife is seated at a window. She sees Hanson strolling up and down in a lonely part of the grounds. Slipping on a cape she joins him and pleads with him not to encourage her husband. He only laughs at her. She then threatens to expose them to the police. Mason's wife turns to leave Hanson, who detains her, and a struggle takes place. O'Nell, the night watchman, on hearing a scream, stops and listens. Out from behind some trees he sees a man leave and run to the rear of the hotel.

The next morning the body of Mason's wife is found. Hanson, hearing this, 'phones to Remar to clear the mystery. Remar arrives in time to hear the Coroner pronounce "Death from natural cause, heart failure." Remar, seeing the expression on the woman's face, contradicts the Coroner's verdict and says: "She died a violent death; I will examine the body." Mason, the dead woman's husband, appears to all present the guilty man. Remar points to the head of a short hatpin imbedded in the back of the neck of the body, penetrating the brain. Remar is then shown to the seat of the crime. Later, when no one is near, Remar is seen making a plaster cast of the footprint in the shrubbery where the body was found. In the meantime Hanson's wife, posing as Miss Elenor Brown, a guest of the hotel, is seen in very earnest conversation with Mason and Hanson. Remar on his way to the hotel unnoticed by them overhears their conversation. Late that night Mason and Miss Brown leave in a machine. Remar follows at a safe distance.

At a short distance from "Jacard & Sons" Mason stops his car. He walks to the store, and Mason, knowing the road is clear, exits from his car and enters. Knowing just where the stone is kept, he opens the safe, takes the Kaffire Diamond and leaves. Remar knowing a short cut to the beach, and in order to avoid suspicion, he parks his car at a different garage, enters the hotel and goes to his room unseen. Shortly after his arrival, Mason and Brown return, going to Hanson's room. Remar, through the aid of a fire escape, is able to look into Hanson's room and watch the proceedings. Remar returns to his room and when all is quiet leaves with the plaster of the footprint. Going to the hall above he tries all shoes which have been left out to be shined. The shoes which have been left out by Hanson fit the cast. Remar returns to his room.

Miss Brown had seen Remar fitting the shoes with his plaster cast. She notifies Hanson and they make a hurried departure from the hotel. But they are seen by Remar, who immediately starts in pursuit. Catching up with the fugitives, Remar leaps from his car into that driven by criminals and orders them to stop at the point of a revolver. Hanson knocks the revolver from the detective's hand and stabs him. He falls to the ground unconscious, where he is found by his assistant, who had been summoned to report at the Ocean View Hotel. Remar gains his senses, and the two detectives are soon on the trail of the fleeing burglars and murderers. They are caught at the depot and the stolen gem is returned to its rightful owner.

THE DECOY (Two parts—Dec. 26).—The cast: Fred Jones (Jack Brammall); Elsie (Bessie Buskirk); Mary Wilson (Irene Hunt); Ben Hopkins (Alfred Paget).

Fred Jones, advertising solicitor, is living a fast life. His girl is spending more money than Fred can stand. He is deep in debt. While at Kirk Mfg. Co. he overhears the pay clerk 'phoning to the bank to have money ready for the pay roll next day at 11 o'clock. He returns to his office. Advertising men return from their day's work and check in. The men are dressed in overalls, carrying a bag in which they carry their advertising cards, also a long-handle hammer. One of the clerks in making out his report is short a slip, and as clerk behind desk is busy, he reaches through pigeon hole and pulls the pad towards him with the hammer. Fred sees this.

Next day Fred puts overalls over clothes, and starts out disguised as Bill, the card man. He hangs around the neighborhood of the bank about the time he thinks bank clerk will be making up pay roll. He enters bank. A few people are busy making out deposit slips—he watches his chance. The bank clerk is stacking up money on desk behind cage. As he turns to go back to vault Fred steps up to window, shoves hammer through hole, rakes money in bag and exits. The clerk gives the alarm. Fred has reached the alley in back of bank. Seeing ash cans he takes off overalls and cap and discards them in can, placing the money under his coat and disappears down the alley.

Later the janitor finds the overalls, cap, bag of cards and hammer. Remembering the clerk saying that Bill, the card man, was in the bank, he reports his find to president, who 'phones detective, who takes charge of same. Going in alley where cans are, he finds button from man's vest. The overalls and hammer are recognized as John Doe's, but he has an alibi which clears him. Next day a detective goes and asks to look over payroll and finds Fred only makes $20 a week. He starts on trail of Fred. The tailor in cleaning and pressing Fred's suit sees button gone, puts on another, not being able to match the kind that are on vest. The suit is delivered that night. Fred wears the suit. The detective follows Fred into a saloon where he stands at the bar drinking. The detective notices the buttons and compares them with the one he picked up in the alley. Fred makes an excuse and leaves. The detective returns to Fred's room and searches, but cannot find the money. Later he arrives at the cafe. Fred sees him and becomes uneasy. That night he tells his girl and asks her advice. They plan to lay low for awhile. Detective plans to land him through his sweetheart and he lays a trap. Fred meets Mary, a pretty young detective. They are seen together several times. Fred's sweetheart is notified of the new girl. She shows jealousy, but Fred reassures her. The final stroke is prepared. Mary, with two suit cases, calls Fred up and asks him to meet her as she is leaving town. They stop in back room of cafe to get a bite to eat and drink. The detective notifies Fred's sweetheart. She will not believe him—he takes her to the place. She sees two suit cases. He tells her Mary and Fred are going to flee. He shows who he is. As Mary and Fred are leaving, Fred carrying the cases, she believes him and in a fit of jealousy confesses. Fred is trapped. They take him to his room and he shows where the money is secreted.

The carbons of an alternating-current arc burn at about the same rate while in a direct-current arc one burns much slower. The direct-current arc therefore requires less carbons than the alternating current—one-fourth to one-third less. The direct-current arc also uses less current than the alternating current to produce the same amount of light.

A direct-current arc, therefore, costs less for power and for carbons, while giving the same amount of light. If your service is only alternating current a

THE NEW ADVENTURES OF J. RUFUS WALLINGFORD (Episode No. 12, "Buying a Bank With Bunk"—Two Parts—Dec. 20).—

Wallingford's latest adventures, "Buying a Bank With Bunk," isn't pulled off in Jinkinsville because of anything particularly inviting about the town, but because it harbors Benjamin F. Quirker, president of the Jinkinsville Bank, and a member of the clique who have stolen the fortunes of Violet and Fanny Warden.

Quirker has a "past" and maintains a present—with the ladies. When Wallingford learns this he posts a small girl to call Quirker "papa," for which she shall receive a nickel—from Quirker. The coin forthcoming, as Wallingford anticipated, he plans to use the man's past as his weapon. The father is curious to know why Quirker gives his child nickels for calling him papa; his call at the banker's home starts the byena-like Mrs. Quirker on the warpath. Wallingford also learns that Quirker is carrying on an affair with Marie Supont of Richfield. He sends Quirker an anonymous letter telling that all has been discovered and that he must flee. At the opportune time he goes to the bank, and, as a stall, offers to sell some stock to Quirker; instead, he buys Quirker's share in the bank for $51,000, giving a worthless check on a New York bank. From the bank directors he borrows a like amount, giving his stock as collateral. Telling Mrs. Quirker to meet him at Hotel St. Vitus in New York, he hurries to the metropolis to make the deposit. At the bank Quirker is shown a telegram from Wallingford stopping payment on the check on the ground of fraudulent transaction. Mrs. Quirker is steered to the bank by the Wallingford party, thus cutting short Quirker's argument with the teller. He hurriedly departs in a taxi, minus $51,000.

PECULIAR PATIENTS' PRANKS (Lonesome Luke Comedy"—Phunphilms—Dec. 22).

Luke and his partner have a head-swatting contest, in which Luke comes out second best. Chasing across a busy highway, the pal gets in the way of a sweet young lady's car and gets hit. He is taken in the car to the nearest hospital, all the way to which institution his head rests on the young lady's lap. Luke, noting the fortunate accident, endeavors to do likewise—one car misses him—the next one hits him and he is also rushed to the hospital—in an amhulance. He is allotted a bed in the ward outside his pal's private room. Peeved, he makes things miserable for the "dead ones." The revengeful doctors operate on him for something that doesn't ail him. After that he becomes a demon trickster and equips himself with a quart of chloroform, and when the young lady calls to see his pal he opens the portals

THE KING'S GAME (Gold Rooster—Five Parts—Dec. 24).

The story tells of the adventures of an unusual young duke, whose father, the old Grand Duke of Kiev, coveted the wife of Count Dardinilis, his colonel of Huzzars; of the old Grand Duke's plot to get her for himself; of her accidental death at the hands of his Cossacks, and of the colonel's escape with his little daughter to America.

The young Grand Duke, now an orphan, comes to America to complete his education. The Nihilists send Pereiley to kill him, but he is apprehended by the Secret Service, who know the details of the plot. They dress the man in the Grand Duke's clothes and chain him to a carriage, and thus he rides as the nobleman. The Grand Duke, closely resembling Pereiley, comes upon their rendezvous and goaded on by the Nihilists, throws a box of bonbons at his double, unwillingly riding in the carriage. To make sure of their capture at the opportune time, the Grand Duke goes with them into the country.

Pereiley escapes from the carriage, and his presence at the rendezvous makes it very necessary that the Grand Duke explain. He escapes, unarmed, with the aid of Dardinilis' daughter. When they are captured by the police the very lenient young Duke calls it a draw and lets it go. Count Dardinilis becomes colonel of the Black Huzzars and his daughter becomes the Duchess of Kiev.

BOARD-BILL DODGERS (Starlight—Dec. 25).

Thus far the world has not come to Heinie and Louie's way of thinking—thus far the world has not given them a living. Coming to a town where the dominant Heinie feels that Louie's conspicuous face is too familiar to the inhabitants, he adopts a well-known disguise for the "sometimes' humble Louie. Heinie having tonsorial ability of no mean note, very rapidly relieves the very willing Louie of his troublesome goatee; and, with shears, brush and a curry-comb, he trims his golden locks. They borrow some clothes of vintage unknown, and hire sleeping quarters—payment promised. Much disturbed by the landlady's son, they seek to revenge themselves by storing the contents of their room in a trunk of unfathomable depth.

Then proceeding to call in an express man, they are stopped by the irate landlady, who expresses a wish—that they expressly "fork over." Failing, they are ordered to the kitchen to "work it out." It would have been better to have ejected them immediately, for the damage they wrought to the well-kept kitchen was irreparable. The star boader, a tragedian, suffers much at the hands of the two hoodlums. The other boarders, enraged, put the trouble-makers into the street, where they are set upon by a minion of the law—and jailed—much to their satisfaction, because of the things to eat.

THE RED CIRCLE ("Pity the Poor"—Episode No. 2, Balboa—Two Parts—Dec. 25).

The second chapter of Pathe's "The Red Circle" takes up deeper into the mystery of the criminal brand which has the police department of a large city at its wits' end. "The Red Circle" is a birthmark peculiar to one member in each generation of the notorious Borden family. Each member on whose hand the mark has apeared became a criminal. When "Circle" Jim and his son Ted die "Max Lamar, crime specialist," thinks his anxiety with regard to the Red Circle is over. He is disillusioned abruptly, however, by recognizing, on the well-groomed hand of a woman in a swiftly moving automobile the unmistakeable brand of the Red Circle. Lamar's only clue is the automobile number.

Grant, a loan shark, reports the theft of a batch of notes and his automobile. As he speaks, the auto is seen passing—the same one that Lamar is interested in. Overtaking the car, which has come to a stop, they find the woman gone. In the meantime the woman, June Travis, interested in social reforms and well known to Lamar, has turned her coat inside out and walks up to remind him of his promise to call to tell her of his work.

Anonymous letters inform Grant's clientele of the destruction of the notes. Mary, June's old nurse, finds half of a burned note and confronts her with it. The livid Red Circle comes to view on the back of June's hand, and is recognized by the faithful Mary, who shows a strange fear at its appearance. The reason for this fear is shown in the next chapter, called "Twenty Years Ago."

THE SALAMANDER—The cast: Dore Baxter, The Salamander (Ruth Findlay); Beatrice Snyder (Iva Shepard); Albert Sassoon, The Wolf (J. F. Sainpolis); Garry Lindaberry, The Gentleman (J. F. Glendon); Philip Massingale (Edgar J. L. Davenport); Harrigan Blood (J. Albert Hall); Samuel Ludlow (H. H. Pattee); Count De Joncy (Dan Baker); Ida Summers (Mabel Trinnear); Winona (Beatrice James); Miss Pim (Rita Allen); Baby Betty (Violet Davis).

Dore Baxter is a woodland nymph, lover of nature, yet feeling the call and the urge of the city. Her grandmother's property, to which Dore is heir, holds forth promise of future wealth. One day Dore asks about her parents and the grandmother tells how they were duped by Sassoon, "The Wolf." During this very conversation grandmother attempts to bring forth the deed to her property and, lo! it is gone. The shock brings about the old lady's death.

Shortly afterwards Dore is evicted by Sassoon, who claims to have bought the land from the grandmother. Dore determines to visit the city and—find Sassoon. She falls in with a group of traveling players, who take pity on her and carry her with them under their protection. The angel of the company, one Garry Lindaberry, wealthy and handsome, falls in love with this simple country maid. Later Sassoon invites the company, including Dore, to an evening revel. Dore starts at the mention of the name. So, too, does the leading lady, who, in reality, is Sassoon's wife.

Now begins Dore's game with Sassoon, in which she tempts him on, only to foil him—in which she enters the flames without being burned. Finally, Sassoon steps into the clutches of his fellow conspirators, which leads on to a rapid climax that restores her property to Dore and Dore to Garry Lindaberry.

THE PENITENTES (Fine Arts—Dec. 26).—The cast: Manuel (Orrin Johnson); Dolores (Seena Owen); Colonel Juan Raca (Paul Gilmore; Senorita Carmelita (Irene Hunt); Senora (Josephine Crowell); Father Rossi (F. A. Turner); Father David (Charles Clary); The Chief Brother (A. D. Sears); Indian Chief (Dark Cloud).

The scene is laid in New Mexico two centuries ago, when a fanatical religious society known as the Penitentes flourished, although vivorously opposed by the Catholic Church.

At the opening of the play there is a scene where sheep are grazing peacefully and the land seems to be one of quietude and plenty. The Penitentes are holding their annual ceremonial, when they discover and punish an Indian who is spying on them. He tells the tribe, who massacre a settlement, but Father Rossi, a Catholic priest, is spared, and an old peon servant escapes with the boy, Manuel. The priest does not know of the boy's escape and makes his way to the northern part of the state. The Penitentes take possession of the property belonging to the massacred inhabitants, including that which should have been turned over to Manuel.

Years later Senor Martin, who lives with his daughter Carmelita in a large settlement near the Penitentes, gives a fiesta. His guest, Colonel Juan Banca, who has been courting Carmelita, sees a beautiful girl belonging to the fanatics named Dolores (Seena Owen) and becomes infatuated with her. Carmelita manages to get acquainted with Dolores and her widowed mother in order to keep the young girl away from the soldier.

Father David, who is the religious mentor of Senor Martin's vast ranch colony, becomes interested in the spiritual appearing Manuel (Orrin Johnson), who seems out of place among the rude and cruel Penitentes. His inquiries about Manuel, who has become a stalwart youth, arouse the suspicions of the avaricious leader of the Penitentes. As a result this evil leader skillfully incites his followers in a plot to get rid of Manuel. They plan that

Gentlemen:

Having used two Simplex projecting machines for one year in this theatre, wish to add a few lines of testimony to the pleasure I have in using them and to tell you of the excellent satisfaction they are giving us. The character of this theatre makes it such that a high standard must be maintained at all times.

We have not expended one cent on repairs during the year, and as I have used all makes of machines the past fifteen years can say this of no other make. Can this record be broken by any other make?

We attribute our tremendous success and high standard to the projection for which the Simplex Machines are wholly responsible and cannot help but recommend them to all exhibitors who desire to obtain the highest projection results at the lowest cost.

Very truly yours,

at their celebration of Good Friday Manuel shall be the victim of crucifixion. To prevent interference with their plans they kidnap Colonel Banca. But Father David sends for the troops.

Meanwhile Dolores has been using all her arts, aided by the suggestion of Carmelita, to win Manuel away from the Penitentes. But the youth is fired by zeal, being misled by the Penitentes, and is determined to go through with the ordeal. He is being stretched on the cross preparatory to being nailed when the soldiers arrive and stop the cruel procedure. Father Rossi then finds out the identity of Manuel, and the story ends with the marriage of Manuel and Dolores by the priest.

THE EDGE OF THE ABYSS (Kay-Bee—Dec. 26)—The cast: Alma Clayton (Mary Boland); Neil Webster (Robert McKim); Wayne Burrous (Frank Mills); Jim Sims (Willard Mack).

Alma Clayton is a butterfly type of girl. She is being wooed by a gilded youth, Neil Webster, whom she likes to a degree. At a public banquet Alma becomes acquainted with Wayne Burrous, a brilliant criminal lawyer, and, won by the man's eloquence, she casts Neil aside and eventually marries Wayne. Her husband's strict attention to business piques her, and it results in Wayne leaving her use of their large mansion while he takes up his residence in the club. Alma, while out shopping with a friend, meets Neil, who tells her that his love for her is gone. At home she calls him by telephone. He arrives at Alma's home, and informs her that what he said about his love for her is not true, and that he is actuated by the desire of revenging himself on Wayne for winning her away from him. She is undetermined whether to elope with him or not.

Meanwhile Jim Sims, a burglar, breaks into Wayne's room. After taking a number of gold and silver pieces his eye fixes on a portrait of Wayne. He recognizes it as representing the lawyer who had once saved him from jail, although Sims was penniless. He carefully replaces the articles from his sack to the dresser and is about to leave empty handed on account of respect for his benefactor when he hears the excited conversation of Alma and Neil. He steals down the sairs and suddenly confronts them just as Alma is about to yield and go away with Neil. At the point of his gun he makes Neil sit quietly, while Alma is compelled to tie him with a rope to his chair. Then Sims makes the woman go upstairs to Wayne's room, where he shows her the picture of her husband and tells her of his saving Sims from jail. The burglar insists that such a man could not be the brute that she thinks him.

He is so forceful in the presentation of the claims of Wayne and of the penalty that she would have to pay if she should break the laws of society that the woman is won over. Then Neil manages to drag himself, still securely bound to the chair, over to a telephone. He gets the receiver off the hook with his teeth and calls the police. On their arrival Neil is released. Alma hides the burglar and tells the officers that the burglar escaped through a window. When they are gone she rejects Neil. Neil goes out the back door, is mistaken for the burglar and is badly beaten up by an officer. Alma gives the burglar the picture of her husband as a souvenir of gratitude for his aid in setting her right. She then calls up her husband, and on his return there is a happy reconciliation.

THE SUBMARINE PIRATES (Keystone—Two Parts—Dec. 26).

A synopsis of this picture, which was originally scheduled for release during the week of Dec. 19, was published on page 2088 of the issue dated Dec. 11. The subject is now slated for release during the week of Dec. 26.

THE HUNT (Keystone—Two Parts—Dec. 26).—The cast: Ford Sterling, Polly Moran, May Emory, Bob Vernon, Fritz Schade, Guy Woodward, Frank Opperman.

A novel vein of humor mixed with society life above and below stairs is opened in the new Triangle-Keystone, "The Hunt." First of all comes the breakfast with a large number of gentlemen and ladies arrayed in handsome clothes of various colors but all suitable for the proposed fox hunt. They seat themselves at a long table, when May Emory, the daughter of the host appears. Bert Clark and Fritz Schade are lavish in their attentions and the lively girl does not know which to choose. She finally leaves it to the decision of chance, saying that the man who caught the fox would catch her.

Downstairs among the colored servants, Guy Woodward, arrayed in the white cap and white clothes of his profession as chef, seems to be winning the affections of Polly Moran, a comely maid. Then along comes Ford Sterling, who is Clarke's groom, and his livery, with its smart cut and brass buttons, catches the eye of Polly. The elegant band of hunters on fine mounts are off, the bounds in fully cry. They dash down a country road with the sly fox running strong. He soon leads them off the beaten road across hills and dales and water bazards.

Though Fritz gets the fox and claims the girl, he loses out on account of cowardice, when the groom shoots up the house. Bert marries the girl and they are togged up in all the regalia that a fashionable wedding demands. Quite in contrast is the imitation of grandeur by the colored pair, Polly and Ford. The groom is a little careless and steps on the maid's train. She makes a ludicrous picture as she runs around with abbreviated skirts. Her anger when she discovers her plight is set forth vigorously.

WHAT WILL PEOPLE SAY? (Five Parts—Popular Plays and Players—Jan. 3).—The cast: Persis Cabot (Mme. Petrova); Willie Enslee (Fraunie Fraunholz); Harvey Forbes (Fritz de Lint); Senator Tate (Chas. Dungan); James Cabot (John Dudley); Mrs. Neff (Zadee Burbank); Alice Neff (Marilyn Reid); Murray Ten Eycke (Wm. Morse); Michette (Elenore Sutter); Zoe Potter (Jean Thomas).

Persis Cabot, daughter of a multi-millionaire, meets a young officer, Harvey Forbes, coming from the Philippines and they fall in love. Owing to her father's financial reverses, it is impossible for her to marry Harvey Forbes. She contracts a marriage with Willie Enslee, whose immense fortune makes it possible for her to reinstate her father and give her all the luxuries she has been used to. The marriage is a failure. Persis meets Forbes at a reception given by the Ambassador and they both confess their love to each other.

Persis discovers a liasion of her husband with a former mistress and decides that she has a right to take the love which Forbes offers her. On the first occasion of their being alone together, Willie Enslee discovers them and accuses Persis of infidelity. Forbes commands her to choose between them. Persis refuses, and Forbes leaves her in desperation. Left alone together, Willie, maddened by jealousy, stabs his wife. A newspaper reporter visits the house and gains information which leads him to believe that Forbes is implicated in the attempted murder. He also visits Forbes and informs him of the fact that Persis has been stabbed by her husband. Forbes hurries back to the Enslee home and tells Persis that he will take her with him, even though she is not willing to go, as they are mated to each other. After the necessary divorce proceedings have been obtained, Persis marries Harvey Forbes.

THE RACK (Brady—Dec. 27).—The cast: Blanche Gordon (Alice Brady); Tom Gordon, her husband (Milton Sills); Louise Freeman (June Elvidge); Jack Freeman, her husband (Chester Barnett); Effie McKenzie (Doris Kenyon).

Blanche Gordon lives unhappily with her husband. There is jealousy on both sides, and of this fact Jack Freeman, a devil-may-care man about town, tkes advantge. Jack has quarreled with his own wife, Louise, on account of his attentions to other women. It was he who sowed discord between Donald McKenzie and his wife, Effie. This unhappy girl committed suicide and Donald McKenzie went abroad and became inebriate in his trouble. When he returned to New York he swore to be avenged on Freeman.

Freeman, by a trick, lured Blanche Gordon to a disreputable roadhouse. There she was discovered by her husband, Tom Gordon, in a compromising position with Freeman. There was a quarrel between the two men and Jack Freeman was shot. Blanche Gordon was arrested for the murder, and in court she swore that she killed Freeman in defense of her honor. It looked as though the woman would be condemned for the murder, until Donald McKenzie came forward to depose that it was he who had killed Jack Freeman by having robbed him, McKenzie, of his wife Effie.

After the trial Blanche Gordon and Tom Gordon, her husband, were reconciled and they neither of them forgot her terrible torture on "The Rack" on the trial for murder which she did not commit.

WHAT HAPPENED TO FATHER (Vitagraph—Five Parts—Dec. 27). The cast: Father (Frank Daniels); Mother (Bernice Berner); Frederick and Tommy (Adele Kelly and Anna Laughlin); Dawson Hale (Billy Quirk); Mortimer, bridegroom (Frank Kingsley); Bayne (William Sloan); Butler (John Hollis) Uncle, William Sellery).

Worried almost to death over the increasing bills pouring in, father writes a comic opera, with the idea of producing it and becoming rich. Carlton Bayne, a young society man, offers to back it if father will use his influence with Tommy, his youngest daughter, whom Bayne wants to marry. Tommy is in love with Dawson Hale, a young hospital interne, but to help poor father out, she agrees to marry him later. Fredericka, his older daughter, is to marry Mortimer and on the day of the wedding father receives a hurry-call from Georgetown, where his play is to be given its initial presentation, and dashes off in Fredericka's car, which he doesn't know how to run. He arrives at the theater, puts a stop to Bayne's attempt to ring in his own leading lady on him, knocks the fellow down and escapes in the auto, hotly pursued by the police.

A hair-raising chase follows, the car smashes into a tree and father is pulled down out of the branches and jailed. Dawson learns from Bayne what has happened and Tommy jumps to the conclusion from his vague talk that father is in the hospital seriously hurt as the result of an auto accident. The young interne is in a pretty fix, as the whole family insist on going to the hospital to see "poor Dad." Meanwhile, father after many laughable escapades, has escaped from jail and Dawson succeeds in smuggling him into the hospital ward. Dawson confesses all, they put father to bed, call to the others, and all ends up in a joyful reunion of happiness and love.

PARAMOUNT.

THE REFORM CANDIDATE—(Pallas; Five Parts; Dec. 16).—Art Hoke, the Boss (Maclyn Arbuckle); Richard Burton (Forrest Stanley); Mary Grandell (Myrtle Stedman); Frank Grandell (Malcolm Blevins); "Looney" Jim (Charles Ruggles); May Hoke (Mary Ruby); The Campaign Manager (Howard Davies).

The mayoralty campaign is turning against Frank Grandell, who heads the "reform" ticket which is trying to smash "Boss" Hoke's well-oiled political machine. In desperation the self-seeking reformer sends his lieutenants to pry into Hoke's private life in hope of unearthing some damaging scandal. Their curiosity aroused by the mysterious parentage of May Hoke, the adopted daughter of the politician, they corner "Looney" Jim, a half-witted fellow, whose devotion the boss has won through kindness, but though they find Jim knows something he dies before they can extort the secret. Failing in this, Grandell then offers "Boss" Hoke $15,000 outright for his support, and the wily boss, determined to crush his enemy, accepts the money and then turns around and defies the "reformer" to enforce the bargain.

Meanwhile, Grandell's wife, a truly lovely character, whom Hoke has for years worshipped from afar, comes to the house to prevent her husband's nefarious intrigue, and while there comes across an old newspaper of fifteen years back, together with a faded baby jacket, which she instantly recognizes as that of her long-lost baby girl, a description of whose loss is detailed in the old paper. It finally develops that her baby was stolen by "Looney" Jim and left on "Boss" Hoke's doorstep, the half-witted fellow having once heard the bachelor boss express a wish for a child. The approaching wedding of May Hoke, the adopted foundling, who is in reality the Grandells' child, with young Benton, the mayoralty candidate opposing her father, finally paves the way for the later's retirement from the arena. Realizing the significance of fate's strange interweaving of their lives, all animosity is finally laid aside, and "Boss" Hoke and the Grandells meet in harmony through their mutual interest in May.

THE IMMIGRANT—Lasky; Five Parts; Dec. 20).—The cast: Masha, the immigrant (Valeska Suratt); J. J. Walton (Theodore Roberts); David Harding (Thomas Meighan); Olga, Masha's sister (Jane Wolf); Munsing, Hardings' secretary (Raymond Hatton); Walton's Partner (Ernest Joy); Walton's Housekeeper (Gertrude Kellar).

Masha, a young Russian immigrant, on her way to this country, is insulted by one of the steamship officers and protected by David Harding, a young American contractor and civil engineer, just returning from Europe. He secures for her a berth in the second cabin, paying the difference in fare out of his own pocket. J. J. Walton, a wealthy political boss and contractor, traveling first class, is captivated by Masha's beauty.

Masha is met at the dock in New York by her sister, Olga, and her drunken brother-in-law, John. Having given Harding their address, so he may call and be repaid for the money he has advanced to Masha, Walton learns the address, and secures from the brother-in-law permission to have Masha enter his house as a maid. The first night of her employment in Walton's household he attacks her, and when she flees to her sister pursues her and, by a promise of marriage and education, induces her to return. Harding has opened his offices in the same building with Walton's and bids against Walton for a contract for a big government dam in Arizona. Harding is backed by the reformers and Walton and his political ring find bribes and chances for graft will not tempt the young man and plan to blow up the dam when it nears completion.

Walton takes Masha with him to Arizon to superintend the dam's destruction. Masha and Harding have met each other several times and he has always thought her to be the wife of his adversary. By means of threats, Walton has Masha entice Harding away from the dam the night of the explosion. Masha, free from Walton's threats, tells Harling of the contemplated explosion and sends him back to the dam, but too late. The explosion has occurred and the waters are plunging down onto the little village. Masha, fearing for the young man's life, follows him, while Walton in the moment of his triumph, fails to realize that the flood is undermining the house which he occupies and is killed when it collapses. Masha finds Harding unconscious on top of the floating house and there tells him for the first time that she has never been Walton's wife. Harding, still in love with the girl, asks her to marry him.

NEW ORIGINAL SOUVENIR

Patent Applied For

Read full story of the miniature camera in News of Los Angeles this week, then send for one or more. BE THE FIRST IN YOUR CITY! It is worth twice the price for the laugh you will get at people who think it takes a real picture. Fits any car.

It is no flimsy doll or tin toy.

But a solid ornament of hard wood and steel.

Get yours NOW.

MR. EXHIBITOR:

Can you afford to have this slide flashed on your screen continuously?

Help your operator overcome this by installing a 1916 MODEL MOTIOGRAPH. It is the machine that will fit your needs.

In Performance—Low Maintenance Cost and Service it has no equal.

Ask your dealer about the 1916 Model MOTIOGRAPH. If he has none on his floor to show you, write us.

Penny Chocolate Slot Machine

AN IMMENSE SUCCESS FROM THE START

EXHIBITORS

A NEW SOURCE OF INCOME

The profits from the box office can be increased by the profits from the box back of each seat. Jelenk machines can pay for themselves in five weeks. After that it's plain sailing. Profits every day.

Give your patrons a palate-tickling piece of chocolate for one cent. That's a brand new idea: a penny-in-the-slot machine for theatres. And it's working out fine. Exhibitors are increasing their income daily. All machines sold through equipment dealers. Dealers write for terms now.

The Reason for a Hit

Often a film in one house is a hit and in another similar house is a failure. There is only one explanation—the lens equipment.

Bausch and Lomb Projection Lenses give the clear, brilliant pictures that spell success. They are the regular equipment on both Edison and Nicholas Power Machines, and the best professional operators everywhere give them decided preference.

Equip your machines with the Bausch & Lomb objectives and condensers and assure yourself of the profit that follows. They are procurable through any film exchange.

FACTS vs. FANCIES

You can't buy a gold dollar for a cent—No more than you can buy a pound of pure gold, twelve ounces to the pound, for less than $240.00.

But you can buy so-called gold bronze or gold paint for one dollar per pound of sixteen ounces.

Now, in buying a screen be governed by facts.

MIRROROID

contains no gold, silver or copper, genuine or otherwise—No more than it contains flesh—no more than we use window shade cloth.

Over 9,000 Mirroroid users are proof positive that it is the world's best projection surface.

Mirroroid is made of canvas—machine metalized. It is guaranteed for five years against cracking, peeling, oxidizing, turning color, tarnishing or losing its brilliancy and lustre. Guarantee as good as a U. S. gold bond. It eliminates all hazy out-of-focus effect, eye strain, glare and fade-away. Either on a close up or angle view.

START THE NEW YEAR RIGHT

Install a Mirroroid (patented June 8th and Feb. 15, 1915) and get perfect results. Increase your bank account by an increased patronage. Why hesitate? Let us show you—that it is better to be sure than sorry. Get our large free samples—test any way you desire, against any screen on earth, try to tear it, crack or make it peel—abuse it to your heart's content.

KNOWLEDGE BRINGS SUCCESS

Messrs. Exhibitor, Exchangeman, Operator, and Film Men Everywhere:—The moving picture business is one of the youngest but one of the leading industries of the world to-day. We may well be proud to be connected with it. Are you keeping up? Do you know all about it? It will yield larger returns for an equal amount of work to the men who know. Each weekly issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD contains more up-to-date information than you can get from all other sources. Subscribe now if not already on our mailing list. You will get your paper hours earlier than from the newsstand and it costs less.

"THE BURIED TREASURE OF COBRE"

By RICHARD HARDING DAVIS

A Selig multiple reel feature-drama of Diplomacy, Love and Buried Treasure, with HARRY MESTAYER in the leading role. Released January 3 Through General Film Service.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE

The World's Greatest News Film—A REEL Newspaper, to be Released Every Monday and Thursday—Beginning Monday, January 3.

"SPOOKS"—A Rural Comedy Scream!

Another Selig Comedy in The Chronicles of Bloom Center Dealing With the Adventures of Spiritualists Who Visit the Village. Released January 8.

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO., CHICAGO

Merry Christmas TO YOU

Every day is MERRY and JOYFUL to the exhibitor who owns a MINUSA GOLD FIBRE SCREEN. He REJOICES three hundred and sixty-five days a year over his Box Office receipts and the fifty per cent. saving in his light bill.

There isn't anything that will draw crowds DAILY like a "Minusa" screen. They show the picture in EXACTLY the same light it was taken.

When the Film Producer makes a picture the lighting is PERFECT and the "Minusa" reproduces this perfect photography. If your pictures are DARK AND CLOUDY, the screen is at FAULT, not the film.

ABOVE ALL "Minusa" screens DO NOT TIRE THE EYES!

If YOU want to rejoice three hundred and sixty-five days a year, get a MINUSA GOLD FIBRE SCREEN. "Built By Brains." It's a simple problem in arithmetic—figure it out for yourself, then Write or Wire for Samples and Prices.

The "ORIGINAL GOLD FIBRE SCREEN"—Perfected.

THERE'S A REASON for doubt on technical points when authoritative information for the Exhibitor, Manager or Operator can't be obtained. The contents of the books herewith advertised place all necessary information and practical assistance within reach of every reader. For instance, every weekly issue of the contains an unequalled fund of information in regard to every angle of the moving picture art. Its staff is an aggregation of the best posted men in the industry who have devoted years to a study of the requirements of all our readers. Its correspondents are located in all the principal centers and its columns contain the most complete data possible. In a class by itself as a trade paper for every intelligent student of moving picture production and exhibition.

F. H. RICHARDSON the recognized expert on projection is just completing the third edition of his "THE MOTION PICTURE HANDBOOK FOR MANAGERS AND OPERATORS," consisting of many pages of fully illustrated articles on the subject of projection, that is enjoying an exceptional sale. This will be the standard textbook for managers and operators for many years.

J. H. HALLBERG well known as an authority on electricity has compiled a 278-page fully illustrated book, entitled "MOTION PICTURE ELECTRICITY," containing up-to-the-minute information on picture theatre electrical equipment. Also necessary tables and practical advice to the operator. A revision of all his Electrical Talks published some years ago in one of the trade papers. The price, $2.50.

EPES W. SARGENT is author of "TECHNIQUE OF THE PHOTOPLAY," an exhaustive treatise on the writing of the Photoplay, containing sample scripts and complete detailed instruction for experienced as well as inexperienced writers. Price, $2.00. All published by

CAILLE

Ticket Office Devices

Sell Tickets Ten Times Faster Than Hand Methods

The above picture shows an ideal Caille equipped ticket booth. The tickets and change are delivered to the patron simultaneously and instantly. There is no line-up at the window.

Whether he buys one ticket or five, the Caille Ticket Seller delivers them to him separately but stacked together like a deck of cards.

Tickets delivered in this way cannot lay across the knives in the chopper. They must drop through instantly.

No matter what denomination of coin is tendered to the operator, our Change Maker instantly calculates the change and delivers it direct to the patron in a saucer-like receptacle.

This receptacle is so shaped that even though the patron is wearing gloves, he can instantly pick up all of his change with one swoop of the hand.

The operation of these devices is simplicity itself. All the operator has to do is press the ticket keys for tickets and the changer keys for change.

The ticket seller automatically registers every ticket sold. This register is under lock and key. The theatre owner holds the key. This positively prevents any dishonest efforts between the party in the booth and the ticket taker.

For the sale of tickets of different denominations, additional ticket seller sections are installed. Each section has its individual motor for direct or alternating current. We also build ticket sellers for foot operation.

Caille Ticket Choppers tear the tickets to shreds. They could not possibly be used again. These machines are built for hand, foot or electric operation.

In addition to the above equipments, we furnish Theatre Ledger Systems, Ticket Boxes, Tickets, etc. All are of strictly highest grade and fully guaranteed.

A beautiful catalog giving complete details will be gladly mailed on request.
